INTRODUCTORY.

IT was my intention not to connect my name with the Press ever hereafter. A very severe and painful experience had induced me to this conclusion. But the earnest solicitations of numerous friends, and the consideration of the very great necessity of such a paper, led me to consent to edit a paper for one year, without fee or reward, as my humble share in the promotion of an object, in which I am unable to invest a single penny. It is to be hoped, that after a year shall have expired, the friends of the paper, and the committee of publication will be able to find some person much more competent than myself, to discharge the duties I now reluctantly assume.

The Provincial Freeman will be devoted to the elevation of the Colored People; and in seeking to effect this object, it will advocate the cause of TEMPERANCE, in the strictest and most radical acceptation of that term. Partly, because such are the well-known sentiments of its Editor, and, partly, because there is no such thing as the elevation of any people without it. For like reasons, the Freeman must be a straightforward, outspoken ANTI-SLAVERY PAPER. Its voice shall ever be heard in denunciation of the enactments or inhuman doings, and of the systems and sentiments akin to it, and tending towards it. The refugees from the southern plantations shall be made welcome and pointed to means and measures for such improvement and development, as shall make them independent, self-sustaining laborers, justifying the impartial freedom they here enjoy, and contributing by their energy and industry, to the weal of their adopted country. Thus a reflex influence upon the slavery of the neighboring republic will be exerted, which can neither be gainsayed nor resisted.

The religious influence of this Journal shall be free from sectarianism. The broad, Catholic principle of the Protestant Faith, shall here find an advocacy, for there is no true moral and social elevation apart from the Religion of Jesus. It is not to be concealed, however, that the Editor is a Congregationalist, and that as fully and as freely as he shall deem best, he will give, among other religious information, intelligence in respect to the public proceedings, the progress and the prospects of his own denomination.

The news of the day, the state of the markets, foreign and domestic intelligence, shall each have its place in the columns of the Freeman.

As to politics, the Freeman is the organ of no party. But, as a free, untrammeled journal, it will, from time to time, take note of what is done in Parliament, and elsewhere, and make free comments thereon, wielding what of influence it may have, on the side of the great principles of British Progress, as the Editor shall understand them.

The present number is issued from Windsor, where the determination to start such a paper originated. The place of future publication will either be London or Toronto, as the Committee shall decide. The regular weekly issues will commence just so soon as the number of cash subscribers shall justify it. May it not be hoped, that the need of a family newspaper, uncommitted to any clique, sect or party—that in a population as large as ours in Canada—and from among so many real, tried earnest friends, as we have over the length and breadth of the land, that such a Journal as this will find a living support?

SAMUEL R. WARD.

Both Sides.

A letter was written, some time since, by Mr. Ward, to a friend in Philadelphia, touching the Refugees' Home Society. That letter found its way into the Pennsylvania Freeman, and was copied in other papers in the United States. Rev. C. C. Foote, agent of the society, replied, in a tone somewhat peculiar, though characteristic, and the Editor of the Freeman has commented upon Mr. F.'s letter, and upon the merits of the controversy, as betwixt Messrs. Foote and Ward. We publish the whole that our readers may judge of the controversy, so far as it has gone. More may be said on the whole matter hereafter.

LETTER FROM S. R. WARD.

Toronto, Dec. 13th.

MY DEAR FRIEND,—You speak of Rev. C. C. Foote, the Bibbs and the Refugees' Home Society. You ask me to write about them such facts as influenced my mind in respect to those persons and their organization. Allow me to say that distinct from their actions in public matters, I have nothing to say against them. My opposition to the Refugees' Home Society, of course is opposition to the official acts of Messrs. Foote and Bibb. But against them personally, though differing much from them on many points, I have nothing to say in this letter.

1. There is no need of any other land-buying or land-selling organizations in Canada, for fugitives or others, than those provided by our laws. In the very neighborhood of Mr. Bibb's residence, in every township of the county of Essex, wherein he resides, the Government has lands quite as good as (if not better than) that owned by the Refugees' Home Society, for sale at a lower price than the Refugees' Home Society will sell, and the purchaser can obtain them with equal (if not greater) facility, and hold them by a much better tenure. P. McMullin, Esq., M. D., is the land-agent of the Government for the county of Essex. He lives within a half-hour's ride of Mr. Bibb's office door. I have examined maps of lands for sale, in his office. I have travelled over those lands. There are none better in North America. They are for sale at $2, some of them, and others at $1 60 per acre. One hundred acres would, therefore, cost $160 or $200 as the case might be. One-tenth is to be paid down, and the remainder in nine equal annual instalments, with interest on sums unpaid. Hence you see that with $16 a fugitive can obtain possession of one hundred acres of land, and in ten years, by paying $16 per annum, and the interest, at six per cent., and erecting a small house, clearing five acres a year, &c., he has the entire possession, by patent, of the freehold.

The Refugees' Home Society bought at two dollar and a half, they therefore sell at that price, though without interest. [Constitution, Art. 5.] But they, the Refugees, have but 25 acres, a very limited farm, and 20 acres of that will cost them $50, and, when paid for, they cannot transfer it in five years! Art. 8. In the former case the man has ample land for his family, to be his, and theirs, as soon as paid for; in the latter, he is confined to 25 acres, which the R. H. S. may take from him at will, if he dares to transfer it. Art. 9.

It may be said, however, that five acres are given on certain conditions to Fugitives by the R. H. S. This does not alter my proposition. For the Government, upon conditions quite as favorable, give to actual settlers, without distinction of color, 50-acre grants, in a fine agricultural district known as a part of Huron Tract, near Lake Huron. The Refugees' Home Society give five acres, the Government give fifty. I have before me a letter from the Government agent, G. Jackson, Esq., to this effect. Besides, if you examine the August and September Numbers of the Voice, you will see that the Government offer lands for sale to actual settlers, at from 3s. to 7s. 6d. the acre, i. e. from 60c. to $1 50 per acre. The land is all in Upper Canada. In Lower Canada it goes down to 20c. the acre.

You may not agree with me, but my mind is, that fugitives who choose to be farmers, can find abundant facilities for acquisition of land in Canada, without the aid of the Society in question.

2. I object to the Refugees' Home Society because it misrepresents, through its agent, the condition of the blacks in Canada.

To go into no specifications, the fact that it sends an agent to the United States to beg money to buy lands for them, is of itself a representation that they cannot acquire such money for themselves. While the truth is, that so soon as fugitives come here, they can get work at fair wages, and so can lay by enough to buy land for themselves, NEEDING AID ONLY, allow me to repeat, NEEDING AID ONLY upon their immediate arrival, until they can get work, which in no instance that I know of is longer than three days! To represent such a people as having to have Rev. C. C. Foote beg money to buy lands for them, is sheer falsity, in my humble opinion. And I beg leave to add, that a free friendly conversation with the Fugitives, in their settlements, and at public meetings, during the past summer, not only confirms me in this opinion, but assures me that it is theirs also. I repeat, that immediately on their arrival, they are destitute, and most grateful are we for any aid we may have from the U. S. or elsewhere, in supplying their immediate wants. But we do not want boxes and barrels of old clothes, which cost twice as much for transportation as they are worth, nor do we need a set of land-jobbers to beg money to buy lands for them.

3. I object to the R. H. S. because of its injustice and tyranny, AND LAND JOBBING, under the sacred name of benevolence towards negroes.

It first sends forth an agent (who is said to receive twenty per cent of what he begs), to beg for the poor refugee blacks money to buy land without the power of transferring it, "and if you transfer it, land and money both belong to us, and you shall be robbed of both." The Refugees' Society stands alone on this "Bad pre-eminence.

At any rate, no other set of land-jobbers than the Refugees' Home society, beg for their capital in the name of the poor whom they thus victimize.

I have nothing to say about the honesty or the dishonesty of the agents and officers of the society as such. The Society, according to its own printed Constitution, is a fair subject for criticism. If not, why is it published to the world? But I do say, that a society of such professions, with such constitutional features, ought not to be expected to act any better than, through its constitution, it professes to act, nor ought the public or the society to expect agents of such a concern to be any better than the Society employing them.

I have thus, as briefly as possible, given you my objections to the Refugees' Home Society, and the reasons for them. I will only trouble you with an additional fact or two.

You see from the published proceedings that my name is on a committee of three who discussed the Constitution, at Detroit, on the 25th of August last. My personal experience in that meeting was of great service to me, in enabling me to form an estimate of the Refugees' Home Society. The following facts impressed me: When it was objected to the locating of the Fugitives on very small pieces of land, as making them poor and dependent, a sort of peasantry, the answer was, that the money was begged partly from poor people in New England, who would regard 25 acres as enough for a fugitive family.

When I complained that to cause the land to revert to the society if transferred under 15 years from the time of being purchased, would be unjust, dishonest and tyrannical, reducing the fugitive to a sort of serf, it was pleaded by Rev. C. C. Foote and others, that unless the Society maintained this sort of control over them, they would suffer speculators to get their lands away from them. When I complained that this was equivalent to saying that men who had bought 20 acres of land were unable to take care of themselves—the old pro-slavery story of the negroes—they virtually admitted it. Expressing my astonishment at such doctrines, from the lips of professed abolitionists, and declaring my belief that none other than black men would be so regarded and treated, Rev. C. C. Foote replied that were they legislating for white men, they would make the rule still more stringent. When I expressed my gratification that the reversion clause had been omitted, as it had in one of the readings of the Constitution, Rev. M. Baker, of Detroit, Editor of the Wesleyan Evangelist, and a Wesleyan Minister, and a professed abolitionist, immediately moved the adoption of that abominable clause. When I entreated them to make the inability to transfer to apply only to the time the land was upaid for, the Treasurer, Mr. Hallock, opposed it, and said that [illegible] pay for his in one year, he ought not to have the power of transferring it under fourteen years from the date of his deed.

Being utterly disgusted with so monstrous a piece of unprecedented land-jobbing and tyranny, I refused, when a committee reported to that effect, to allow my name to appear before the public as one of the officers of such a concern, whereupon the name of Hon. J. R. Giddings was moved as a substitute for my own. Rev. C. C. Foote objected to Mr. G. on the ground that he had to beg the money of many persons opposed to Mr. G.'s course, and such persons would not give so readily, if that gentleman were an officer of the Society. I then saw the whole concern to be not only pro-slavery in its doctrines concerning the capacity of negroes to hold and take care of property, but false in its declarations concerning the condition of Fugitives, and mean enough to pander to the pro-slavery appetites of such men as opposed Mr. Giddings on account of his anti-slavery course in Congress. To give aid, countenance, or support to such a society,—nay, to withhold my solemn and earnest protest against it, were to be false to my abolitionism, to my love of truth and to my manhood.

And now, my dear friend, you are at liberty to use this letter, as Lord Carlisle says, "just as publicly, or just as privately as you may deem most fit."

I am, with sincere regard,
Your obedient servant,
S. R. WARD.

The Fugitives in Canada.

MR. EDITOR,—The article in your paper of the 6th instant, from Samuel R. Ward, is still fresh in your memory. I have carefully read the article, and re-read it, without anger and without surprise, but not without grief. The friends of the colored people have not yet learned to agree; whether they ever will is problematical. Nor have they learned to avoid the use of unlovely epithets, and the impugning of motives. If Mr. Ward doubts this, let me regale him with a few precious specimens of his own preparing: "Dishonest, tyrannical, pro-slavery, abominable, mean, sheer falsity, injustice, monstrous, unpardonable, land-jobbing and tyranny." [1] This is the nomenclature selected by a Christian gentleman to designate the deeds of a Society composed of Christian gentlemen and their agents, "no better than the Society employing them." Mr. Ward is not a graduate of Billingsgate. Why then resort to such a dialect? [2] Does he need this kind of evidence to convince himself of the justness of his cause? However successful he may be in that direction, he surely will convince nobody else. The friends of the fugitives are to be moved by facts and by philosophy—not by denunciation and hard names. [3]

Mr. Ward falls back upon what President Green would call "putrid ethics," for a justification of his assault on the character of the R. H. S. and its agents, when he says, "that distinct from their actions in public matters, I have nothing to say against them; my opposition is to the official acts of Messrs. Foote and Bibb!" Pardon my ignorance, I had (I believe most abolitionists have) supposed that it was the official, the public acts, of Filmore and slavery's other anointed chiefs, that were to pass their names down to posterity as "cruel and bloody men." I had supposed that "organic sinners" had been proved to be bona fide, actual out and out sinners. And that these "official" rogues, when arraigned before discriminating justice, would be allowed neither to doff their "official" characters, nor don a "private" one. Hence I had supposed (nor have the protestations of Mr. W. changed my convictions) that in the official acts of Messrs. Foote and Bibb were "tyrannical, pro-slavery, abominable, dishonest, mean, monstrous, unprecedented land-jobbing," such, in very deed, are these men! And yet, with one of these "Messrs." Mr. Ward has for years past acted politically, publicly, socially and privately, even to night-slumbers, to my personal knowledge! "Strange bed fellows" in more senses than one. [4] The [illegible] other [illegible] matters to which Mr. Ward has called the attention of the world; one containing much in a little, the other little in much. "It first sends out an agent, who is said to receive 20 per cent of what he begs." Boston gave Daniel Webster $50,000. What a terrible history is wrapped up in that little sentence. Does Mr. W. mean to charge bribery and venality upon the agent? Why else has he given the world that piece of information? (which is misinformation, being untrue.) Why did he insert that, said I, on reading it to Mr. Ward's "Friend," "I suppose," said he, "to show that you would not advocate the claims of the Society but for that." And so every man will suppose that reads the article. But where did this snug little item of news originate? Mr. Ward assures us he got it from an old fellow whom he calls "It is said." Rev. Sam. Ringgold Ward is a wise man, but he has been led into (I fear) a guilty blunder. He ought to have known that this old fellow, "It is said," was gendered, conceived, born and bred in lies. That his ancestors, paternal and maternal, were professional slanderers and liars from time immemorial. The old rogue once said the Refugees' Society was "got up for the emolument of its agents." I have heard him utter things concerning S. R. Ward, from Ohio to Massachusetts, which, coming to his ears, on the wings of the wind, would make them tingle. The Rev. Mr. Ward will do well to absent himself from his lectures in all coming time, If he will come to me to learn how much the "begging agent" get for his toils, I can assure him that he gets less than I have helped to pay S. R. Ward for his labors. Nor did I deem him venial for saying, "I won't work if I can't be paid." [5]

About one-third of the article under consideration, is devoted to criticisms of the August meeting of the Society; in reference to which I will only say, first, that Mr. W. declared himself in favor of a Society for securing to the colored people in Canada homes and education[illegible] objects to our Constitution because we set apart but 25 acres of land to each family—he would have 50. Now I confess, having never owned a solitary foot of "free soil," I would be quite willing to go to the public on this issue. Twenty-five acres of land! My most sanguine hopes never exceeded those bounds. (My per-centage has made my expectations modest). But how different does this farm appear in the far-reaching eyes of S. R. W. Hear him: "A very limited farm, a very small piece of land, making the settlers poor and dependent (on their acres!) a sort of peasantry." (Peasantry—country people—WEBSTER.) And here is the secret: Mr. Ward's farm in this State covered hundreds of broad acres,—a good per-centage has its advantages in some cases. [6]

Third, Another cardinal objection to our Constitution was that it did not allow the recipient to alienate his homestead under five years from the last pay day. I will go to the public on this issue too. Who procured this provision? A missionary in Canada, who had been an eye-witness to frightful frauds perpetrated upon the unlettered Fugitives by the vile catiffs who would have sent S. R. Ward back to New York to be hung, and returned every fugitive to his master, if they could, long ago. They were told by those who had lived for years among the colored people in Canada, that if we did not secure the recipients from these land-sharks they would lose their homes long before they were paid for. We believed it then, and we believe it now. [7] Everywhere have I proclaimed this feature,—this "inalienable" excellence of our plan; and everywhere has it met with the cordial approval of the people. And now, because we do not throw wide open the gate, pull up the posts, down with the fence, and turn in the harpies to prey upon these people, who at best are but adult children, we are "a set of land-jobbing tyrants and robbers." Please gather up your epithets, put them in your pipe and smoke them, Mr. Ward, for the smoke thereof will be as potent as their fulmination. I have not time to enter more minutely into the criticisms upon the Detroit meeting, nor is it needful. Suffice it to say that Mr. Ward raised all these objections at that meeting, and that he was fairly met and answered, and his objections routed, horse, foot and dragoons. And when the final vote was taken, "the secretary stood alone." The meeting was attended by the old and tried friends of the colored people in eastern Michigan,—men who have devoted their substance and unpaid time to their elevation. And these men gave their united sanction to the present Constitution; the leading features of that constitution I will give when I shall have detailed the origin of the society.

Soon after the Fugitive Bill took effect, the western shores of Canada were thronged with crowds of fugitive slaves, with their families fleeing from the face of the pursuers. For so many to find homes and employment at living wages was impossible; and winter came on, and suffering commenced. Mr. Bibb issued [illegible] peal, and many went with loads of provision and clothing from Michigan, and made distribution with their own hands. But this kind of aid did not furnish them work. [8] The tide of emigration was unchecked (and it ever will be so long as slavery continues.) Where shall we find homes and education for our children? was the great question. Somebody suggested that a council of friends should be called to see what could be done. A lady in Boston said this idea "must have come from God." Mr. W. need not be envious if it came through the soul of Henry Bibb. A council was called and convened, composed of numbers, not large, but true, mostly. A society was formed and a platform constructed, but not perfected. At the August meeting was adopted our present constitution; and here are its leading articles:

1. This Society shall be known as the Refugees' Home Society.

2. The object of this Society shall be to assist the refugees from American slavery to obtain permanent homes in Canada, and to promote their moral, social, physical, and intellectual elevation.

5. There shall be appropriated to each family of actual settlers 25 acres of land, five of which they shall receive free of cost, providing they shall, within three years from the time of occupancy, clear and cultivate the same. For the remaining 20 acres they shall pay the primary cost, in nine equal annual payments, free of use, for which they shall receive deeds. This article may be varied to favor the aged, infirm, and widows, at the discretion of the Executive Committee.

7. All moneys for the sale of lands shall be devoted in equal shares to the support of schools, and to the purchase of other lands.

I regard this feature of our enterprise as of inestimable excellence. 1st. It makes the benevolence of our society self-perpetuating. 2d. It puts the fugitives in the way of providing homes for their brothers, whom Heaven shall hereafter guide to the land of freedom. 3d. It furnishes an effectual and permanent means of education to their children.

Will Mr. Ward say these people can educate their own children? He has said they have in no instance needed aid more than three days after their arrival!! A statement that stands opposed by a long array of appalling facts, to my personal knowledge. As mere specimens of educational advantages, look at these facts:—Three months ago, en route to Boston, I met in the cars a young lady who had just closed a six months' labor of teaching in Canada, and received not half enough to pay her board! A friend of mine taught a school six months in the west part of Canada West, and received less than two dollars per month. I visited the community during the time, and everywhere she was spoken of in the kindest manner; but her patrons had no money. A Missionary in a large colored settlement in Canada affirmed in a published letter since the formation of the R. H. Society, that more than half the children in that community were without schools. [9]

8. No person receiving land by gift or purchase from the society shall have power to transfer the same under 15 years from the time of purchase or gift.

That is five years after they are paid for. And are we really sinners above all sinners, for making their homesteads sure to their possessors for that length of time? Let the world judge.

9. All lands becoming vacated by the removal or extinction of families, shall revert to the executive committee.

Of our Ex. Committee three are wholesale merchants, four or five practical farmers, three editors, one lawyer, and one "gentleman." Messrs Hallock, Holms and Gomen, and the Messrs. Powers (members of the Society of Friends) have for years been active and leading reformers in Michigan. All dishonest, "tyrannical, pro-slavery, mean, land-jobbing" fellows, says Mr. Ward! O, modesty! where are the charms that sages have seen in thy face?

I would, if more space allowed, transfer to this article a long column of most cordial commendations of the R. H. Society, now lying on my table, from Dr. Willis, Rev. Mr. King, Mr. Henning, and missionaries in Canada; and from Rev. Messrs. S. J. May, and Geo. Whipple and others of the States. All great rogues, of course, for commending such a "monstrous species of land-jobbing, injustice, and tyranny."

Mr. Ward says: "I then saw the whole concern to be not only pro-slavery, but mean enough to pander to the pro-slavery appetite of such men as oppose Mr. Giddings." And what was the eye-salve that discovered to you this "meanness," Mr. Ward? O, that you propose to get aid from the enemies of Mr. Giddings, to be sure! What ineffable meanness! But let us see. S. J. May kindly gave me a "letter of instruction," in which he says, "I advise you to get all the aid you can from men who do not sympathize with the Abolitionists." While in Boston, Mr. Garrison was very kind to me (as he is to every body) but advised me to "get all you can out of the enemies of our cause." At the Penn. A. S. Office, in this city, I was advised to go to the "outsiders." What "mean" leaders the A. S. cause is blessed with! I fear Rev. Mr. Ward is a poor judge of timber, else he would have excluded such stuff from his argument. [10] Two other affirmations of Mr. Ward shall receive but a passing notice for lack of space. "There are no better lands in North America than in Canada." This would be true if it were not opposed to fact. The land in Canada is like Michigan land, pretty good. "Against him, personally, though differing much from him on many points, I have nothing to say in this letter," but of the "official" S. R. Ward, I will say he is not the best judge of land in North America. That the refugees cannot get homes from Government on so short a notice is attested by the fact that the majority are to-day homeless. That the R. H. Society affords greater facilities for securing homes than does the Government, is proved by the fact that we can get land from Government as cheap as any body, and that we give to each family five acres. Against these two facts, Mr. Ward will write and talk in vain.

Lastly, Do these people need aid at [illegible] On the shores of Canada are constantly emerging the poor, shattered broken remnants of families, men, women, and children, escaped by miraculous Providence from the black ocean depths of Slavery, feeble in knowledge, and often with a moral constitution fearfully dwarfed and perverted by a system which confounds and confuses every principle of Christian ethics; not a shilling in their pockets, nor garments that deserve the name,—strangers in a strange land.

And these are the people that "need aid at the longest but three days!!!" Was there ever a wilder statement than that? Have not injustice and meanness changed sides?

Your neighbor's house burns down and you build him another, if he is poor, and replenish his wood pile. But here is a people robbed and "killed all the day long" and all their life long, needing but three days' care! Let S. R. Ward consume his time in denouncing men possessing heads as wise and hearts as good as his own, but he will not thus convert men to vagaries so wild. For if these people do not need permanent aid, then there should be an end of charity. And God shall judge between us.

C. C. FOOTE.

P. S. Should Mr. W. respond to this letter, it will probably never reach my eye, as I expect soon to go to the Slave States on my mission. What say you to that, Rev. Samuel R. Ward? C. C. F.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.

We deem it proper to append to the above communication a few notes, references to which will be found in the text.

1. This grouping of epithets, taking each one from its connection, where it stood qualified by other words, is a rhetorical device rarely resorted to by a fair controversialist. In this instance it is unjust to Mr. Ward, as the reader will see by turning to his letter.

2. We must protest against this as unjustifiable. Let the reader turn to Mr. Ward's letter and see if he can find in it anything to warrant this charge of Billingsgate. No, no. Mr. Ward expresses himself strongly, too strongly it may be, but this effort of Mr. Foote to beget the sympathy of the reader as an abused man will not succeed except with those who may have forgotten how and what Mr. Ward wrote.

3. It strikes us that Mr. Ward's "hard names" were in moderate proportion to his "facts and philosophy,"—and that the latter were a good deal the hardest of the two; but of that let the reader judge for himself.

4. Here again we think Mr. Foote unfair. It is only by stretching that Mr. Ward's language can be made obnoxious to this sort of criticism. Mr. Ward says that "Rev. Mr. Foote and Bibb were 'tyrannical, pro-slavery, abominable, dishonest, mean, monstrous, unprecedented land-jobbing,' such, in very deed, are these men!" Now, we submit, that a candid reader would infer a belief on his part that men may be privately honest and publicly corrupt. Let the reader turn to his letter and see.

4. We don't see the need of all this. If it is not true that Mr. Foote receives twenty per cent. of his collections, he should thank Mr. Ward for giving him a chance to contradict publicly a report which, privately circulated, would do him an injury.

6. What Mr. Ward may have said at the August meeting is unknown to us; but we know that what Mr. Foote says here is no fair answer to the argument of Mr. W. as presented in his letter. The point which Mr. W. makes is this: That the facilities for obtaining land of the Government are such as to supersede the necessity of any society to aid that object. This point Mr. F. does not meet. What Mr. Ward says about the smallness of the farms is said by way of comparison with the larger and better offers made by the Government. Certainly that comparison is not only very natural in the circumstances, but one that could not well be avoided. Mr. F. does not deny the truth of the statements which that comparison involves, and therefore leaves the argument of W. as he found it.

7. Mr. Foote may be right in supposing this arrangement necessary for the protection of the fugitives. But it would seem to us that a colored man who has enterprize enough to buy a farm, cultivate it and pay for it, might be trusted to sell it at his own discretion. We don't wonder that Mr. Ward and others should object to an arrangement which seems to imply that colored people, having paid for farms, haven't smartness enough to judge for themselves when their interest would be promoted by selling them.

8. All this is aside from the question. Mr. Ward has not denied that there was great suffering in Canada immediately after the passage of the Fugitive Law. He speaks of the present state of things, and affirms that fugitives, though they may need a little help at first, can, in three days after their arrival, get work at fair wages, and help themselves to the means of procuring land of the Government. This statement Mr. Foote does not directly deny, and therefore we assume that it is substantially true.

9. Mr. Ward said not one word about the educational features of the R. H. S. He did not deny that the fugitives needed aid in establishing schools, but only affirmed that the Government afforded them all needful facilities for obtaining land. If that is true, Mr. Foote's talk about education (which is only an incidental feature of the R. H. S.) is not at all to the point. If money is not needed to buy lands, but is needed to establish schools, then certainly it ought to be raised for the latter purpose directly and exclusively.

10. Mr. Ward did not object to obtaining money of others than abolitionists, but to the policy which would exclude Mr. Giddings from the management in order to obtain it. That was the point, and Mr. Foote's quotations from Garrison and others about getting money from "outsiders" are not pertinent.

"I spent the new year in sight of the Refugees' Home. On the 3d Sunday, went on the land and talked to the Settlers. Read the Constitution of the society to several of them, and quite a company assembled at a private house, and the astonishing fact was there brought to light, that it had been read to them as it is not printed by the honest "merchants, priests, and gentlemen," of Detroit.

"How many, think you, live thereon? Just seven families, and, altogether, one dozen lots have not been taken. The settlers are the worst description of persons, with few exceptions. Three out of the seven families have Irish wives, and men and women drink whiskey, steal and idle, borrow from their neighbors, (fugitives who own land bought from others) and otherwise annoy the settlers.

"I stopped for a visit with a fugitive who had 120 acres of land paid for, lives in a house 40 by 18ft., and is building a beautiful cottage, 30 by 25. I never saw greater evidences of comfort anywhere than I did in that woods home. This is but one in a dozen, to be found within a mile or two. These men laughed at the begging, and wish the friends would open their ears. They also lament their vicinity to the Refugees' Home.

The New President on Slavery.

"Every measure tending to strengthen the fraternal feelings of all the members of our Union, has had my heartfelt approbation. To every theory of society or government, whether the offspring of feverish ambition or of morbid enthusiasm, calculated to dissolve the bonds of law and affection which unite us, I shall interpose a ready and stern resistance. I believe that involuntary servitude, as it exists in different States of this confederacy, is recognized by the Constitution. I believe that it stands like any other admitted right, and that the States where it exists are entitled to efficient remedies to enforce the constitutional provisions. I hold that the laws of 1850, commonly called the "Compromise Measures," are strictly constitutional, and to be unhesitatingly carried into effect. I believe that the constituted authorities of this republic are bound to regard the rights of the South in this respect, as they would view any other legal and constitutional right, and that the laws to enforce them should be respected and obeyed, not with a reluctance encouraged by abstract opinions as to their propriety in a different state of society, but cheerfully, and according to the decisions of the tribunal to which their exposition belongs. Such have been, and are, my convictions, and upon them I shall act. I fervently hope that the question is at rest, and that no sectional, or ambitious, or fanatical excitement may again threaten the durability of our institutions, or obscure the light of our prosperity.

"But let not the foundation of our hope rest upon man's wisdom. It will not be sufficient that sectional prejudices find no place in the public deliberations. It will not be sufficient that the rash counsels of human passions are rejected. It must be felt, that there is no national security but in the reliance upon God and His overruling providence.

The Power of Caste.

Rev. J. W. C. Pennington, the colored pastor of a colored church in this city, returned some two years since from Europe, bearing the diploma of the ancient University of Heidelberg which gave him the right to style himself D. D., and to hold up his head, though by the laws of our country a slave, among the most honored apologists of the fugitive slave law, the fear of which protracted his stay in the dominions of Queen Victoria. Recently, the Third Presbytery of New York did themselves the honor to elect Dr. Pennington their Moderator for the next six months. Scarcely, however, had he received this distinction, when he was expelled from one of our omnibuses on account of his color. There is nothing in the etymology of the word omnibus which would indicate any more distinction in the color of the persons riding within it than of the animals which are harnessed in front of it. Practically, too, the omnibus is regarded as the property of everybody who can pay his sixpence for a ride. The tired hod-carrier may go home in it at night. The kitchen-maid, returning from market, with her greasy basket of mutton, may crowd into an already full stage. The loafer, with his clothes emitting the smell of bad liquors, and flesh oozing at every pore with the fumes of vile gin, may take his seat beside the perfumed damsel from Grace Bleeker, and nothing shall be said. But Dr. Pennington, a gentleman of education, a Christian clergyman, and moderator of the Third Presbytery of New York, may not exercise the common privilege allowed even to the worst members of society. The blackleg can go from end to end of Broadway for a sixpence. The black face cannot ride the distance of a block. Dr. Adams, a worthy member of the Third Presbytery, and Dr. Pennington, the moderator, worthy Moderator of that body, might be going, arm in arm, on some errand of the church, and, finding the way wearisome or the time short, propose to take a stage; but on arriving at the door of the vehicle, Dr. A., who received his degree of D. D. at the humble University of New York, hardly known beyond the limits of the city, is allowed to enter, while his worthy brother, whose honor bears the world-renowned seal of Heidelberg, is excluded, or, if he enters, is summarily driven out. When shall we outgrow this mock gentility, this arrant wickedness.—N. Y. Independent.

MIND WHAT YOU SAY.—It is always well to avoid saying everything that is improper. But it is especially so before children. And here parents, as well as others are often in fault. Children have as many ears as grown persons, and they are generally more attentive to what is said before them. What they hear they are very apt to repeat; and as they have no discretion, and not sufficient knowledge of the world to discern anything, it is generally found that children and fools speak the truth." So that boy's eyes glisten while you are speaking of a neighbor in a language you would not wish to have repeated. He does not fully understand what you mean, but he will remember every word; and it will be strange if he does not cause you to blush by the repetition.

WINDSOR.

THURSDAY, MARCH 24, 1853.

Relations of Canada to American Slavery.

Do we need anti-slavery labor in Canada? We say, Yes; and to us

"The why is as plain as way to parish church."

And that is, because this Province and its inhabitants bear very important relations to American slavery. Hear us, good readers, while we discourse a little about some of these relations. We shall now speak of two, viz., the antagonistic and the friendly.

1. The fact that this is a British Province, and that slavery has no existence on British soil—the fact that this soil never was polluted by slavery—and the fact that since the ever memorable Somerset decision, the slave of another country became a freeman by touching our soil—place us in relations of antagonism to slavery. This was early seen and felt by the slave, and as early seen and felt by the slaveholder. Accordingly, so early as 1825, the attention of the U. S. Government was directed to this point. In the month of May, of that year, the House of Representatives passed a resolution calling upon the President to enter into correspondence with the British Government, for the recovery of slaves who had escaped into Canada. The reply of President Adams, to this resolution was, that his Excellency had, of his own accord, commenced such a correspondence some ten or fifteen days before. [See Jay's View.] From that time to 1842, the number of slaves escaping to Canada constantly and rapidly increased. Then, when a treaty was made between the two Governments, called the Ashburton Treaty, it was most earnestly sought, on the part of the United States' Government, first to have an article inserted which should authorize slave-catching in Canada; and, secondly, so to interpret the tenth article of that treaty so as to make it a slave-catching article; but the Court of St. James promptly refused, in 1825, to allow the American slaveholder to use Canada as a park to chase human game in. So they decided the tenth article of the Ashburton Treaty not to include slaves among "fugitives from justice," nor slaves as "felons," though they should use a horse or a boat to convey them on their way Canada-wards, or though they should strike a blow to prevent some slave-ocrat's impeding their progress. Canada, therefore, from her connection with the British Crown, is legally and constitutionally in an attitude of antagonism to American slavery. She offers and secures to the Ame[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] freedom—British Freedom—impartial Freedom. And when he has stood his seven years' probation, and taken the oath of allegiance, Canada secures to him, at home and abroad, in law and in equity, all the rights and immunities of a British subject.

But there is another view of our relations to this subject,—it is painful to admit it,—it is a deep disgrace to us; it is true, but disgraceful as it is, it is useless to conceal it, —friendliness to slavery is to be found in this Province in more forms than one.

1. There are some parties here who practised slave-driving in the South. They love slavery as they love the gain they derived from wielding the whip over its victims. A sprinkling of such customers is to be found here and there, the Province over.

2. There are others, too, who have married heiresses to slave estates. Having received their wives and slaves by the same act of matrimony, they are strongly tempted to regard slavery to be as sacred as marriage itself.

3. Then there are persons resident in Canada who were once slaveholders in the West Indies. The glorious people of Great Britain, determined to have the great principle of British freedom applied practically to the enslaved, as well as to all others, like Job, they, through the Government, "broke the jaws of the wicked, and delivered the spoiled out of their teeth." But these ex-slaveholders were never convinced of the sin of slave-holding—or, if convinced of it, they never were converted from it. Hence they are in spirit now, what they were in practice before the Act of '32. The influence of these parties is as deeply and wickedly pro-slavery as that of the vilest slaveocrats of New York, Boston, Philadelphia or Baltimore.

4. As a born Yankee, we are ashamed of it, but it is true that too many of the natives of the United States have brought their pro-slaveryism with them, from the other side. Like the refugee slaves, they come here to enjoy an improvement of their condition, and like them, too, they enjoy the protecting care of this good British realm; but they turn scornfully upon the black man, and do what in them lies to rob him of the rights to which the latter is as fully entitled as themselves. From sympathy with their native country, and from their own negro-hate, they maintain a constant and growing pro-slavery influence wherever they are settled. There are but very few exceptions to this rule, for it is a rule; and most safely may it be said, that while the Yankees are far from being the only negro-haters, or pro-slavery parties, whose principles disgrace our country, it is nevertheless true that the mass of them are the most decided slaveocrats in the land; and what is more, they most industriously spread and promulgate their sentiments, and seek to make them prevalent and controlling, even to the violation of Her Majesty's laws. We could give abundant illustrations of this.

5. It remains to be said, that the prejudice against negroes, so prevalent in various parts of the Province, as maintained by many persons of all nations, including, of course, native Canadians, is one of the strongest pro-slavery influences that disgraces and degrades our fair country; it does more to place us side by side with American oppressors than any other thing. Every body knows that it is the North and not the South that supplies the power of public opinion, of the pulpit, the press, commerce, manufactures, literature, religion, politics, everything that keeps slavery alive. Now the sentiment—the controlling sentiment of the the people of the North, that renders them the volunteer body-guard of slavery, is their negro-hate. The maintenance of a like negro-hate here, of course, encourages the same feeling there, and aids it in doing its very worst work. Every Canadian negro-hater is a volunteer British slaveocrat. Every such one is a strengthener of the slave system, and we repeat, that there should be such, is one of the worst facts—the foulest disgrace—the deepest degradation—in all our history.

So long as these facts exist, we shall want anti-slavery labors, organizations, agitation, and newspapers in Canada. Our humble life shall be devoted to the counteracting of the pro-slaveryism of our adopted country. It is for this reason that we leave our own hearthstone, and expose ourselves to so many disagreeables, as a lecturing agent of the Canadian Anti-Slavery Society. Hence it is we consent, without pay, to scribble for the Provincial Freeman. And we do believe that the education and improvement of our own people will lay this enmity to liberty and humanity,—this friendship for despotism—low, in a death and burial that shall know no resurrection, and that at no very distant day. At any rate we shall labor on in hope.

Let the pro-slaveryism of Canada be overcome, and let the anti-slavery influence of our laws, constitution, and position be fully and freely exerted, and there is no portion of the British Empire whose influence against slavery would be so healthful and so potent as that of Canada.—"A consummation most devoutly to be wished for."

Apology.

This number of the Freeman is published under very unfavorable circumstances. Mr. Ward is either travelling, or at his residence, more than 350 miles from Windsor, where this number is printed; and, as Mr. W. is obliged to perform other labors of a literary character for a livelihood, it is impossible for him to give the attention to the paper that he would were his pecuniary interests connected with it. After getting his consent to write for the Freeman, one or two circumstances rendered it necessary to get out this number at an early day; this has rendered it imperative upon the Committee of Publication to hasten matters more than shall be the case hereafter.

Union.

We have frequently heard it said that no people are so much given to party divisions, dissensions and disunions as the colored people. But we question the correctness of this very prevalent opinion. The Irish are divided into Orangemen and Catholics; the Scotch into Highlanders and Lowlanders; the English into as many divisions as there are counties in England almost. Then each of these dislikes and is divided against all the rest. Come to religious denominations, and any town in the British Empire will furnish abundant proof that the black people are very far from either enjoying or suffering a monopoly of disunionism. The truth is, that in this respect, the colored people are precisely like any other people, especially are they like any other ignorant people; and the more we see of other people, the more deeply are we impressed, not only with the oneness, but with the likeness of the human family, in this, as in all other respects.

Some fear that the differences of opinion existing among our people, in respect to certain public matters, will prove disastrous. We have no such fears. It would be no mark of manliness in us, to think according to the dictum of every man assuming to be a leader among us, or who should please to lord it over us. We freely confess that we desire no union at the expense of free independent thinking and action. We ask no one blindly to follow, or agree with us, upon the pain of being denounced as a disunionist; and He who made us knows, that we will follow no demagogue, black or white, in doctrine or practice, into that which our judgment and conscience disapprove, for fear of incurring the blame of any who esteem union as of all things most valuable. Union is desirable—very desirable,—worthy of forbearance, forgiveness, self-denial, charity, for its obtainment; but union purchased at the expense of moral principle, is purchased at too dear a rate. It is better to stand alone, upon principle, than to go with any multitude, compromising principle.

Colonization.

This scheme of our Yankee enemies is gathering strength in most of the States. Some Canadians look upon it with considerable favor. Such do not know how much is done to promote colonization by the disparagement of the black man, and by a denial of his rights, those very rights which they, in their vaunting Declaration of Independence, call the inalienable rights of all men. But colonizationists always deprecate the removal of black men to Canada, or elsewhere under the British Government, or anywhere to a really free country.

The colonizationists of the United States have unquestionably the control of the United States Government; how happens it that they have not recognized the independence of Liberia? Why have they never recognized the independence of any black government in any part of the world? The treatment of colonizationists towards black citizens of the United States, towards Liberia, and towards other black governments, is a true key to real colonizationism. We shall have more to say of this matter by and by.

The Stafford House Address.

The noble letter of Her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland, has excited a good deal of ill feeling among the slavocrats of the U. S. An article has been published in answer to it, said to have been written by Mrs. "Captain Tyler." In it a great many hard, harsh things are said, by way of retaliation. Free reference is made to the poor of London, and to certain poor people about the estates of some of our noblemen; but the indiscriminate sale of parents and children—the heartless separation of a tender babe from a heartbroken mother—the brisk trade driven in their own mulatto children, which Mrs. T. and every other Southern woman, knows to be matters of every-day occurrence, do not exactly find their parallels in England. And, indeed, when we were inconsistent and wicked enough to hold slaves in the West Indies, we had no Fugitive Law for their re-delivery, when they once ran away; and, if we recollect aright, the Somerset decision was made in reference to slaves from our own Islands, as well as from foreign countries. Much is said about Britain having entailed slavery on the United States. We shall examine this point at length some day, but let it be remembered that when our neighbors became independent, they adopted slavery of choice.

Serious Charges.

On the 4th inst. a murder was committed in Windsor, under circumstances of a most aggravating character. The murderer and the murdered were both young men, under age; the first, a youth of violent temper, the other, wherever known, respected for his upright deportment. The commission of such an act, in a quiet village, naturally enough, sent a thrill of horror through the community. The sudden and unexpected nature of the occurrence—the very slight point in dispute, so far as known, and the exemplary character of Wm. Burton, the victim, combined to produce such a result.

Most heartily is the taking of life by violent means to be deprecated, and justly is the murderer degraded in public estimation, but there is a crime of more aggravated character, which is frequently perpetrated with impunity—there is a class of persons whose assaults are more to be avoided than those of the murderer: the crime of seeking to live by a studied, deliberate misrepresentation of others, is as much greater in its results, than the taking of another's life (however much we may be horrified at such an occurrence), as the reputation of a rational being is greater than that of a helpless idiot, —and those who, in the public character of guides to a heretofore degraded people, so far misapprehend the responsibilities of their position as to willingly commit a species of moral homicide so fatal to the peace of a community, are more to be dreaded than the murderer.

The Voice of March 8th, in a leader under the caption "A Deed of Blood," charges those in Windsor who have interested themselves in the Provincial Freeman, with having provoked the murder in question, by holding illegal and uproarious meetings, and thus encouraging violence; and that the one held on the 4th was of like character.

The facts of the case are these: The meetings held here for the last "six months," have been legal meetings,—that point was settled by consulting with barristers of acknowledged respectability in their profession, before having held them.

The meetings held by the people, and from which the Editors of the Voice absented themselves, were peaceable, orderly assemblies—they first and only set the example of confusion in the meetings. The meeting at which the murder was committed, was one of the Debating Society, at the formation of which the Junior Editor assisted. James Tyner, the murderer, had nothing to do with the society,—he was merely a spectator, whom Burton, who acted as sexton for the evening, requested to be quiet when talking, as did several others. He became offended at Burton, only,—insulted him,—invited him out, and deprived him of life in a few minutes. Their movements, within doors, were so quiet, that but one or two persons knew that words had passed, and when they, and those near them, went out, the impression in the house was, that they were indifferent to the proceedings, as the debating had ceased, and arrangements were being made for the next meeting. These are the facts relating to the murder—a horrid deed truly! though not committed at "midnight," but at about a quarter past nine o'clock, after the business of the meeting was over, really, but before it was known to the body that a quarrel had occurred. The charge against the people of Windsor of having incited disturbance in a meeting at Chatham, is as baseless as that of having caused the murder. But it is thought necessary to assert that riotous conduct, murders, &c., have been the prelude to the Provincial Freeman, arranged purposely by those connected with it.

The determination to have a paper was published to the world, not kept a secret; indeed there was no one to fear,—a paper should be got up, said "everybody that was anybody," hence the Freeman. It is painful to have to record deeds of violence—it is also a task to have to allude to the Voice, but when a charge of murder is made against the originators of any public enterprize, the facts must be given, and, if the charge is untrue, the innocent should be acquitted.

The London Convention.

See the call in another column. The need of such a meeting, now, is manifest. Our population is large, and increasing. Our means and facilities for improvement, are ample. There never was a time, when we had so many ready to aid us, in any well directed effort, for our elevation—so many looking anxiously to see whether our improvement in wealth, mind and morals, will keep pace with the progress of other classes of British American society, or not. In certain respects, the Irish, the Scotch, the English, the Canadians, and the Yankees, in this good Province are separate and distinct classes, so in certain respects are the black people. And what is more, we who born in the United States, or in Canada, are in many points very different from the descendants of Africa, in other parts of the empire. Peculiar duties rest upon us, therefore, as a class. Though not poorer, less moral, or less intelligent than other poor people, still, we are very far from what we should be, and what we can be. This is reason enough, why we should make immediate efforts to raise ourselves above our present position. The blacks of the West Indies, now among the wealthiest, most learned and most influential of Her Majesty's colonial subjects, were, a century ago, as poor and as illiterate as we are now. Slavery did to them, just what it has done for us. The difference between their present and their past condition, is the result of their own efforts, under God. What they are we must be. We must become such by our own efforts, as did they. We cannot begin too soon.

There are two other considerations which are not to be concealed. One is, that there are prejudices existing in the minds of many of our fellow subjects, against us. Many there are, who indulge the most absurd ideas concerning the capacity of negroes. Some who ought to know better, are constantly asserting that in America, the negro, is so different from, i. e. so inferior to, the negro of Africa, that efforts for the improvement of the American negro, are useless.

The other fact is, that many of the rights that belong to us in common with other British subjects, are denied us, by some of the more prejudiced classes. There are hotel keepers, and steam boat owners of this class, and too many who are British born who uphold them in defying the law touching our rights.

We will add a third fact, and that is the worst of all. Too many of our own people either in ill manners, coarse habits, or low cringing to the negro-haters, do too much to give occasion to the enemy.

Now, to refute the disparaging remarks, of our enemies, to overthrow their prejudices, to contend for our rights, and in some instances to appeal to the law, for the recovery of our rights, all of these are the works for our own hands. We must do it. We must meet, deliberate, discuss, resolve. We must adopt measures for our improvement; we must show what we are, and what we are capable of. The London Convention, must be one of a series of measures for the accomplishment of these great purposes. There, let all who have any interest in our welfare, show it by their appearance at that gathering.

Some, regard the season as unfavorable, because of the state of the roads. May, or June, would be better, some think. But by that time, many will be away, at work on the lakes, and the farmers can ill afford to leave home. Besides, if the deputation to England, should go this year, the time of sailing will be about the middle of April. Other reasons, for an early convention could be given but the above, doubtless, are sufficient. Come to the convention: Yea come.

We hear the rumour that Fred. Douglass, Esq., intends to make Canada his future home. Most heartily do we wish Madam Rumour would tell the truth in this instance. It is a mistaken idea, that learned and influential black men are not wanted here; it is also a mistake to suppose that we can do nothing for the slave in this country, or, indeed, that we can do less here, than in the United States. The improvement and development of a people once enslaved, under a free government, is a work inferior to none to be performed anywhere; both on account of its own intrinsic value, and because of its influence upon the cause in the States. We say to our brother Douglass, come over and help us! A dozen tongues so eloquent, a dozen pens so gifted as yours, were not too many in this most promising —most inviting field.

A Visit.

On the 21st of the present month, Messrs. Mead, Kitchel, Hallock, and Baker, of Detroit, U. S., a committee of the Refugees' Home Society, called a meeting of those favorable to, and those against the R. H. scheme and Society, in the New School House in Windsor. The proceedings on the part of the Committee were peculiar, but there was no mistaking public opinion on the R. H. S. and begging in general—the same old-fashioned contempt for the scheme pervaded that large assembly, as had characterized previous meetings. Had the openly expressed desire to vote been complied with, the scheme would have been voted down; but no entreaties could induce the Committee to consent to such a proposition. A report of that meeting, with the et ceteras, may appear in a future number of this paper.

From the South.—Two men, two women, and six children, from Kentucky, arrived safely at this point on the 22nd and 23rd, and they report others on the road. They express great satisfaction at the result of their first successful effort to flee from bondage. Measures are being taken by relatives and friends to get steady employment for the females,—the men go to Chatham.

Wages.—The price paid laborers hereabouts is, for Railroad hands, per day, 87cts. (3s. 9½d.); Timberers, per month, from $10 to $12 (£2 10s. to £3.) Prices are higher at Chatham and vicinity.

When the writer of the leading editorial in the Voice of Feb. 22 shall be in the mood of it, we should like to go into facts historical, proving to whom such epithets as "unprincipled calumniator," "syren," &c., legitimately belong. There is an adage about folks in glass houses, &c. And more than one person has seen stones thrown in Windsor. We have placed the editorial in question in our columns that the public may judge of it as a specimen of the leaders of a Journal edited by Messrs. Bibb and Holly. Rival to such a paper, Eh? Rival to Bennett's Herald as soon!

Provincial Parliament.

Provincial Emigrant Agent.

Mr. Clapham moved the following series of Resolutions, of which he had given notice, on the subject of Emigration and the appointment of a Provincial Emigrant Agent, to reside in the United Kingdom.

1. That in order to realize all the benefits contemplated in the establishment of a line of Steam Ships, by public bounty, between [illegible] and Liverpool, and [illegible] the furtherance of the great Public Works, recently authorized by Law in this Province, emigration of the labouring classes should be encouraged and promoted.

2. That as the great natural resources of Canada, and its advantages as a future home for millions of the human race are imperfectly known and appreciated, and that the route by the River St. Lawrence is the shortest by the River, Lakes and Canals, and proportionably the most economical and speedy for communicating with the interior of this Continent, whether to Canada or the Western territory of the United States, it is highly desirable that efficient means should be adopted, in order that the prevailing ignorance on these subjects may be dispelled.

3. That inasmuch as it is found by experience that through the influence of paid lectures and other agencies in England and elsewhere, employed by the proprietors of energetic lines of passenger Ships of a superior class from the Ports of the United Kingdom, but especially from Liverpool to New York and Boston, the tide of immigration and the carrying trade to and through this country, has been greatly diverted into other channels to the prejudice of the shipping of the Empire, and to our financial commercial and agricultural interests;—an Agent qualified by general information and experienced to counteract and modify these injurious consequences, ought to be commissioned by the Province, to make known and advocate the advantages that nature has bestowed on this country, and of our enjoyment in its Government, of the greatest amount of Civil and Religious liberty and exemption of taxes, of any people in the world.

4. That the services of the aforesaid Agent shall be devoted exclusively to the object for which he is commissioned, and that the charge upon the revenue of this country as a salary, should not exceed pounds currency, per annum; that the charges of his transport in first class carriage by Rail way, Coach or Vessels, and all Bills for printing, whether for the diffusion of information in Newspaper, or by placard and for the hire of lecture rooms, shall be defrayed by the Province.

5. That one of the duties of the aforesaid Agent shall be to diffuse general information through the press, to address the public verbally or by lecture, in all which cases he shall transmit copies or newspapers, reports and notices of the same, for the information of the Government and the country.

Mr. Clapham said that he did not move the resolutions with the view of encroaching on the prerogative of the Government, but rather with a view of strengthening their hands and aiding them in the endeavour to establish steam communication between this country and Great Britain, and the thought that all the credit of the idea was due to the Government. It was, he continued' a well known fact, that this country had suffered very much from the efforts made on the other side of the Atlantic by parties interested in other lines of passenger vessels, to induce emigrants to cross with them instead of taking the route by the St. Lawrence. When in England a short time ago, he had heard lectures delivered by persons in the employ of Liverpool merchants and shipowners, who were so unscrupulous as to disparage the route by the St. Lawrence and also to disparage the idea of settling in Canada, and on one occasion he felt himself called upon to get up and refute the statements that he heard made. The present, was, perhaps, an unpropitious time to bring up the subject of emigration when there was such a strong tide flowing to Australia, but the people of England were beginning to find that it was not all gold that glitters, and it was discovered that the wages of mechanics in Australia bore no proportion to the prices of food, and that many persons there would be glad to return, and matters there were altogether so discouraging that he thought the people of Canada might enter very fairly into competition with Australia and with the United States. He did not mean to enter upon the subject of actual settlement, but, nevertheless, he thought this would be a good time to do even that, now that the crown lands department were disposing of their lands on such liberal terms. In former times the price of crown lands was so high as to deter people from purchasing. One of the principal advantages of the St. Lawrence route is, that it is so much shorter than any other. Not only is Canada so infinitely nearer to Europe than Australia, but the route by the St. Lawrence is 418 miles shorter than that by New York, and also that by the former route the means of conveyance is much better than through the United States. Another advantage to be obtained by the settler in this country is, that there is a much larger share of civil and religious liberty than in any other part of the world. All of these things would have great weight with the British public. The people of England were a reflecting people, and when they found that they could get a farm of 100 acres in this country for 100s. with a very light taxation and a large degree of civil and religious liberty, they would find it more to their advantage to come here than to go to Australia in spite of the gold to be found there, or to the United States, where the price of land was much higher and the means of communication not so good.

The motion was seconded by Mr. Dixon.

The Hon. M. Cameron had supposed that there would have been a good deal of debate on these resolutions, which embraced a subject of the very greatest importance.—There had, however, been so many disappointments experienced through the agents that had been sent, that the Government would not feel justified in again taking the responsibility upon themselves unless with the general feeling of the House, and on this subject, therefore, he wished to see a general expression of opinion. The Government had taken the first step to promote emigration, by establishing a line of ocean steamers, and they had also, by means of the department with which he was connected, taken measures to procure the very best information for the guidance of intending settlers.

The Speaker was about to put the resolution, when,—

Mr. Brown asked if the Government intended to allow this motion to pass? Were they to vote for a proposition involving a large public expenditure, without any assent on the part of the Executive, or any estimate of the expense? Surely the Government could not intend to allow these resolutions to pass in their present shape?

Hon. Mr. Hincks.—Of course the Government could not allow the resolutions to pass, but they could not prevent any private member bringing forward any resolutions he thought proper. The whole matter was under the consideration of the Government, as had been explained by the President of the Council, under whose charge it more particularly was.

Mr. Clapham said that he had no desire to press his resolutions upon the House more particularly as the Government had the matter under consideration. All that he wanted, knowing as he did from personal experience, the importance of the subject was, to bring it prominently before the House. He was perfectly willing to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Murney said that every member of the House must be glad to hear what had fallen from the President of the Council, as to the steps that the Government had taken in reference to the subject of emigration. The subject embraced in the resolution before the House was of the greatest importance.

Hon. John Young said that a great deal of ignorance prevailed in England about Canada; but still more in Europe. He thought that next year would show the principle portion of emigration would come by the St. Lawrence. He thought the agents of the Steamship Company would be found of the greatest use in promoting emigration to this country. He could not, however, support the resolutions because they were not sufficiently definite.

The resolutions were then postponed.

Odds and Ends.

Some people are never content with their lot. Clouds and darkness are over their heads. To them every incident is an accident, and every accident a calamity.

Cleobulus being asked, why he sought not to be advanced to honor and perferment, made the reply: 'O, friend as long as I study and practice humility, I know where I am; but, when I shall hunt after dignities and promotion, I am afraid I shall lose myself.

Never forget the kindness which others do for you; nor ever upbraid others with the courtesies which you do for them.

A man who puts aside his religion because he is going into society, resembles a person taking off his shoes because he is about to walk upon thorns.

Every young man should remember that the world will always honor industry. The vulgar and useless idler, whose energies of body and mind are rusting for want of occupation, may look with scorn upon the laborer engaged at his toil; but his scorn is praise, his contempt honor.

Rio Janeiro.—The ship Grey Eagle Capt. Whipple, from Rio Janerio, arrived at Philadelphia, 3d inst., with a cargo of 1000 bags coffee. A despatch says—

"Capt. Whipple reports the country as tranquil, though efforts were still making, in conjunction with the American and British men-of-war, for the suppression of the slave trade.

A slaver had run into Mozambique channel with a full cargo of slaves, which were quickly disposed of at enormous prices. The captain of the vessel succeeded in making his escape, but the vessel and crew were captured by a Brazilian cutter, and the crew thrown into prison.

Perpetual Motion.—A Paris letter of the 20th Jan. mentions, that the necessary papers for taking out a patent for an invention said to realize 'perpetual motion,' was to come by the next steamer to Washington. A locomotive, one-fifth the size of railroad engines, has, says the inventor, been working continually since June.

Mass Convention in London, Canada West.

The undersigned begs leave, most respectfully to advise the convening of the colored people of Canada West, on Wednesday the 6th day of April 1853, to consider among others the following propositions:

What is the actual condition of the colored people of this Province as to Property, Morals, and intellectual progress?

What is now being done for their Social, Intellectual, Moral, and Religious improvement?

What means and measures are now needed for the accomplishment of the elevation of this large and growing class of Her Majesty's subjects?

The several towns it is hoped will be duly represented. The Convention will be a Mass Convention, admitting all who agree with its objects, to membership, until otherwise ordered. Parties attending will greatly facilitate the objects of the Convention by coming prepared to give statistics, of the number of colored persons in their several localities, their callings, the amount of real and personal property owned by them; the number of children in schools; Temperance, and other reform Societies, &c.

Something must be done for our elevation, and progress, and now is the time to begin. Our friends may do much for us, but the great work must be done by ourselves. Living under the most free government upon the face of the earth, we must raise ourselves up to the position of our brethren in the West Indies, and in other portions of the British Empire. If however, we are the poor miserable paupers, needing incessant beggary in our behalf, as some represent, let us tell the world so, at once. If not, let us deny it, like men, and make good our denial by corresponding actions.

Come then brethren, from every Town and Township in Upper Canada. Come from your Shops, Farms and Hearth-stones. Come in numbers. Come from the lake-shore, and the mountain side; come full and flowing with the spirit of British freedom, and let us commence a labor which must continue, and with the blessing of God result in our most successful development.

Gentle Eva.

BY MRS. R. S. NICHOLS.

Have you heard the touching story
Told so sadly of that clime
Where the rose, in crimson glory,
Brightens all the summer time?
It tells us of a maiden—
Golden-haired and starry-eyed—
Young in years, by thought o'erladen
Who in angel beauty died.
Gentle Eva, loving Eva,
Sleeping by the ebbing wave;
Wail or woe shall never grieve her,
Shrouded in her mossy grave.

Once she wept o'er wrong and sorrow,
Childish tears so wisely shed;
Birds of Eden on the morrow,
Warbled dirges o'er her head.
Velvet leaf and snowy blossom
Crowned her young and radiant brow;
O'er her white and heaving bosom,
Little hands are folded now,
Gentle Eva, loving Eva,
Sleeping by the moaning tide,
Never more shall sorrow grieve her,
Who in angel beauty died.

Linger not Long.

Linger not long!—home is not home without thee,
Its dearest tokens only make me mourn:
Oh! let its memory like a chain about thee,
Gently compel and hasten thy return.—
Linger not long.

Linger not long!—Though clouds should woo thy staying,
Bethink thee—can the mirth of friends, though dear,
Compensate thee for the grief thy long delaying
Costs the poor heart that sighs to have thee here?—
Linger not long!

Linger not long?—How shall I watch thy coming,
As evening's shadows stretch o'er moor and fell,
When the wild roe has ceased her weary humming,
And silence hangs on all things like a spell.—
Linger not long!

How shall I watch for thee when fears grow stronger,
As night draws dark and darker on the hill—
How shall I weep, when I can watch no longer—
Oh! art thou absent—art thou absent still?—
Linger not long!

Yet I shall grieve not, though the eye that seeth me
Gazeth through tears that makes its splendour dull;
For oh! I sometimes fear when thou art with me,
My cup of happiness is all to full!
Linger not long!

Haste—haste thee home, unto thy woodland dwelling!
Haste as a bird unto its peaceful nest!
Haste as a skiff when tempests wild are swelling
Flies to its haven of securest rest!
Linger not long!

ADDRESS

OF THE BELFAST ANTI-SLAVERY ASSOCIATION TO MRS. H. B. STOWE.

It affords us much pleasure to give publicity to the following excellent address of the Belfast Anti-Slavery Association to Mrs. Stowe, the now celebrated authoress of "Uncle Tom's Cabin:"—

TO MRS. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

"MADAM:—We, the Committee of the Anti-Slavery Society of Belfast, in the North of Ireland, desire to testify to you our high appreciation of your labors in the cause of outraged humanity.

"No words, however, at our command, can adequately express our admiration which we share in common with all in these lands, without distinction of sect or party. Your [illegible] known and esteemed in the palace of our beloved Sovereign, who is not more illustrious by the throne which she occupies as the daughter of a race of kings, than by the virtues which adorn her character; and it is also the companion of the peasant in his mud-walled cottage. Inheriting a name peculiarly honored, it is your distinguished happiness to hand it down to posterity more honored still.

"We greatly rejoice that, in the good Providence of Him who has 'made of one blood all the nations of the earth' one so peculiarly qualified to plead for the slave has received strength and courage to come forward, and to pour into the ear of the civilized world the groans of more than three millions of human beings denuded of their dearest rights, and helplessly exposed to the worst passions of men whom American law has invested with a power dangerous alike to themselves and to their victims.

"We understand, to some extent, the discouragement in your way, and therefore honor all the more the deep-toned piety and lofty principle which have enabled you to brave the hostility, not only of the ruthless slave owner, but of those ministers of religion who would force the word of God, which proclaims 'liberty to the captives,' to sanction a man's holding his fellow-men in bondage. Permit us, in the discharge of what we believe, a solemn duty, to declare, through you, the pain it gives to Christians on this side the Atlantic, to find, that men, distinguished as scholars and by the place which they hold in the Church of God, who might have been supposed to have drunk deeply into the spirit of the Saviour's 'loving kindness," should lend their high influence to perpetuate and extend a system of such flagrant injustice, one even rendering it penal for slaves to be taught to read the Word of God; thus, as far as in their power blighting their prospects for eternity.

"And of those ecclesiastical bodies that recognise the manstealer and his coadjutors as brethren and Christians, we cannot but speak in terms of strong reprehension. We feel such conduct to be, on their part, the betrayal of a most important trust, a defiling of the 'temple of God,' which, if they repent not, must issue in an awful retribution.

"Permit us, likewise, to express our cordial sympathy with those Churches of America that have protested against slavery, and resolved to admit no slaveholders to their communion. We have a pretty accurate knowledge of their real position and difficulties, and beg to tender them, through you, the assurance of our high esteem and warm approbation. Thr testimony which they thus left against surrounding iniquity we consider as honorable to them, in their circumstances, as that which, at the Diet of Spires, immortalised so deservedly its promoters. They are 'the blessing in the cluster,' on account of which the Lord saith, 'Destroy it not.' May they become the 'leaven' which, though little, shall penetrate the entire mass, and bring back the professors of the United States to a due sense of the 'purity which becometh the house of God,' and of the imperative obligation to 'do justly and to love mercy,' in order to be approved as the followers of the Lamb. Nor can we help avowing our deep conviction that, had the other transatlantic Churches followed the example thus nobly set them, slavery would long ere now have ceased to be the peculiar blot upon Christianity in America.

"We cannot trust ourselves to dwell on that master piece of iniquity—the deservedly infamous 'Fugitive Slave Law.' But we do rejoice that there are individuals in the U. S. (in the front rank of whom stands your illustrious brother, Henry Ward Beecher) who believe that might is not necessarily right, and who, when the stranger, shivering with cold, and weak with want and toil, knocks at their door, will fearlessly 'take him in,' at the command of One to whom Congress and its servants must yet give account. Noble-minded men and women, of whatever class or name, accept our Christian salutation—we love you 'for the truth's sake which dwelleth in you,' attests itself in corresponding works. Your holy fortitude is in these lands, the theme of universal commendation. The peril in which you obey God rather than men we know to be great; nevertheless be of good comfort, 'THE END DRAWETH NIGH.' Though at the risk of reputation, of property, of liberty and even of life itself, when you hear the bay of the bloodhound—so characteristic of slavery—and observe the approach of men equally bloody and brutal, remember what you owe to the God of mercy, and shut not your heart against 'the cry of the desolate.'

"We would remark, in conlusion, that we rejoice in you as a fellow-laborer in the vindication of human rights. We are thankful that the iniquity of a system the consummation of Satan's hatred of man, is at last urged home on the understanding and the conscience in a manner already so much acknowledged; and in consequence of which, we trust that, at no distant day, the oppressed in America will be permitted to go free. Be of good courage, then, in this work to which our Lord has so evidently called you. We hope that, from henceforth, you will regard it as specially your work. Those who sympathise with you in this 'labor of love' feel themselves so distanced by the admirable performance which has obtained for you a world-wide celebrity, that, while they must still follow, though with unequal steps, cheering and aiding you as they can, it is to you they look as, in Divine Providence, their leader in the assault on this atrocious system. Oh! that the soul harrowing scenes, so true to life, which you have depicted, may soon effectuate the removal from your otherwise great and admirable country of a crime so deep-rooted and wide-spread—a crime so horrible, and on account of which alone the burning blush of shame becomes so familiar to the American when in other lands.

"Of the final issue of the struggle in which you are engaged, there cannot be a doubt. He who liberated Israel from bondage will yet liberate the African. May 'the year of his redeemed,' in this respect not be coupled with 'a day of vengeance,' such as the destruction of the Egyptians in the Red Sea. Before it be too late, may your warning voice reach the consciences of those who by trampling on the golden rule in all its most important applications, are doing their utmost to bring down on their fine country the avenging arm of Him who 'looks from the height of his sanctuary, to hear the groaning of the prisoner, and to loose those that are appointed unto death!'

"In the advocacy of the great cause of human freedom, we are, Madam, yours, faithfully,

American Slavery.

The following address to the Women of the U. States has been prepared by the Toronto Ladies Association for the relief of Destitute Colored Fugitives. It is written in a good spirit, and contains suggestions which it is the legitimate province of women to carry out into practical action. Much may be effected by female influence, especially in family arrangements, and in the education of those who are to be the future legislators and the wives of legislators. There is about this address also what will commend it the more to the people of the United States—a plainness of speech which they like. It expresses the truth in courteous terms, and seeks not to sweeten the unpalatable fact that slavery is a sin which ought to be abolished at once by every Christian nation:—Globe.

The affectionate address of thousands of the women of Canada to their sisters, the women of the United States of America.

"While the women of England, with whom we in this Colony are indentified, propose to address you on the subject of Negro Slavery, it may not seem an unfitting occasion for us to add, in the same Christian spirit, our suggestions and entreaties. Living so near to the scene of Slavery, and coming daily into contact with its bitter fruits, in the persons of those unhappy fugitives who have been compelled by law to seek an asylum in our country, we cannot but deeply deplore its continuance in the world, and especially in your mighty nation—a nation whose influence for good might be co-extensive with the civilized world, were it not for this foul blot, which mars its glory and paralizes its power.

"We would then ask you, in the spirit of Christian love, to use that influence which, as sisters, as daughters, and as mothers, you possess, for the abolition of a system which deprives its victims of the fruits of their labor; which substitutes concubinage for the sacred institution of marriage; which abrogates the relation of parent and child, tearing children from the arms of their parents, and parents from each other; which shrouds the intellect of rational beings in the dark gloom of ignorance, and forbids the souls of immortal beings from holding communion with their Maker; amd which degrades man, created in the Divine image, to the level of a beast. We repeat not this dark catalogue of crimes, needlessly to wound your feelings, or in a spirit of self-complacency, as if we and our fathers were free from all guilt, but with the view of deepening your sympathies on behalf of the sufferers. We ask you to ponder seriously and dispassionately the fact that the system which generates such evils, is becoming daily more deeply rooted in your soil, and hence more difficult to be cured or eradicated. We presume not to dictate to you the mode of action to which your sympathies should lead, but would affectionately suggest the following as peculiarly suited to your sex—to soften the harsh and cruel—to remonstrate with the unfeeling and unjust—to confirm the wavering and to encourage the timid. We do not forget that there are many masters of slaves, who like Patrick Henry, confess their guilt, and so far pay "their devoirs to virtue as to own the excellence and rectitude of her precepts, and lament their want of conformity to them." In the case of such use your influence to win them into the path of "virtue." We believe that there are many who, like your celebrated Pinckney, declare "that by the eternal principles of natural justice, no master in the State has a right to hold his slave in bondage a single hour" but who are yet timid in their action. Encourage and determine such by your counsel and approbation. In the quiet seclusion of domestic privacy, warn those who desire to extend the area of slavery, of the difficulties that surround its present limits, and beseech them to think of the final results. Above all, let mothers prayerfully imbue the youthful hearts of their children with those important scripture truths which declare "That God hath made out of one blood all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth." "There is no respect of persons with God." "Forbear threatening, for both your and their master is in heaven." "Give unto your servants (slaves) that which is just and equal." "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you;" and we venture to predict that ere another generation pass away "every bond shall be broken, and the oppressed will go free; and your great Republic, free from its heavy incubus, will then truly be a land in which "all men are equal, and have a right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Women of America, your power for good is great, and great are your responsibilities. Many of you by your talents, your advocacy of the rights and liberties of mankind, and your self-denying labors on behalf of the injured African race, command the admiration of mankind. To encourage such in their works of love, and to arouse others to use more energetically the means with which Nature hath endowed them for similar purposes, we now venture to address you, and earnestly pray that to you, the women of the United States, may belong the imperishable honour of removing from your soil the iniquitous system of Slavery, which that noble spirit—the ornament of your country—Judge Jay, has described as "a sin of crimson dye," and the "abolition of which in your land was amongst the first wishes" of the immortal Washington.

Letter from Mrs. Stowe.

The following letter from Mrs. H. B. Stowe to Dr. Wardlaw, dated Dec. 4, 1852, was read at the Second Annual Meeting of the Glasgow Female New Association for the Abolition of slavery:

DEAR SIR:—I was most deeply and gratefully touched by your kind letter, and by its certainly very unexpected contents. That Christian hearts in good old Scotland should turn so warmly towards me, seems to me like a dream; yet it is no less a most pleasant one. For myself I can claim no merit in that work which has been the cause of this. It was an instinctive, irresistable outburst, and had no more merit in it than a mother's wailing for her first born. The success of the work, so strange, so utterly unexpected, only astonishes me. I can only say that this bubble of my mind, has risen on the mighty stream of a divine purpose, and even a bubble can go far on such a tide. I am much of my time pressed down with a heavy sadness, "for the hurt of the daughter of my people" is so horible, so sad—such a dishonor to Christ and his cause.

But, again, when I see that a spirit above me is issuing this feeble work—choosing the weak things of the world to confound the mighty—then I have hope. Why has He given it this success, unless He means some mercy to the cause? Please to say to those Christain friends who have sent me the invitation in your letter, that I gladly accept it—though, when I get there, I fear that they may be disappointed. I never was much to see, and now I am in feeble health—worn and weary. I am now putting through the press another work, "A Key to Uncle Tom's Cabin," containing all the facts and documents which confirm the story; truth darker and sadder, and more painful to write than the fiction was. I shall call heaven and earth to witness to the deeds which have been done here! Alas! that I should do it. Should God spare my life till April, I trust to mingle prayers and Christian affection with the Christains of Scotland.

Yours in the gospel of Jesus,
H. B. STOWE.

Gerrit Smith's Nurse.

Among the good men of our land, of whom it is no flattery to speak well, there is one, named above, whose memory will be embalmed in the living hearts of thousands when he is dead. He is distinguished as much by the attachment of those who have become acquainted with him, as he is by his personal dignity and simplicity of character. An incident occurred during the last canvass, that resulted in his election to Congress, which is so characteristic of the man, and so touching, that it is deemed worthy of record.

After an address at the town hall in Mexico, N. Y., while the audience were slowly dispersing, Gerrit Smith might have been seen standing on the platform or in the desk, exchanging salutations with his numerous friends. Slowly pressing through the crowd, anxious to speak with him, there came an aged woman, poorly clad, with tottering step, bowed with infirmity, apparently fatigued.

She reached out to him her trembling hand exclaiming, "Mr. Smith, I come a good ways to hear you speak to-night. I walked all the way from Pulaski, just to be at this meeting."

"Indeed! mother," said he, "Why should you take so much pains to hear me? I don't know that I ever had the pleasure of seeing you before."

"Oh, yes you have," she rejoined, "my name is Babcock. When you was a little infant, I was your nurse, and carried you in my arms many a time." The tears stood in her eyes as she added, "I have kissed you many and many a time, when you was a baby."

"My dear old nurse!" said the great hearted man, "and you shall kiss me again," stooping towards her low bending form, while the tears fell fast and free. And there they stood like little children, or rather mother and child, her withered arms about his neck, and his manly form subdued and bent with tenderness. The poor old nurse in her tattered garb—and the man of princely wealth and generous feelings equal thereunto.

The lecture had been mighty by its impressions. But the gushing tear that somehow burst from many an eye that night, wore a much deeper channel in the heart than all his eloquence. To those who know him it is unnecessary to add the detail of his action on the following day, that placed within the reach of the long unknown nurse many comforts which she did lack.—Wesleyan.

Fatal Effects of Snowballing.

The Norfolk Messenger, of the 3rd inst., states that a boy named Ebenezer Graham, 7½ years old, residing with his parents on Hammerslay Street, died suddenly on Wednesday. It appeared that he had been playing with the schoolboys in the playground on the Friday previous, and that some of the larger boys covered him with snow, and threw snow balls violently against his head. He asked liberty to go home, as he felt sick, but the teacher refused, and the boy was obliged to sit in his wet clothes until between three and four o'clock, when he went home. Strictness of discipline is essential in the school room; but it is possible that as in this instance, it may be overdone. The boy begged leave to go home, as he was sick, but that mournful petition, never again to preferred, was rejected—and by a female teacher too—and the little fellow died in consequence.—North American.

Book Keeping amongst Farmers.

It is said that no class of men are more habitually negligent than farmers. Because they handle a comparatively small amount of money they consider accuracy in keeping accounts unnecessary,—the door or window shutter being the day-book and ledger, and a bit of chalk their writing tool. Why should they not keep a well arranged book account? Otherwise how can they tell whether farming is profitable or is running them in debt? The farmer should charge himself with the interest on the cost of his farm, with what he spends for stock, tools, seeds, labor, taxes, amusements, in short, with every outgo, and credit his farm with betterments, in labor for others, produce sold, and every income. Then, if at the end of the year, he falls short, he will at least have the satisfaction of knowing where the money has gone. Some undertake this and continue it a while and get discouraged with the appearance of the debtor side and give it up. Farmers, by not keeping exact accounts, understand less than others what it costs to live and maintain a family. A mechanic receiving his pay in cash, knows, or may know, pretty nearly, how he stands, and how far he may spend. A man living on a fixed income, and knowing correct accounts, knows precisely what he can afford to do. But a farmer raising a part of his support, buying a part, and bartering with his neighbors for a part, has no means of knowing what it costs to live unless he keeps his books accurately. He is apt alway to make invidious and unjustifiable comparisons between himself and others. He wonders that his salaried neighbor with six or eight hundred dollars a year does not become rich. If he had so much, he imagines that he should save one half or a third of it. But should he charge himself with rent, firewood, horse-hire, milk, butter, cheese, eggs, and every little item which his farm or garden produces and which the other purchases, he would see the matter in a just light, and might perhaps find that he had done his neighbor injustice. It is a good plan to have a proper memorandum book adapted to every day in the year in which entries might be made respecting the weather, the time of planting, journeys undertaken, domestic affairs, and remarkable occurrences. It is pleasant to look over such a book, and often profitable. It might be used as an important witness in pecuniary transactions, and in various ways might be turned to useful ends.—Toronto Globe.

Will the Maine Liquor Law Ruin Business?

One of the most urgent and oft-repeated objections to the Maine law is, that it will ruin business. Is it so? What business suffers by the suppression of the whiskey trade? Some particular branches, we admit, will not flourish quite so much then as now. There will be less disease and crime, and consequently less work for doctors, lawyers, judges, and officers of justice. There will be less poverty and pauperism, consequently less demand for charity or for the services of the fathers of the town. There will be less waywardness and rowdyism among young men, consequently less time, trouble, and anxiety, on the part of their friends. There will be less idleness and waste with drunken husbands and fathers, consequently less toil and care and suffering on the part of poor wives, mothers, and children.

This is not what you mean? O, you mean that the pauper and criminal factories will suffer, and those whose capital is invested in the work of ruin and death will not be able to carry on their enterprise! We understand you now, and we say at once, let them engage in some honest and useful employment—or let them suffer. We have no time to sympathise with such men in this day of light when their trafficing and bleeding victims are before us on every hand. Every dollar that they have made in their nefarious trade is so much taken out of the real wealth of the community, and invested in a business which is making war with every vital or cherished interest of society.

Agriculture, mechanism, education, in a word every department of enterprise will be more thrifty. The sober man is worth more in a community than a drunkard, for the one contributes something valuable to the general stock, while the other is taking from society that which he actually owes it; the one patronises the various trades and interests of the community, while the other taxes and burdens society.

The Maine law, then, it is not at war with business, but is actually sustaining it and helping it in every way. Those engaged in the manufacture and sale of rum must cease to increase the business of the country, as they do now, and turn their money and talents in some useful channel. It is that trade, and not the Maine law, that is ruining business, and we must all unite to put it out of the way for that reason.—Detroit Advocate.

HAMILTON JUVENILE MORALITY.—In the last number of the Hamilton Canadian, it is stated that information was lodged at the Police Office against a man named James Caulfield, for selling spirits without license. The informant stated that Caulfield and his wife kept a house in Lower James Street, which was frequented principally by children and mere youths, and that this Mrs. Caulfield was in the habit of supplying them with liquor; and that on the Sunday previous, informant's own boy and two others had been there, and one of the boys drank so much that he had to be carried to bed. This melancholy charge was clearly proven, and James Caulfield was fined in £5 and costs. If such be the boys, what will the men be? How absolutely necessary that every such loathsome place be purged from its impurities.—North American.

THE REIGN OF TERROR.—The Western Planet, published in the town of Chatham, has a curious idea of certain melancholy historical facts. It seems that there are forty-five houses for the sale of spirituous liquors in that town, containing a population somewhere about 2,200, or a dram shop to every 48 persons—men, women, and children—and that the demoralizing effects of this sad state of things has roused the Council to the necessity of depriving all these houses of the license to sell intoxicating drinks. This resolve has been designated by our contemporary as the opening of The Reign of Terror. We hope our Western friend will not be so terror-stricken as not to discover he has made a mistake.—North American.

Miscellany.

MRS. STOWE AND THE PEOPLE OF COLOR.—The Wesleyan, in its report of the Liberty Party Convention recently held in Syracuse states that Frederick Douglass detailed an interview with Mrs. Stowe, who is soon expecting to receive from Europe a large sum, to be laid out in some way for the improvement of the colored people. Her purpose was to found an educational institution. But he suggested that the way was open now in some of the best endowed of our land, for the young men and women of color. He thought it was most important to put the colored people in the way of getting the means to send their children to be educated. The remedy was an Industrial Institution, where the hands shall be educated to mechanical pursuits.—Penn. Freeman.

DR. GORDON'S ELOPEMENT.—Some time ago Dr. Gordon, who occupied rooms in the Elgin Buildings, Yonge Street, as a sort of surgery, left for the town of Simcoe, where he has since been practising. It seems, however, that he has made another move and a very dishonorable one. He has eloped with Mrs. Hawke, one of the fashionables of Simcoe. The Long Point Advocate says:—"Mrs. Hawke was decidedly the prettiest woman in our town, with blue eyes, light hair, fine figure, and aristocratic manners, gracing the circle in which she moved. Mr. Hawke has not only to grieve the loss of his wife, but several hundred dollars in money, which she took with her. The Doctor is a tall six footer, with a large projecting forehead, heavy eye-brows, awful whiskers, and goatee. He calls himself Dr. A. B. Gordon, Eclectic Physician and Cancer Surgeon. He left without paying any of his bills—not even his printer got sight of his money."—North American.

A CREOLE CHATTEL.—Under the above caption Mrs. Swisshelm's paper of the present week tells the following:—"Among the freight which passed through this city last week on the underground railroad, was a daughter of a 'wealthy and influential' citizen of Louisiana, a young lady of remarkable beauty and no mean supply of spirit and intelligence. She had been well brought up and kindly cared for by her father; but a creditor levied on her for debt. She was placed in a calaboose at New Orleans for safe-keeping, and for the inspection of purchasers. Among those who thought of buying the article was one gentleman, who wished to learn if her bust was indebted to padding for its form; but the girl, resenting this pursuit after knowledge as a personal insult, dashed him from her; whereupon this representative of Southern chivalry drew a heavy whip and dealt her a blow, which she caught upon her right arm and shoulder, and which rendered them quite powerless. That night—the night before the sale—some one came into her prison, gave her a suit of boy's clothes, bade her dress quickly and follow. She did so, and was placed by the unknown friend on a steamboat bound for Pittsburgh, her passage paid, and here she arrived safely. Her arm and shoulder were still disabled from the effects of the blow by her chivalric would-be purchaser, but she was thankful to have got off so wonderfully; was hopeful for the future, and with a considerable company of emigrants was promptly forwarded to the British dominions."

EARLY INSTRUCTION.—When Mr. Kirby was a very young child, his mother would give him shells from an old family cabinet to amuse him: the diversity of shape and variety of color which they presented, proved very attractive; he was soon taught to ask for his playthings by their proper name, then led on to describe with accuracy each shell which he wished for; next to mark their distinctive characters, and at last to know every shell in the collection, not merely from habitual sight, or from hearing the name repeated, but from intelligent observation.—Life of the Rev. William Kirby Rector of Barham.

Never trust a man for the vehemence of his asseverations, whose bare word you would not trust; a knave will make no more of swearing to a falsehood, than of affirming it.

ELIZA GREENFIELD, the "Black Swan," has had several offers to go to Europe. She is at present at Buffalo, and, it is said, has improved her style of singing very much.

Ira Aldridge, the negro tragedian from America, is now acting at Berlin. He is favorably criticised in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zuitung. His Othello is said to be as new to European play-goers as it is true to nature—that is to the nature of the negro. His acting is said to be remarkable physically and psycychologically. He is a real volcano, no player who merely rolls his eyes and deals in convulsive gestures, but who pours forth the devastating lava of awful passion. But it has an element of the wild beast in it. It is the true African he depicts, not mere imitation and clap-trap, but profound study of a nature which he by his birth can appreciate better than any white man. He is an artist whom no one should fail to see, but not a tragedian of the highest rank. He is not up to the calm, epical characters and situations, but in effective passages his performance is wonderful.

MASSACHUSETTS.—A movement was made recently to procure from the Legislature of Massachusetts an emphatic disapproval of the United States Senate, in excluding from all the committees of that body Hon. Charles Sumner, for the alleged reason that he is "not a member of a healthy political organization." Only 50 members voted in favor of the motion, while 190 recorded their votes in favor of acquiescing in the insult offered to the whole State by the slave power?

AFRICA.—By the barque Corsair, at this port, from Mozambique, we have Cape Town papers to the 4th Jan. The Cape Town Mail to the 4th, contains accounts of a severe fight, in which 6000 Basutos, armed horsemen, were routed by about 1000 British. The Chief "Moresh" had agreed to deliver 10,000 head of cattle and 1,000 horses, as a fine for the depredation he had committed on the colonists. He failed to comply with his engagements, and the Governor advanced into his territory to seize the cattle. The Basutos defended their property, and although the British at one time captured 30,000 head, they were compelled to abandon all but 6000 head. The Basutos, however, were overthrown, and the next day the Chief sued for peace. The conflict lasted from morning till eight o'clock in the evening. The British loss was 38 killed and 15 wounded. The loss on the other side was much greater.—Providence Journal, March 8.

DEATH OF A WHOLE FAMILY FROM GLANDERS.—A whole family, named Uncles, residing at Maugherow, near Lisadell, have been swept away by glanders. The father purchased a horse some time back at a fair in Mayo, infected with this distemper; he soon afterwards took the disease from the beast, then his wife and four children caught it, and they all died in great agony. We have heard that two girls, living at a place called the Windy Gap, about two miles from this town, have also been lost by this dreadful disorder. If the magistrates have the power, they ought to direct all horses having the glanders to be instantly shot.—Sligo Champion.

RANCID BUTTER.—A French scientific journal states that the bad smell and taste of butter may be entirely removed by working it over in water mixed with chloride of lime. The discovery was made by a Brussels farmer, whose practice is to take a sufficient quantity of pure cold water to work it in, and put in it from 25 to 30 drops of chloride of lime for every ten pounds of butter. When it has been worked until the whole has been brought into contact with the water, it should be worked again in pure water, when it will be found to be as sweet as when originally made.

VINEGAR FROM BEETS.—It is said that good vinegar can be made from beets. The juice of one bushel of sugar beets, worth twenty-five cents, and which farmers can raise without cost, will make them five or six gallons of vinegar equal to the best made of cider or wine. Grate the beets, having first washed them, and express the juice in a cheese-press, or in any way which a little ingenuity can suggest, and put the liquor into an empty barrel; cover the bung hole with gauze and set it in the sun, and in twelve or sixteen days it will be ready for use.

BOSTON GINGERBREAD.—Three cups of flour, one cup of butter, one cup of molasses, two eggs, one spoonful of dissolved saleratus, two large table spoonfuls of ginger, and one table spoonful of cinnamon, milk enough to form a dough. Rub the butter and flower together, and add the other ingredients. Roll it out in sheets, cut thin, butter your tins, place them, and wash the cakes over with molasses and water before they are put in the oven. They require a very moderate heat to bake them as they easily scorch.

SELF-RELIANCE.—The success of individuals in life is greatly owing to their early learning to depend upon their own resources. Money, or the expectation of it by inheritance, has ruined more men than the want of it ever did. Teach young men to rely upon efforts, to be frugal and industrious, and you have furnished them with a productive capital which no man can ever wrest from them.

EVERY ONE'S BUSINESS BUT YOUR OWN.—"Aunt Biddy, I've run all the way here to beg you'll sew up these great holes in my trousers before I go to school. I was the laughing stock of the boys both yesterday and this morning." "I'll do it, child; but why take so much trouble? why not get your mother to do it Charlie?" "Cause she hasn't time. Yesterday she was at the 'Dorcas Sewing Society,' and this morning she went to the 'Orphan Asylum.'"

A man whom Dr. Johnson once reproved for following a useless and demoralizing business, said in excuse;

'You know, doctor that I must live.'

The brave old hater of every thing mean and hateful, coolly replied that 'he did not see the least necessity for that.'

A young lady, returning late from a concert, as it was raining, ordered the cabman to drive close to the side-walk, but was still unable to step across the gutter, 'I can lift you over,' said Cabby. 'Oh, no,' said she 'I am too heavy.' 'Oh, marm,' replied he, 'I am used to lifting barrels of sugar.'

EDUCATION OF THE PEOPLE.—We hear that, under the sanction and approval of His Royal Highness Prince Albert, it has been proposed to establish a lending library and reading-room in Windsor Great-park (of which His Royal Highness is the ranger,) for the use of its inhabitants, and others in the employ of the Crown, who live in the neighborhood. His Royal Highness has most kindly permitted the appropriation of two of the lower rooms at Cumberland-lodge for this purpose, and has ordered that they should be suitably furnished. The subscription has been fixed at 6d. per quarter.—Shipping Gazette.

SUPPOSED ORIGIN OF WHEAT.—Some 14 or 15 years ago, Monsieur Esprit Fabre, a continental botanist of great eminence, met with a plant of the Ægilops ovata, or common Sicilian grass, presenting features of difference to him, sufficiently marked to lead him to conclude that it was an accidental variety. He took the seeds of this plant and sowed them. The produce of this seed of the original plant exhibited still greater departure from that original than the produce of the first year. He dealt with the seed of the second year as he had done with that of the first; and so on from year to year, from 1839 to 1851; and the result of this experiment was that the Ægilops ovata was turned into beautiful wheat. The plant had lost affinity with the character of the plant from which it sprung, and had assumed a new type and form: thus demonstrating that the most useful and valuable of cereal products is in fact nothing more or less than a sport from Ægilops ovata.

A small piece of paper or linen, moistened with turpentine, and put into the wardrobe or drawers for a single day, two or three times a year, is said to be a sufficient preservative against moths.

It is said that a chemist has invented a substitute for tobacco. It is made of guano, and will doubtless soon supersede the weed, as it is just as nasty, and a great deal cheaper.

Slavery.

Why come those sounds of mourning
Far o'or the distant seas?
Those piercing notes of anguish
Borne wildly on the breeze?
Why are those groans ascending
From many a southern clime,
The God of love beseeching,
To avenge their wrong and crime?

Ah! 'tis the wretched Slave, that 'neath,
The tyrants galling yoke,
Upon the heads of brutal men,
Such curses doth invoke.
But men alone in outward form,
Souls blackened, died in sin,
With demon passion seeking
The blood of fellow-men.

With fiend-like fury binding,
'Round frail and suffering ones,
Their hellish chains of torture,
Then smiling at their moans.
Rending, regardless, every tie
That to their souls is dear,
Teaching their dark minds only,
Their master's lash to fear.

The God that formed the owners soul,
Alike the captive made;
Yet, as some worldly merchandize,
'Tis sold in human trade.
Thou dreadful curse; oh, slavery!
When will thy influence cease,
And in those sun regions reign
God's universal peace?

The Song of the Telegraph.

I have heard men say that when winds were high,
And clouds were tossing about the sky,
Journeying over some lone morass,
Where the endless wires of the Telegraph pass,
They have stood, and listened and trembled with fear,
The song of the Telegraph to hear;—
A sad and most unearthly strain,
A sharp, low moan, like a soul in pain,
Rising and falling fitfully,
Like the long wave after a storm at sea.
I have thought and wondered many a time,
What the wire would say could it speak in rhyme;
And thinking much and wondering long,
At length have found the Telegraph's song:

Lo, the golden age is come!
Light has broken o'er the world!
Let the cannon mouth be dumb,
Let the battle-flag be furled!
God has sent me to the nations,
To unite them, that each man
Of all future generations
May be cosmopolitan.

I, the lightning—the destroyer—
I, the untameable, the proud—
To be harnessed to the wire,
I have left my thunder-cloud.
Harbinger of peace and union,
Messenger no more of wrath,
To establish sweet communion
Down to earth I take my path.

With the olive branch extended,
Swift I go to every shore;
Soon all nations shall be blended
They shall learn of war no more.
Peace and progress be forever
Printed on the hearts of men,
So that future time may never
See the battle-field again.

Soon beneath the deep Atlantic,
Far below the swelling wave,
Will my still small voice be passing
To the land that owns a slave.
Shame, oh shame, that starry banner
Doth not yet the stripe disown;
Shame, that great name be degraded
With the lash, the chain, the groan!

Now the world is growing better,
Now that Progress leads the van,
Is it not a strange injustice,
To enslave a fellow man?
Are ye not the world's free traders,
Ye yourselves the brave, the free?
Rise—annihilate this horror,
This foul stain of slavery!

The Assyrian is forgotten,
And the old race of the Nile,
And we stand amid their ruins,
Gazing on each wondrous pile;
And the glory is departed
From the bright Hellenian shore,
And though Rome is still in being.
Yet the Roman is no more.

But Britannia stands forever,
Throned upon the eternal seas,
Nailed to every mast her banner
Floats forever on the breeze;
And we laugh at our old quarrels,
All our foolish deeds of yore;
We are older grown and wiser,
We are children now no more.

Let America with England
Hand in hand uphold the "right,"
Be their path the path of progress
And their fame shall know no blight;
They are the noblest nations
Brave Old sun hath ever blest,
In the bright England and her children,
In the bright lands of the west!

English Paper.

A Recent Tour.

On the 11th of January last we started upon a tour of some six weeks time, and some 565 miles travel, in the western and frontier districts.

At Hamilton, on the 11th of January, we found a protracted meeting in progress, under the charge of Elders Hawkins and Brown, aided by Elder Garrett. This was in the colored Baptist Church. Arriving at St. Catherines on the 12th, we were a little curious, not to say anxious, to see for ourself what is the state of negro hate in that town. We stopped at the St. Catherines House, and found that the servants, landlord, and all others, were both polite and kind.

At the invitation of the Rev. Hiram Wilson, whose guest we had the pleasure to be, we attended a temperance meeting, addressed by the eloquent Elder Ryerson, of the Baptist Church. After Mr. R. had finished his very able discourse, we were invited to say a few words, which we consented to do, though our awkwardness, in contrast with our predecessor, must have been apparent to all.

On the 13th, Brother Wilson introduced us to Hon. Mr. H. Meritt, His Worship the Mayor, Mr. Adams, of the Custom House, and several other gentlemen of prominence. We lectured, that evening, in the Town Hall, to a large audience, who seemed to evince a good degree of interest in our cause, enough, at any rate, to request us, by a unanimous vote, to speak again the next evening. The meeting of the 14th was also a large one, and, at the close, a vote of thanks was offered us by Rev. Mr. Ryerson, and carried unanimously. In company with our excellent friend, Wilson, we went to Niagara on the 15th, where, through the activity of William Barr, Sen., Esq., a large assemblage was ready to hear us at the appointed hour. Mr. Barr occupied the chair with great ability. A most encouraging meeting was that at Niagara. Returning the same night to St. Catherines, we accepted the invitation of Rev. Mr. Cooke, of the American Presbyterian Church, to preach for him. We spoke, the same day, in the two colored churches, Rev. Mr. Helmseley's and the Baptist.

We must confess that we found things better in St. Catherines than we had feared. The prejudice against our people, was not so strong, so prevalent nor so unprovoked as we had thought, from what we had heard. Personally, we were treated by persons of all classes as well as we ever were, anywhere. Our people in St. Catherine's are not the poorest in the town, by a good deal. Many of them own little houses and lots, and enjoy a comfortable maintenance. Mr. J. W. Lindsey and Mr. James Harris live as comfortably as any one needs to live. Each of them has a good team, and they are making as rapid progress, in worldly weal, as the majority of their white fellow-subjects. As much may be said of Mr. J. W. Taylor and others, on whom we did not have time to call. The "Negro Village," of which so much has been said, we expected to find in a swamp or a mud-hole. But the settlement, if such it may be called, is on a street running parallel with the main street, and within one hundred rods of it. The site is good, the property valuable, the part of the town respectable, and whites live in the most immediate vicinity of it. Some foolish actions of our people have given occasion for some prejudice, and there are too many who would rather cringe than contend for what law and right entitle them to. It is true too, that there are some natives of the U. S. there, who act the part of fools and knaves towards our people. Having aided in trampling negroes under foot at home, they seek to engraft their pro-slavery negro hate upon British stock. It is also true, that they now and then find a Canadian soft sapling that will bear innoculation; but we are quite convinced that when our people shall have done all they ought to do, in St. Catherines, towards their own elevation, the whites will be right enough.

We had a most tedious, comfortless journey from St. Catherines to London. Our business at the latter place was, to attend the anniversary of the London Anti-Slavery Society. But all the anniversaries had been postponed a week later than we had supposed, and that week we must wait. In the meantime we held meetings in the vicinity.

The London anniversaries embraced the Bible, Tract, Sabbath Schools, Temperance, and Anti-Slavery Societies. How unlike Yankeedom! Besides, the same gentlemen who are officers of the other benevolent societies, are officers of this. Again, how unlike Yankeedom. Then again, the Anti-Slavery Anniversary was the most numerously attended, and the best patronized of all the anniversaries. Captain Gardner, of the Royal Artillery was on the platform, and he seconded one of the resolutions. The Captain sat side by side with A. B. Jones, Esq., a gentleman as black as ourself. It did look like an European meeting, that anniversary.

At the same meeting it was announced, that William Horton, Esq., would address a meeting the following Monday evening, and that, in the afternoon of that day, the agent of the Canadian Anti-Slavery Society would address a meeting of ladies, preparatory to the formation of a Female Anti-Slavery Society. Both meetings were largely attended, and Mr. Horton's debut was most triumphant. A most valuable accession to our cause is Mr. H.

On the evening of Feb. 1st, we went to Soho, in company with my excellent host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Jones and a few other friends. The meeting was one of the best country meetings we ever attended. Rev. Mr. Turner was in the chair. The black people in Soho are doing as well as the farmers of Middlesex generally.

In London the blacks are as well off as their neighbors. A. B. Jones could, at any time, retire from business, live in the style of an amateur farmer, and his property in town would yield an income that would support his family. A. T. Jones is progressing as fast as any other young druggist in that town. Nelson Moss is doing as good a business, as a cordwainer, as any man need do. Moses B. Smith and Henry Garratt, get on, as bakers, equally as well as others who follow the same business. Energy and enterprize are all that our people need in London to enrich themselves. Those now doing well are the artificers of their own fortunes, so might others be if they choose. We know of no town where a black mechanic or artizan could do better than in London. He would find some of the meaner sort of whites there, but they are as near akin to nobody as you can imagine. Folks who are folks, in London, are as free from negro hate as any people we ever saw.

We went from London, at the invitation of the Rev. Mr. Dawson, to Chatham, thence to Buxton. In these two places our people are making rapid progress. In Chatham there is a constant increase of the numbers of our people, and among them are some of the best mechanics and artizans in the county of Kent. J. M. Jones stands head and shoulders above any gun-smith west of London. Thomas Bell, as a builder; J. L. Brown, as a mason; R. Charrily, as a cordwainer; W. Moore, as a chandler; Mr. Smith, as a blacksmith, need fear comparison nor competition with any of the same crafts in that part of the Province. Then we see more buildings, new ones, too, than we saw last September, owned by black men. We asked one old man, who ran away from slavery a few years since, what he could get for his property? He said he had been offered £300; he confessed that it cost him but £30. The advance in the price of property was no greater in that, than in several other instances, in the same town. We spoke twice in Chatham, and most nobly did the brave blacks of Chatham stand by the cause.

Buxton, in more points than one, is the model settlement, not only of the colored people, but of Canada. There are 120 families there, and almost every family is settled on land in their own possession. In clearing, building and improving, most commendable progress is being made by them. Generally they came in poor,—they are making their way to independence with zeal and perseverence. They beg no old clothes from the States, they receive none begged by others professedly for Canadians. They lately held a bazaar to raise money to aid their own poor. They have been there but three years, and they are doing all that any people could do, in the same time. But the efforts of those settlers to educate themselves and their children are most praiseworthy. In the day-school you find both children and adults, in some instances, parents and children, earnestly intent upon the acquisition of knowledge. The evening school is attended by parties who walk miles through the forest by torch-light,—but they are determined; they have counted the cost, and they will rest nothing short of what they desire. In morals the settlement has no superior. There is not a drunkard in the settlement,—and, if any habitual drinking, they keep it to themselves. No person sells—no person is allowed to sell—the accursed stuff. The Maine Law is in full force in Buxton. We spoke twice in Buxton, preaching, on Sunday, for Rev. Mr. King, and speaking in a public meeting, Mr. West in the chair. The day is not far distant when that settlement will contain 1000 inhabitants, and when the land for which they pay 12s. 6d. per acre, will be worth £6 per acre.

But for our illness we should have gone to Dresden, but must defer our visit thither till some future day. Our tour satisfied us abundantly that the colored people of Canada are progressing more rapidly than our people in the States,—that the liberty enjoyed here makes different men of those once crushed and dispirited in the land of chains,—that along with the other poor classes who come here, and improve themselves in wealth and status, the black people will also arise, in some cases, very rapidly, but generally slowly, though surely,—that the day is not far distant when we shall put to shame the selfish, systematic charity seekers who go to the States, and some of them to the South, to beg, partly for fugitives, but chiefly for their own pockets,—that more money has been begged, professedly in behalf of Canadian Blacks, than said blacks ever did, or ever will receive, by a thousand fold,—that unless persons going to the States, begging for us, are the accredited agents of some duly organized society, with honest, unselfish men at its head, our friends should hold them at arm's length,—that what the recently arrived refugee most needs, is not land-buying societies, not old clothes, not any substitute for labor, but stimulation to self-development.

PENNSYLVANIA FREEMAN.—We take great delight in all our anti-slavery exchanges. From the noble cause they labor in, their high moral tone, and the general impartiality, with which all questions are treated and discussed in their columns, they are the beacon lights of the American press.

From them we receive what little light we possess to guide us on our way. But we are now compelled to notice an exception to this general rule, by the conduct of the Pa. Freeman in relation to the Refugees' Home Society. It has been warped on the side of a mischevious set of factionists, and calumniators, to retail in its columns, their disgraceful slang; and then it has sprung the hammer, (if we may use this expression) in excluding the defence of those who have been vilely assailed. The Freeman commenced by publishing some resolutions of a turbulent caucus of ignorant men, led on by a designing individual whose duplicity is sufficient to prove a genealogical descent from the serpent that beguiled mother Eve, in the garden of Eden, and after publishing them indulged in some rather non-committal remarks. It then licked up a letter addressed by S. R. Ward to a private individual in Philadelphia—a letter containing mis-statements about the Government lands in this township—and published that letter to the world at the same time taking its stand on the side of the letter. The Rev. C. C. Foote wrote a reply to the letter of S. R. Ward, which the Freeman published, but it was so determined to throw its weight against the impartial consideration that its readers might bestow on the merits of the question between Ward and Foote, that it arranged numereial annotations on Foote's letter commenting against it the whole way, and to cap the climax introduced a dirty extract, from the letter of an unprincipled calumniator, as a "trustworthy" settler of the question. But worse than all it has suppressed a letter from the Rev. C. C. Foote in reply to its unworthy strietures, whilst it gives place to the proceedings of a trifling meeting held by the satellites of this prime mischief maker, in Westchester Pa. where the same sentiments were re-echoed, that were uttered by their prototype here. But we have from time to time fully exposed those disgraceful proceedings here for the information of our Anti-slavery friends abroad, and there is no excuse for a plea of having been deceived, to be hereafter put in by any one, and we shall hold to a strict account, at the bar of humanity, those who oppose one of the greatest benevolent movements of the age, for every thought, word and deed, they have given publicity to against it. S. R. Ward unfortunately wandered from his orbit when he raised his voice against that Society, like the mighty Webster did when he declaimed against the higher law. We do not believe this fall would have happened to him however, if he had not been prevailed upon by evil counsel, spoken by a syren voice, like father Adam was by a similar influence when he fell. Ah yes! it was a fatal stroke to his judgment, the three weeks preceeding the Annual Meeting of the Refugees' Home Society, that he was in this vicinity enjoying the company of one whose whole conversation then was opposition to the Refugees' Home Society ☞ BECAUSE THE SOCIETY WOULD NOT GIVE LAND TO FREE BORN COLORED PEOPLE, and because one of the editors of this paper against whom she has a personal pique, is an officer in said society. By raising a prejudiced party against that society, and exciting a prejudice against the "Voice," it is hoped by those interested, that sufficient interest will be created, to establish a rival paper, of which we have understood Mr. Ward has already signified his willingness to act as editor, and for which efforts are making to call on the friends of the slave in the States for support. We do not object to the establishment of a rival paper, by citing these facts we are only trotting out to the light of day the underhanded measures by which it is sought to be effected. And we are really surprised that the Freeman—a paper colleagued with the impartial Garrison, is found hand in glove with such mean company after being thoroughly advised of the same.

We are compelled to think that an unworthy motive—has prompted it thus to settle on opposition to the Refugees' Home Society and thereby endeavor to impede brother Foote's progress in its vicinity. We now conclude this delicate subject feeling that we have done a just though mournful duty, in recalling those unpleasant recollections.

Mrs. America answers Mrs. England.

The Duchess of Sutherland, it is known, with a potent wave of her hand, gathered together, in Stafford House, ladies of birth and gentlemen of station; and, there assembled, the Ladies discussed and agreed upon an "affectionate and Christian address to their sisters of the United States of America," a persuasive appeal to their sympathies and affections to vindicate the domestic power of women, and so to break the chains of the American slave. American sisters were conjured by English sisters assembled in loving sisterhood in Stafford Palace, to gently wipe out the accursed and cursing blot of slavery defiling their homes, and to charm away the ulcer eating into their social state. Well, sisters of America have answered sisters of Stafford House, and how? Why, as might have been expected: with a "marry come up," and "it's like your impudence," style and air. The document however, is not wholly feminine: half-scolding, half-satirical, it wants the true shrillness of the female organ. It would be a very ill compliment to the sex to believe the answer the pure response of woman. To be sure, it smacks somewhat of Lucy Lockit, provoked by the self-asserting virtue and conjugal truth of Polly Peachum.

If you thus must chatter,
And are for flinging dirt,
Let's try who best can spatter;.
Madam Flirt!

Now as Lucy Locket—on special occasions, has been played by a man; so, assuming the feminine guise, Jonathan answers for his sisters. The Lucy may wear the mob cap, tucked up gown, and black mittens; but we see the broad bold face of Paul Bedford staring from the muslin; and cannot mistake the masculine stride that distends the petticoats.

No matter. Let us assume that they are our sisters of the United States who make answer to Christian sisters of England. They reply by satire. Puckering their mouths, and with a prolonged, laborious, courtsey, they begin by politely begging their English sisters to reform their husbands and brothers; wild, reckless unscrupulous dogs, who carry fire and murder into Southern Africa, to Southern Asia, and the Southern Seas. Yes: English sisters ought to wind their arms about the creatures' necks—detain them from war—snatch their muskets from their grasp, and, with the teapot or anything at hand, deluge their ball-cartridges!

Sisters in America will not speak to sisters in England of the opium war in China; or of the horrors of Ireland. No: with a truly feminine self-denial they swallow their indignation; put down the rising heart with a strong hand, and proceed with the catalogue. Sisters in America are so sisterly towards sisters of Stafford House!

American sisters next assured their English kindred that their land is "filled with slaves—slaves to ignorance, slaves to penury, and slaves to vice." Mrs. America plunges boldly up a London alley, and drags to the light a wretched tatterdemalion child. "Look at it!" she cries to Mrs. England. "Can it read? Can it write? How does it live? Why, like a wild beast in a hole—though not half so sweet. You ought to be ashamed of yourself to own such a child! Pah! Look at its rags—look at its head—look at its feet—look at its hideous little face, with want, and cunning, and ignorance, all staring from its eyes—its young wolf's eyes! And you, Mr. England, with thousands of such children, you—but I won't be in a passion, certainly not—you to talk of my black slaves—property as carefully looked after and as cleanly kept as your mahogany tables—every bit! I'll keep my temper, but its tarnation like your impudence to compare your white vermin of children—your Jack Sheppards of six, eight, ten years old, to my fat, glossy, comfortable little Sambos, black as marble and every bit as polished."

And then Mrs. America—wiping her fingers from the consequence of late contact, and, with a shiver of disgust, giving her petticoats a shake—then she looks abroad in the streets, and sees, on the authority of Henry Mayhew, whom Mrs. England "will not venture to question," no less than 80,000 costermongers, men and women; and not one-tenth of those who are coupled, married. "No," says Mrs. America, "the lawful wedding ring, that bit of magic, holy gold, which gives, as you say, 'the sanctity of marriage with all its joys, rights and obligations'—that bit of gold is unknown to nine-tenths of them. Well, Madam, when you have taken your costermongers to church, and, perhaps, in your brimming benevolence, have added to every couple a leg of mutton wedding-dinner,—then tell me to make flesh of one flesh, and bone of one bone, of my black Topsy and Turvy."

Taking breath, Mrs. America next rolls her eyes towards Glasgow. "Look at your poor Scotch sisters: there are 60,000 of them, worn and starved in factories, and at needle-work, on seven or eight shillings a week. Perhaps, Madam, you never heard of our Lowell factory girls: although they wrote a book that has circulated by thousands in your own country, Madam? To the new Crystal Palace, if you will send a Glasgow factory girl, in all her gaunt, grim penury, we shall be happy to send a Lowell factory girl, in her silk gown, with her parasol and all.

"And, now, Mrs. England, I shall say no more—not another word. But this I must say. I do ask you, as a woman and a sister, a wife and a mother, to bestir yourself in your own land. You are surrounded by miscrable wretches. And though you may fling money into the church-plate, especially when a bishop, a ten thousand pounder in the House of Lords, and a peer to boot in House of Lords, holds forth—although you may subscribe to the 'Ark of Flags' lying-in-hospital, and twenty other charitable institutions, where is your charity of daily life? Do you not pass among your lower classes, your veriest poor and wretched, as though they were leprous—blotched with disease? Things of a lower kind; animals made to drudge, even as oxen were worked to tread out the corn? Look at home, Mrs. England. Go down upon you knees; pray God to make a kind, gentle, loving, Christian woman of you—I don't mean the Christianity that goes regularly to Church, with a footman of six feet two in his silk stockings, carrying the gold-clasped 'Service,' but an active, vital, household Christianity. Not a seventh-day Christianity, but a seven days Christianity. Do all this, Mrs. England, and then pay me a visit. Yes, come, and bring your crotchet with you; and I shall be very happy to take you over my plantations, my farm, my house,—and more than that, to take your sisterly advice in the disposal of my niggers. Good morning."—And with a short curtsey, and an icy smile, that would blight a bed of snowdrops, Mrs. America takes leave of Mrs. England.

There can be no doubt that there is much truth in what Mrs America is made to speak. But the moral destitution, the moral blackness of a thousand English outcasts, do not make five hundred free negroes of so many slaves. Very true is it that we have wretched, wo-begone children in alleys; that we have "illicit" costermongers; that our needle-women have starved, or, at times, anticipated death by a plunge from Waterloo-bridge; that there has been grinding misery in factories: misery unceasing, remorseless as the machinery once set at work. But all this evil—all this degrading, crushing woe,—mocking, as with the mockery of a devil, our professions as a Christian people,—all this is as nothing to the all-blighting curse and all-encompassing horror of slavery! There is something still left—some drop of comfort, some ray of light in this misery—this bitterness—this darkness where slavery is not. We may not snatch one of these alley children from the dirt, and sell it like a young hog; we may not separate frail costermonger Joe from his frail companion Sal. Poor Sal may have a child at her breast, and one or two at what they call a home: yet Joe and Sal are safe from the slave-buyer, and may love on, and quarrel on, and their 'young barbarians' may still dispute with the pigs on the dust-heap—no human flesh-dealer daring to cast his blood-bargaining eyes upon them. This is something. And this something—no small thing, surely, in this human life of ours, whether passed on Stafford velvet pile, or stiflingly breathed in Slush Lane; this something is still the ray of God's own light and justice, however dark, and foul, and wo-begone the place it penetrates.—Lloyd's Newspaper.

Trials at Albany.

Enoch Reed, (colored) tried for resistance of process, under an act of 1790. Convicted, not sentenced.

William H. Salmon, tried for resistance of the Fugitive Slave Law of 1850. Acquitted.

Ira A. Cobb. Ditto. Jury disagreed.

John B. Bringham. Ditto. Ditto.

Such is a brief summary of the action taken by the United States Court, during the last three weeks, at the City Hall. Some dozen or so persons stood accused at the beginning of the term. Three white men have been acquitted or left unpunished for the rescue of Jerry, and one black man convicted of something else. And the Court stands adjourned.

It must have been sad employment for those who honestly believe that the harmony of our states depends upon the stringent application of this Law, to stand up in the Court-Room and watch the proceedings there, and it must be a still sadder employment to count up their results.

Look at the Counsel for the Government, wearied out, beaten in every case, dispirited, and going home—knowing that they have spent their best energies and their most astute technicalities all to no purpose—going home without even the satisfaction of knowing that they have added a straw's weight to their legal reputation—and knowing that their welcome there will be the rejoicing of their neighbors over their defeat.

Look at the Defence, ill concealing, or not caring to conceal, their belief that they have triumphed over Court and Counsel, Judge and jurisprudence. Look at the prisoners, glorying in their misdeeds, anxious not so much for their acquittal as for trial, striving for the notoriety of an indictment, as if it were an honor to have broken the Laws of the United States and a civic reward to be sentenced by one of the Courts. Look at the audience, crowding into the confined Court Room, involuntarily exulting over weak points found in the supposed impregnable Enactment, and every one carrying home with him a lesson in Federal Law.

Look at these things and calculate the amount of "indemnity for the past and security for the future" gained by the "peculiar institution" during its three weeks campaign.

We mention them neither to deplore nor to commend them, but to state them as they are. The accused knew before, and now even the Government has began to discover, that its trials of the "Rescuers have done more to impair the efficiency of the Fugitive Slave Law, than would have been done, if a gang of fifty "Jerries" had marched up State street, in broad daylight, on their unmolested road to Canada.

There are enactments that defeat their own ends. Outraging men's natural sense of justice so grossly that every attempt to execute them only inflames popular passion, and raises up enemies against them; they sooner or later make themselves dead letters in the law. They may be put upon the statute book by force, and kept there by force, but the disgrace to its pages becomes the only one they are capable of inflicting. Such bids fair to be the fate of the Act, of Congress of Sept. 12th, 1850.—Albany Evening Journal.

The Kidnappers Indicted.

We find the following paragraph in the Delaware County Republican, of Saturday last, and hope it is true, though we have not seen the news in any other paper. Perhaps, however it was contained in the West Chester papers of the previous week, which, owing to our recent illness, did not come under our eye. The hit at the Governor will be understood by those who have heard the private history of his agency in the attempted abduction of Richard Neal.

The Grand Jury of Chester County, last week, returned a bill against M'Crery and Meritt, of Elkton, Maryland, for kidnapping Rachel Parker. If Governor Bigler should refuse to require them to be given up for trial, we hope some one will make the application when he is at a social party—as was the case when he granted the requsition for Richard Neal—and that he will so far forget himself, as to order his Deputy Secretary to issue the writ.

We shall now see whether Governor Bigler will dare to perform the duty proscribed for him by the laws of the State, or whether he will disregard the action of the grand jury and the kidnappers to repeat the crime with impunity whenever it may suit their convenience or inclination so to do.—Pennsylvania Freeman.

Uncle Tom on his Travels

(From the New York Tribune.)

Europe has achieved the luxury of a new sensation in the reception and digestion of Mrs. Stowe's great work. Our militia generals on professional tours of observation among the fortresses of Flanders and on the lines of the Adige and Mincio are as much perplexed and annoyed by the Uncle Tom furore as they would go if required to draw lines of circumvallation or distinguish a lunette from an escarpment. Even our Diplomacy, aghast at the rushing, swelling flood of Uncle Tomism which is now sweeping over the Continent, writes home indignant remonstrances against Americans, disgracing their country by telling any but the other sort of truth about it, and sorrowfully admits that the counterblasts to Uncle Tom, so elaborately puffed in our Cotton journals, make no more impression on the Christian sentiment of the Old World than would a popgun broadside on the walls of Gibraltar. Even the labored replies of sundry squads of American ladies to the Stafford House Appeal are notoriously felt not to have touched the right spot, whence the necessity realized for perpetually renewing and multiplying them. Unless Mrs. Julia Gardiner Tyler, or some equally ambitious imitator, shall hereafter contrive to outdo all that has yet been done, the verdict of Europe will be all but unanimous that silence would have served the cause of American Slavery better than any speech elicted by the Duchess's memorial.

Meantime, Uncle Tom shines in every feuilleton, rests on every center-table, and faces the foot-lights of every stage. The despots and feudal robbers are soothed and gratified by the contemplation of a form of injustice and oppression more flagrant and shameless than their own. The ouvriers and gamins of Paris, chafing under the sense of their own enslavement and degradation, crowd the theatres to a marvel at the spectacle of a man bidding at a slave auction for his own wife or daughter against the coarse and tipsy ruffian who has fixed lecherous eyes upon her, and to whose unbridled will the law of the land inexorably consigns her in case he bids a dollar more for her than will (or can) be given by the competitor who has been moved by the husband's woe to bid in his behalf. "If this is Democracy," says gamins dubiously, "the despotism of our head burglar is not so bad after all; if this is Republican purity, our Emperor's lewd and shameless Court is relatively decent. Foul as it is, it has never yet resorted to legal constraint or oughtright violence in pursuit of licentious gratification."

There can be no doubt that merely the American name but the cause of Human Freedom has temporarily suffered in Europe by the exposures of Mrs. Stowe's book. If it were understood there that our most fanatically slave-holding State (South Carolina) was likewise the most unanimously and intensely, "Democratic," according to our blinding party designations, the marvel and the revulsion might be still greater. But this "sickness is not unto death." The freedom of investigation and discussion which true Democracy affirms but which Slavery systematically subverts, will yet dissolve the monstrous fabric of injustice and inevitable vice whereupon 'our Southern brethren' insist on reposing. In spite of Gag-laws and Cotton prescription, in spite of our drugged Pulpit, fettered Press and debauched Politics, Slavery shall yet silently melt away in the sunshine of Christian truth and Republican principle, and ours become in reality, what it now is in name, a Nation of Freemen.

Meantime, the devices for counteracting the untoward effect of Uncle Tom in European conceptions of Americans are alike numerous and futile. The latest that has attracted our notice orginates with with a Virginian, "ardent [for office] as a Southern sun can make him," who particularly suggests that President Pierce should fill all the Foreign Embassies of any consequence with Southerners, to enable them to counteract officially and efficiently, the baleful influence of Mrs. Stowe's work.

We do not feel sure that this prescription, if administered, would prove efficacious, Punch, we remember, in the time of the Potato rot, when Prince Albert distributed gratuitously among the poor, a pamphlet showing how the disease might be resisted, if not wholly counteracted, suggested that, in view of the actual needs of the peasantry, it would seem advisable to distribute potatoes rather than pamphlets. In the same spirit, we could suggest that sending over slave holders even though they were once French Jacobins, as Ambassadors to convince Europe that slavery is an eminently humane, beneficent and joy-diffusing institution, will not be exactly the thing. There is a sound principle of law which says 'Secondary evidence is not admissible where the primary is within reach;' and though Blacks are not permitted to testify at the South in any case where Whites are interested, there is no such rule known in Europe. We would urge, then, that if it be desirable to adduce before Europe, Southern testimony versus Uncle Tom, the proper witness to send there would be the slaves themselves. That Mr. Soule, Mr. Venable, Governor Cobb, Mr. Guthrie, and such other slave-holders as General Pierce may send out as Ambassadors, will assure Europe that Slavery is a mild, benignant, moral, humanizing institution, is a matter of course; as also that Europe will be too polite to contradict them; but if an impression on the public sentiment of the Old World is aimed at, let Cuffee and Dinah, Sambo and Philips, Pompey and Dandy Jim, be sent out as witnesses. If they, being released from all constraint or undue influence, shall say that they like to be fed, lodged, worked, flogged, hunted and sold, according to the laws of Carolina and Mississippi, Europe will be very likely to believe them; but so long as the South shall keep them gagged at home and send Soule & Co., to testify in their stead, we suspect that the evidence will not go a great way towards removing the impression produced by Mr. Stowe's book.

The late Colonel Talbot.

(From the Woodstock C. W. American.)

Colonel, the Hon. Thomas Talbot was the fourth son of Lord Talbot de Malahide, and was born at Malahide Castle on the 19th July, 1770, and consequently died in his 83rd year. In very early life he entered the army, and served for a short time under the Duke of York in Holland. He soon however, returned to England:—the result, it is said of a coolness which occurred between the Royal Duke and himself, consequent upon some observations made by the latter on certain amusements of the former, which he thought unbecoming a General Officer in face of an enemy. This is reported to have been followed by another disappointment of a private and delicate nature which induced Col. Talbot to leave England, and proceeding to Canada in 1791, to accept the post of private secretary to General Simcoe, Governor of the Colony. He afterwards received a grant of 5000 acres of land as a Lt. Colonel in the army; and subsequently a further extensive tract, principally in the Townships of Dunwich and Aldboro', was given him on conditions of settlement; under which Col. Talbot became possessed of 150 acres for every fifty acres taken up by a bona fide settler. He, moreover had obtained from Government compensation for war losses and a pension. So that although he encountered great hardships, and had done the Province good service by carrying civilization and improvement into the wilderness, and had also gallantly aided in defence of the colony during the last American war, it must be admitted that rewards were bestowed with a lavish hand. Col. Talbot was for many years a Member of the Legislative Council of the Province, where his opinions were looked up to by all parties; in politics he was an unbending Tory, and in 1837-38 strenuously supported the Queen's authority against all attacks from within and without. In his dealings with the settlers, and others in his own tract, he was universally popular,—always kind and considerate, he frequently contributed to their comforts and their wants, at personal inconvenience, with his own hand, His eccentricities are sufficiently well known in the Province to require no lengthened notice—for many years he remained a perfect woman-hater, and would admit no females within the precincts of his retirement—he was impatient of intrusion (particularly by Americans, for whom he seemed to entertain an innate antipathy) though generous in his hospitality, and exhibiting the manners and deportment of a highly finished gentleman, to those whom he thought proper to entertain. He possessed a highly cultivated mind, stored with information and endued with a retentive memory that frequently created surprise and which he retained to the last. Colonel Talbot was frequently visited in his retreat by travellers of distinction, amongst whom may be named the present Duke of Northumberland, Lords Althorp, Stanley and Wharncliffe; but to the talented and great alone was not his hospitality confined, and many of his fellow colonists, more particularly of later years, can testify to the hearty welcome that awaited them, when they passed the confines of his seclusion. Three years before his death Colonel Talbot deeded to his nephew Colonel Airy, now secretary at the Horse Guards, all the lands he owned in Aldboro', between 25,000 and 30,000 and also the estate on which he resided at Port Talbot; the residue of his property, valued at £70,000 pounds, he left to George Macbeth, Esq., who lately joined him in this country from England, and whom he had adopted as his heir. He made also a charge of £20 a year as an annuity to the wife of his old servant Geoffrey Hunter, for whose children he had previously made provision. Colonel Talbot's death, which occurred on the morning of the 5th instant, at London, where he had shortly before taken up his abode, was the result of a paralysis; and his remains were consigned to the grave at Tyrconnel, in accordance with his own wish and near his own residence, on the 9th inst. His funeral was attended by a large concourse of sorrowing friends. Of all his family only two sisters survive him—Mrs. Cunliffe Lister Kaye and Mrs. Fitzgerald.

REPUTATION AFTER DEATH.—It is very singular how the fact of a man's death seems to give people a truer idea of his character, whether for good or evil, than they ever possessed while he was living and acting among them. Death is so genuine a fact, that it excludes falsehoods, or betrays their emptiness; it is a touchstone that proves the gold and dishonors the baser metal. Could the departed, whoever he may be, in a week after his decease return, he would almost invariably find himself at a higher or lower point than he had formerly occupied on the scale of public appreciation.—Hawthorne.

AN APPEAL

TO THE WOMEN OF THE FREE STATES OF AMERICA ON THE PRESENT CRISIS IN OUR COUNTRY.

BY MRS. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

The Providence of God has brought our nation to a crisis of most solemn interest.

A question is now pending in our National Legislature which is most vitally to affect the temporal and eternal interests, not only of ourselves, but of our children, and our children's children for ages yet unborn.—Through our nation it is to affect the interests of Liberty and Christianity throughout the whole world.

Of the woes, the injustice and the misery of Slavery it is not needful to speak. There is but one feeling and one opinion on this among us all. I do not think there is a mother among us all who clasps her child to her breast who could ever be made to feel it right that that child should be a slave; not a mother among us all who would not rather lay that child in its grave.

Nor can I believe that there is a woman so unchristian as to think it right to inflict on her neighbor's child what she would think worse than death were it inflicted on her own. I do not think there is a wife who would think it right that her husband should be sold to a trader, and worked all life without rights and without wages. I do not believe there is a husband who would think it right that his wife should be considered, by law, the property of another man, and not his own. I do not think there is a father or mother who would believe it right were they forbidden by law to teach their children to read. I co not believe there is a brother who would think it right to have his sister held as property, with no legal defence for her personal honor, by an man living.

All this is inherernt in Slavery. It is not the abuse of Slavery, but the legal nature of it. And there is not a woman in the United States, when the question is fairly put before her, who thinks these things are right.

However ambition and the love of political power may blind the stronger sex, God has given to woman a deeper and a more immovable knowledge in those holier feelings which are peculiar to womanhood, and which guard the sacredness of the family state.

But though our hearts have bled over this wrong, there have been many things tending to fetter our hands, to perplex our efforts, and to silence our voice. We have been told that to speak of it was an invasion of the rights of other States. We have been told of promises and of compacts, and the natural expression of feeling has in many cases been restrained by an appeal to those honorable sentiments which respect the keeping of engagements.

The warm beatings of many hearts have been hushed, our yearning and sympathies have been repressed, because we have not known what to do; and many have come to turn a deaf ear to the whole tale of sorrow, because uuwilling to harrow up the soul with feeling, were action was supposed to be impossible.

But a time has now come when the subject is arising under quite another aspect.

The question is not now, Shall the wrongs of Slavery exist, as they have, on their own territories? but shall we permit them to be extended over all the free territories of the United States? Shall the woes and miseries of Slavery be extended over a region of fair, free, unoccupied territory, nearly equal in extent to the whole of the Free States?

Nor is this all; this is not the last that is expected or intended. Should this movement be submitted to in silence, should the North consent to this breach of solemn contract on the part of the South, there yet remains one more step to be apprehended, viz.: the legalizing of Slavery throughout the free States. By the decision of the Supreme Court in the Louisiana case, it may be declared lawful for slave property to be held in the northern free States. Should this come to pass, it is no more improbable that there may be, four years hence, slave depots in New York City, than it was, four years ago, that the South would propose a repeal of the "Missouri Compromise."

Women of free States! the question is not, Shall we remonstrate with Slavery on its own soil? but are we willing to receive Slavery into the free States and territories of the Union?

Shall the whole power of these United States go into the hands of Slavery? Shall every State in it be thrown open as a slave State? This will be the final result and issue of the question which is now pending.—This is the fearful crisis at which we stand. And now, is there anything which the women of a country can do? Oh, women of the free States! what did your brave mothers do in the time of our revolutionary struggle? Did not liberty in those days feel the strong impulse of woman's heart?

Never was there a great interest agitating the community when woman's influence was not felt for good or for evil. At the time when the struggle for the abolition of the slave trade was convulsing England, women contributed more than any other laborers to that great triumph of humanity. The women and children of England to a great extent refused to receive into their families the sugar raised by the suffering slaves.—Seventy thousand families refused the use of sugar, as a testimony to their abhorrence of the manner in which it was produced.—At that time women were unwearied in passing from house to house, distributing tracts and books, and presenting the subject in families.

One lady alone called on and conversed in this way with more than two thousand families, and others were not behind her in their labors.

The women all over England were associated in corresponding circles for prayer and for labor. Petitions to Government were gotten up and signed by women.

During my recent visit in England I was called to the bedside of an aged mother in Israel, whose prayers and labors on earth are well nigh ended, but who had borne this sacred cause in her heart from the very commencement. I was never more impressed than when, raised in her bed, with quivering lips and streaming eyes, she lifted her hands solemenly in prayer to God that He would bless the labors for the cause of the slave in America, and at last bring on the final abolition of Slavery through the world.

Women of America! we do not know with what thrilling earnestness the hopes and the eyes of the world are fastend on our country, and with what intenseness they desire that we should take decided ground for universal liberty. This sacred desire is spread through the lower and working class ses of other countries, as well as through those in higher ranks.

When I was in England, although I distinctly stated that the raising of money was no part of my object, and, on account of the state of my health, declined to take any responsibility of that kind, yet money was actually pressed upon me unsolicited from the mere impulse to do something for this cause. Most affecting letters were received from poor working men and women, inclosing small sums in postage stamps, for this object.

Nor has this feeling been confined to England alone; in France, Switzerland and Germany, there has been the same deep emotion. A lady in Stuttgard undertook to make a collection for an Americian Anti-Slavery fair, and while contributions from all ranks freely flowed in, a poor peasant and his wife in the neighborhood took down from the walls of their cottage two prints, probably the only superfluities they possessed on earth, and sent them to the collection.

During my stay, I heard from Christians of all denominations how deeply their souls had been moved in prayer for America, in view of this evil. A Catholic lady from the old town of Orleans wrote of her intention to offer special supplications after the manner of her faith. In a circle of Profestant pastors and Christians in Switzerland, I heard the French language made eloquent in pleadings with God that America might have grace given her to right the cause of the oppressed.

Why all this emotion in foreign lands! Is it not because the whole world has been looking towards America with hope, as a nation specially raised up by God to advance the cause of liberty and religion?

There had been a universal expectation that the next step taken by America would surely be one which should have a tendency to right this great wrong. Those who are struggling for civl and religious freedom in Europe speak this word Slavery in sad whispers, as one names the fault of a revered friend. They can scarce believe the advertisements which American papers bring to them, of slave sales; of men, women and children traded like cattle. Scarcely can they trust their eyes when they read the laws of the slave States and the decisions of their Courts. The advocates of despotism hold these things up to them, and say, "See what becomes of republican liberty!"—Hitherto the answer has been, America is more than half free, and she certainly will, in time repudiate Slavery altogether.

But what can they say now, if, just as the great struggle for human rights is commencing throughout Europe, America opens all her free territories to the most unmitigated despotism? This will be not merely betraying American liberty, but the cause of liberty throughout the world.

And while all the nations are moved in view of this subject of American Slavery, shall we only be unmoved? Shall even the poor laboring man and woman of Europe be so pressed in view of the wrongs of the Slave as to inquire, what can we do? and we wives and mothers, and sisters of America, sit down content to do nothing in such a crisis as this?

What, then, is the duty of American women at this time? The first duty is for each woman for herself, thoroughly to understand the subject, and to feel that as mother, wife, sister, or as member of society, she is bound to give her influence on the right side.

In the second place, women can make exertions to get up petitions in their particular districts to our National Legislature. They can take measures to communicate information in their vicinity. They can employ lecturers to spread the subject before the people of their town or villiage. They can circulate the speeches of our members in Congress, and in many other ways secure a full understanding of the present position of our country.

Above all, it seems to be necessary and desirable that we should make this subject a matter of earnest prayer. The present crisis in the history of the world is one which calls upon all who believe in an Almighty Guardian and Ruler of Nations to betake themselves to His throne.

A conflict is now commencing between the forces of liberty and despotism throughout the world. We, who are Christians, and believe in the sure word of prophecy, know that fearful convulsions and over-turnings are predicted before the coming of Him who is to rule the earth in righteousness. How important in this crisis that all who believe in prayer should retreat beneath the shadows of the Almighty.

It is a melancholy but unavoidable result of such great encounters of principle that they always tend to degenerate intos ectional and personal bitterness. It is this liability which forms one of the most solemn and affecting features of the crisis now presented. We are on the eve of a conflict which will try men's souls, and strain to their utmost tension the bonds of brotherly union which bind this nation together.

Let us pray that, in the agitation of this question between the North and the South, the war of principle may not become a mere sectional conflict, degenerating into the encounter of physical force. Let us raise our hearts to Him who has the power to restrain the wrath of man, that he will avert these consequences, which our sins as a nation have so justly deserved.

And as far as our social influence extends, let us guard against indiscriminate bitterness and vituperation.

Doubtless there are noble minds at the South who do not participate in the machinations of their political leaders, whose sense of honor and justice is outraged by this proposition, equally with our own.

While, then, we seek to sustain the cause of free principle unwaveringly, let us hold it also to be our true office, as women, to moderate the acrimony of political contest, remembering that the slaveholder and the slave are alike our brethern whom the law of God commands us to love as ourselves.

For the sake of both, for the sake of our dear children, for the sake of our common country, for the sake of outraged and struggling liberty throughout the world, let every woman of America now do her duty.

Not a week or day passes without an immense increase of the agitation on the slavery question, for that is the true issue, which Mr. Douglas has presented. Last week we gave extracts from papers in different parts of the country, exhibiting the feeling on the subject in different localities.

We propose now to follow up these evidences of the agitation commenced by Douglas and the present "compromise" administration. We think we suceeded last week, in showing that this scheme of getting slavery admitted into Nebraska had been concocting for the last fifteen years. We are much mistaken if those persons who were most active in staring the project of the compromise of 1850, did not contemplate the repeal of the Missouri comprise whenever the people of the North should seem to have settled down quietly under that "adjustment." The step evidently contemplated then is now taken. The agitation with which the country is now convulsed is but the low murmuring of the wind that precedes the mighty whirlwind. Even now, many of the politicians of the North tremble before the yet but half awakened indignation of their constituency. They have sown to the wind and they will reap the whirlwiud, and be swept by it from their present positions.—Parties will be broken up, old land-marks forsaken, and the elements of a living party be gathered together which will reap the reward hoped for by those who started the iniquitious scheme. Even now, the Administration, which has made a pet of the Nebraska bill, begins to waver. A sound comes np to the white house, like the voice of many waters, and the occupant faintly sees written upon the walls, "Ichabod—glory departed."—Philadelphia Daily Register.

THE HOMESTEAD BILL.—The bill which has been pending in the House for some time, providing that any "free white person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and is a citizen of the United States, shall be entitled to enter, free of cost, on one quarter section of vacant and unappropriated land, which at the time of his application may be subject to private entry at $1.25 per acre," has passed that body by a vote of 107 yeas to 72 nays. A motion was made to strike out the word "white," but it failed, the vote standing 102 to 78. This is bad enough, but the number of voices in favor of making no distinction on account of color is quite encouraging.—Pennsylvania Freeman.

Hon. Gerrit Smith is rapidly vindicating himself from the charge of being a man of but one idea. The danger now is, that the nation will come to regard him as a man with altogether too many ideas. No important subject has yet come fairly before the body of whicn he is member, since his entrance into the House, upon which he has not shown that he has ideas abundant in number, and of excellent quality. It is a surprise to some who supposed they knew him, that he is so often and so well prepared to address the House. Mr. Smith has just made a a speech on the Homestead bill, marked with all that clearness, force and beauty of eloquence, for which he is so eminently distinguished.—Frederick Douglass's Paper.

Fugitive Slaves in Canada.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness ard over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from Slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom, for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him. Lastly, his social elevation, by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slaves for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned,) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government, and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon race, or any other of the one great human family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall, the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. WARD, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada, and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony,—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B. GRIBBLE, of St. Paul's, East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. THOMAS JAMES, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on their arrival in Canada, after effecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for the carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number."

Sundry small sums.	1	5	6

Attention is respectfully invited, to the Circular above, of the Committee of Gentlemen, formed to aid in carrying out the objects for which Mr. Ward, the Agent of the Canada Society, visits Great Britain. The whole story is pretty clearly set forth, and the many noble, influential and highly respectable persons, whose names and donations are affixed, give convincing proof that to be an enemy to American Slavery, in England, does not imply an inferior rank in society; neither is it attended with any humiliating consequences; nor do the donors seem to be troubled with that sort of sympathy, that exhausts itself in speeches, but leaves the refugee in worse plight than before. The speeches made by the friends of the cause, at the different meetings, held by Mr. Ward, have been singularly pertinent and effective, as will be seen in future issues, in which many of those speeches, and also, the Agent's, will be given.

Indeed, it is due to the good people of Canada, as well as to that class of the colored people for whose especial benefit he went abroad, that something more should be known of his operations than the very brief accounts published in the Anti-Slavery papers in the States, or the occasional allusions made by Correspondents of Canada papers. For the present number, a word about his tour may suffice. *

WAR!

The London Correspondent of the Colonist writing of the war says:—

During the whole past week, troops have been moving towards the scene of contention: and within ten days from this time, the elite of the British and French armies will be in Constantinople! It is not to be supposed, however, that they will remain in that capital: for the city itself is not at present exposed to any attack from which it needs to be defended. The ulterior destination of the fifty thousand men furnished by the Western Powers is undoubtedly the Danube: and Heaven grant they may arrive there in time. Appearances begin to look rather ugly in that direction.—Immense masses of Russians are moving on Kalafat from all sides; and although Omar Pasha has intrenched himself in a position which is certainly impregnable so long as the contesting forces are about equal, he will have hard work to maintain his ground against an enemy three times more numerous than his own army. There seems every reason to suppose that the Russian Generals will push on to strike a blow before the French and English forces arrive; and it may be that their superior weight may crush the gallant foes whom they never could conquer. But the communication with Constantinople is fully open to the Turkish generalissimo; and a strong body of marines could soon be despatched to his aid from our fleets, if that were all. It is not unlikely that our ships have remained at Constantinople with some such object as this; indeed, only a strong object could have brought them off their cruise in the Euxine—a step which has received great blame.

You will see that the discussions in Parliament have turned almost exclusively on this topic. Even the new Reform Bill has been forgotten in the excitement about "the war;" and miscellaneous topics have all given way to the votes for the army and navy. The fact is a nation, like a man, can only do one thing well at a time; and England means to do this war well, depend upon it.

As a further proof of the courage and high-heartedness with which we view the struggle in which we are about to engage, let me call your attention to the state of the funds. They are rising every hour! The nearer the fight, the greater the confidence. Business, too, continues remarkably good, and money, ashamed to skulk and hide itself, is to be met with every where in the greatest abundance. Our food markets are dear of course; and are likely to remain so. The two opposite shores of the atlantic must do a fine stroke of business this year. Your breadstuffs—our manufactures—and Australian gold—will furnish great prosperiiy to trade in 1854.

Wheat declined 4d., and Flour declined 2s. Corn declined 2s.

Austria adheres to the Allies.

The Pacific arrived at Havre, 28th ult.

Every power in Europe continues to arm, France, England and Russia, on an immense scale.

Sir Charles Napier, is appointed to the Command of the Baltic fleet, and Admiral Seymour, 2nd in command.

There are over 27 ships assembled at Spithead.

A report from a private source yet unconfirmed says the Czar has laid an Embargo on British Shipping in Russian Ports on the Danube.

Deep snow had prevented the movements of either army. The Russians are making ostentatious preparations. Omar, evidently aware of their plans, was making dispositions to check them.

Nothing later from the Danube or Asia.

The Times' Vienna Correspondent says, under date of 2d, that an Austrian Manifesto is about to announce, that the Austrians will occupy Bosniaf and Servia; and there was a panic, in consequence, on the Vienna Bourse.

The St. Petersburg Journal, of the 24th, contains the following, as the substance of the answer sent by the Czar to the Emperor Napoleon:

"If his Imperial Majesty extends his hand to me as I extend mine, I am ready to forget the mortification I have experienced, harsh though it be—then, but then only, can I discuss the subject treated of in your letter, and may perhaps, arrive at an understanding. Let the French fleet prevent the Turks from transporting reinforcements to the theatre of war, and let the Turks send me a plenipotentiary to negociate, whom I will receive as befits his character. The conditions already made known to the conference at Vienna are the sole basis on which I will consent to treat."

The Government has decided in conjunction with the Western Powers, to summon Russia to evacuate the Principalities and if necessary to supply a force to compel her to do so.

The papers publish Hamburgh letters of February 28th, which state that the Russian fleet, were preparing to leave Cronstadt, to gain the sea before the arrival of the combined fleets.

The Coming Strife.

(From the London Times.)

The notes of preparation are heard on all sides, and in a few weeks the Emperor of All the Russias will find himself everywhere face to face with an indignant antagonist, that antagonist being little less than the whole civilized world. We need not refer to the vast preparations reported from the other side of the Channel; for France will be only too ready to beat us in the race of honor. Our own army is immediately to be augmented by 11,000 men. The navy afloat is already the most powerful ever possessed by England. Seamen are coming in rapidly, attracted partly by the improved condition of the service, partly by the prospect of prize-money at the breaking out of the war. Coast-guards, to the number of 1500, are immediately to be embarked as a nucleus for the crews of the newly-commissioned ships. They are admirably adapted for this purpose, being trained seamen, and the more necessary now, as good hands are apt to be slow to join a raw and incomplete crew, in which their is plenty of hard work, and that not of the most agreeable kind. By the time the Baltic is free, and the ice is already breaking up, the strongest fleet its waters ever bore will shut up the Russian at his northern outlet as effectually as he is now closed in the Black Sea. The command is, we believe, to be given to Sir Chas. Napier, and under him we shall have Captain, now Admiral Chads, of the Excellent, who has done so much to bring naval gunnery, to its present perfection. At the next Council, perhaps today, a proclamation will be issued against manufaturing or supplying arms, ammunition, and ships-of-war, to the enemy, with a warning that such will be seized by the British Government. A few days will remove all doubt, and the Russian, sealed in his own ports as effectually as by his own winter's ice, will have no way of egress except over the territory of States who have already declared that such forcible passage will be considered a declaration of war. Humanly speaking, the Russian is as little able to cope with us on our element as we should be, single-handed, with him on his own vast territory. It only remains to be seen how the people, the merchants, the nobles of Russia, indeed every class for there, as here, all classes are interested in peace and commercial prosperity—will endure to be close up like bees in a hive, smothered, starved, and with no little chance of being eventually destroyed. It is so often boasted by the advocates of despotism that it has checks of its own as effectual for all practical purposes as those of a so-called constitutional government. When they may be it is not for us to say, but, if the boast be true, we presume that Russia will speak out in one way or another, and the Emperor will at least be compelled to purchase peace, and, with it, leave to sail out of his own ports, by withdrawing his armies within his own frontiers.

After the soft pastorial strain in which these questions have been discussed for the last generation, the people of England will find it difficult to realize the horrid presence of war. They will not recoil from its risks, but they will be slow to count the cost, not in money, heavy as that may be, but in blood, in distraction, in the hardening of the feelings, in the interruption of social progress, and in that political saturnalia by which the worse elements of society, rude felling and brute force, become for the time the stronger.—Yet, as war in a righteous cause is sometimes inevitable, it has certainly its beneficial influences, and they are to be found in the greater firmness, seriousness, constancy, sense of honor, and heroism that war ever has produced, even in the rudest natures and the worst times. The very idea of heroism is almost inseparably associated with that of a military life, and a whole nation engaged in war, deeply interested in it, contributing to its costs, its losses, its triumphs, and its pains, may well derive from it a certain elevation of character not so easily acquired in the ordinary school of peace.

Mr. Newdegate inquired recently in the British House of Commons, whether there was any law in Canada, or in any part of Her Majesty's dominions, under which a subjec could be imprisoned for not taking his hat off to the Host, as borne by Roman Catholics, upon the Highway. He based his enquiry upon the conviction of Narcisse Filan at Beauport, near Quebec, on the 9th of June last. The circumstances of the arrest and conviction was narrated by Mr. Newdegate with tolerable accuracy. The Under Secretary of the Colonies, Mr. Peel, stated that he knew of no law that would compel a man to take off his hat upon the Highway upon the occasino of such processions; but he added that there was a Provincial Statute which provided for the punishment of persons who interrupted public worship. The matter ended, by the Government promising to inquire into it.

AFFAIRS IN INDIA.

The news from Burmah is still unfavourable. Captain Latter the deputy commissioner of Prome, and the most active of the frontier politicals, has been assassinated. Since the detection of the conspiracy of Rangoon, he had been very active in collecting information regarding the plans of the war party at Ava, a service for which his intimate knowledge of the Burmese language and character peculiarly fitted him. He had given orders that the sentries should allow his spies, who were usually disguised as women, to pass unquestioned at all hours, and in consequence of such orders, the assassins who entered Capt. Latter's quarters disguised as women, on the night of the 8th were allowed to pass unnoticed. He was murdered when asleep, and so quietly did the assassins effect their object, that it was not until the next morning that his dead body was found in his bed, pierced with three dagger wounds—one in the neck, one in the right side, and one in the heart. His death must have been instantaneous. A woman's scarf was thrown over the corpse, (an indignity, according to Burmao estimation,) and the murderers effected their escape so noiselessly that the precise time that they left Captain Latter's quarters is unknown.

The north west frontier is tranquil. The forts in the Kohat Pass, are being proceeded with, and the Affredees, having been promised twice their former amount of black mail for keeping the pass open, appear for the present reconciled to their erection.

The Murees again threatened to be troublesome in Upper Scinde, and an expedition against them is talked of. It is said that a few days before the last accounts they had collected a large body at the margin of the hill country, having with them the guns they took from Clibourne's detachment in 1846, for the purpose of a descent on the plains, but they found that Jacob was on the alert, and so preferred discretion, and made no attempt to break cover.

Madras is threatened by a famine. Last monsoon was very unfavourable and the crops have generally failed; as yet there is only a severe scarcity, grain not being more than double the usual price; but it is now only the commencement of the dry season, and it is feared that this scarcity must before long become a famine. Government has removed the import duties on rice, and large public works will be commenced for the employment of the people. The evil is augmented by the ill-feeling against the grain merchants usual in such cases. The collector of Nellore has applied to government to coerce the grain dealers, but has been very properly rebuked; but the apprehension of such coercion, either by authority or by mob, is of course a serious discouragement to the importation of grain. At Nellore the mob has already sacked the bazaar and granaries, carrying off every grain of food they could find.

The territory of Nagpore, or Berar, which has just lapsed to the British, is one of the ten States in India with which subsidiary alliances had been contracted. It has an area of 76,432 square miles, a population of 4,750,000, and a revenue of 4,908,560 rupees. The territory of Nagpore is nearly as large as that of Hyderabad, and as we have lately sequestered for debt, the greater portion of the Nizam's dominions lying north of the Godavery, we have now possession of two thirds of the great "island," lately shaded green, (as independent native territory,) in the centre of the maps of Hindostan. This green tint is everywhere disappearing before the red shade which denotes British domination, and every successive map of India affords a fresh illustration of the rapidity of the process.

The Nazam's dominions are in a worse state than ever; the government is utterly powerless, and the country is covered with bands of predatory Rohilla horse, sacking the villages, abusing the women, and fighting with the Arabs wherever they find them. One of these bands lately sacked Dalmapooree, (a town situated on the Godavery, about 120 miles from Hyderabad,) carrying of property to the value of £20,000, and abusing the women, three of whom, being of high caste, have destroyed themselves in consequence. Colonel Bremner, of the Fifteenth Madras Native Infantry, travelling by dark from Hyderabad with his wife and grown up daughter to take command in Nagpore, was attacked by one of these bands. The Colonel was severely beaten, and plundered of all his property, even to the bedding of the palanquin. Every particle of clothing on the persons of the travellers was taken away, and they were indebted afterwards to the good nature and sympathy of the dawk runners at the nearest stage for some simple native clothing, with which they were obliged to be content until relief was sent them from Kamptee and Secunderabad.

SUPPOSED ATTEMPT TO BREAK INTO WINDSOR CASTLE.—Next to setting the Thames on fire a burglarious entrance into Windsor Castle would appear to be the most impossible thing to effect, and yet there is every reason to be believed the attempt has been made. It is stated, on reliable authority, that Colonel the Hon. A. N. Hood, of Cumberland-lodge, Clerk-Marshall to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, arrived at the Windsor terminus of the South-Western Railway, by the last train about midnight on Monday. When the South-Western Station was erected, some three years ago, a private carriage-road was made at the foot of the Slopes to the castle, the entrance being immediately opposite Her Majesty's Waiting-room. The road is used only by members of the Royal family and by gentlemen attached to the Royal household. On leaving the train last Monday night Colonel Hood proceeded by the Slopes, as the nearest way to the Castle, and was not a little surprised to encounter in his walk seven or eight men with their faces blackened and their feet muffled, if he might judge by the noiseless character of their movements. The ruffians fled at the approach of the hon. and gallant gentleman, and have not since been heard of. On inquiry, it appeared that the suspect burglars were observed by the sentinel on duty at the corner of Prince of Wale's Tower (on the basement of which is the gold pantry,) and that he, looking down from the Terrace, threatened to fire upon them. To this they replied, that if he attempted to fire, or give the alarm, they would blow his brains out. The hostile parley had proceeded thus far, when Colonel Hood entered by the lodge-gate in Datchet-lane, and the burglars doubtless supposed that he was at the head of a party sent to capture them. This will account for their precipitate flight and subsequent escape. On the arrival of Colonel Hood at the Castle, the police were ordered to patrol the Slopes for the remainder of the night, but the search proved generally nothing likely to excite suspicion or furnish any article as a clue to the apprehension of the burglars.

The affair has created a great sensation in the castle, and will cause the palace servants to be HANDLED more strictly than ever, especially those of the beer cellar.

From Frederick Douglass's Paper

LETTER FROM GERRIT SMITH, M. C.

WASHINGTON, March 6th, 1854.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS:—MY DEAR SIR:—An hour ago, I gave my vote against the Homestead Bill: and, that too, notwithstanding I had made a speech in favor of it: and that too, notwithstanding I have, for so many years, loved, and advocated, and acted on, the great essential principles of the Bill.

My apparent inconsistency in this case is explained by the fact, that, just before we were called to vote on the Bill, it was so amended, as to limit its grant of land to white persons.

If my fellow land-reformers, with whom I have, so long, toiled for the success of our land-reform doctrines, shall be aggrieved by my vote, I shall be sorry. Nevertheless, I can never regret my vote. I was a man before I was a land-reformer. And, for the sake of no gains, however great, or however many, can I consent to ignore the claims and even the fact itself, of a common manhood. But the advantages, which are sought, at the expense of trampling on human rights, are not gains. Such gains are losses—even to those, who get them. The Homestead Bill would have been purchased at too dear a rate had it proscribed only one negro, or only one Indian. The curse of God is upon the Bill, or there is no God. There is no God, if we have liberty to insult and outrage any portion of his children.

To reconcile me to the Bill as amended, I was told by one of the Members of Congress, that the colored people would not be shut out from the public lands:—but that they could still buy them! That is, the colored people must buy their homes, whilst the white people are to have free homes! What a comment this on the great justifying doctrine of negro-slavery, that the negroes are unable to take care of themselves! What a spectacle of merciless cruelty we present! The most frightful passages of history furnish no parallel to it. Our National Legislature joins our State Legislatures in holding out to the free colored people the hard alternative of returning under the yoke of slavery, or of being shut out from our broad continent. And, then, the excuse for this treatment is no less unreasonable and insulting than the treatment is cruel and murderous. It is, that the free colored people are too ignorant, and lazy, and worthless, to deserve any better choice than slavery or death.—And this is the excuse of those, who shut out the colored people from schools: and drive them into negro-pens; and banish them from society; and mark them as physical and moral lepers, to be everywhere shunned, and loathed, and hated!

That our free colored brethren should in these circumstances be no more discouraged and dejected; no more self-despairing, and self-despising; no lower in intelligence, and morality, and thrift, is to me amazing. That the mass of them should, notwithstanding the depressing, crushing influences upon them, be still rising and bettering their condition; and that there should be rapidly multiplying instances among them of the acquisition of wealth, and of distinction in writing, and oratory, and general scholarship, is more than I had supposed to be possible.

Your friend,
GERRIT SMITH.

DISCUSSION ON COLONIZATION.

From the Norristown (Pa.) Olive Branch.

The discussion of the Colonization question, between Rev. J. Morris Pease and Samuel Aaron, came off last Wednesday and Thursday nights, according to announcement, and although a shilling admittance was charged, the Hall was most densely crowded. Colonization has been "the order of the day" in this place, for several weeks, and yet the interest of the people on the subject seems to be still increasing.

Being so near the close of the week, our paper was nearly ready to go to press, and we cannot give any extensive report of the discussion.

The friends of both champions came there with sanguine hopes of victory—each party believing that Truth was on their side, and their respective chiefs were competent to maintain it. The result is before the community, and any opinion we express will not change the opinion of those who were present. We believe that all feel that Mr. Pease was signally routed.

It is the opinion of many that such a brilliant victory as that of Mr. Aaron, was never gained more easily.

We are moderate in our opinions, we are ultra on anything. We prefer to be governed by calm understanding, rather than by feeling. We went to the discussion we think without bias, without prejudice—willing and anxious to yield our pre-dilections should we be convinced. We went there to reach the truth if possible, and we now state, in all sincerity, that the Colonization scheme, as a means to redeem Africa, and as a means to elevate the colored race of this country, was totally refuted. Mr. Pease's previous statements touching that measure were fully and fairly invalidated.

During his lectures last week, he made many sweeping and improbable statements and assertions. Some of these were nailed most effectually before his very eyes. For instance, he asserted, that Lieut. Forbes, of the British navy, had been discharged from service, because he declared that slavery existed in Liberia some years ago. Mr. Aaron proved that said officer was never cashiered, and still continued in the British Navy. Mr. Pease had asserted that the genius of Colonization had emancipated eight hundred thousand slaves in thirty-five years. Mr. Aaron proved—as every school-boy might now—that the number of slaves emancipated in that period of time, by all the influences put together, have not exceeded fifty thousand—only fourteen hundred having been emancipated during the past year. Mr. Aaron's remarks on these two statements, Mr. Pease did not notice at all—he did not attempt an explanation and passed them by in silence. Being thus convicted of gross and inexcusable misstatements, his veracity as a man is self-impeached, and thus his "facts" lose all credibility in general.

Mr. Aaron next endeavored to show that Colonization was founded on prejudice against color. To prove this he called upon Bishop Payne, of the African Methodist Church, to testify that Dr. Durbin, an eminent Colonizationist, had told him (Bishop Payne) so in conversation some time ago.—Mr. Pease had the meanness to call in question the Bishop's testimony, and demanded his credentials, which he received the next night. Mr. Aaron called upon Mrs. Mason, the wife of a Presbyterian Missionary in Liberia, who returned from that country ix months ago, on account of her health. She stated that the climate was exceedingly unhealthy, and that the emigrants suffered greatly from disease; that it was a particularly unfavorable country for the poor—wages low and employment scarce, as the Colonists have their work done by enslaved natives—and that the poor suffer for want of all the necessaries of life; that no effort is made to instruct the natives, and that they are not admitted in church; that servitude there is as bad as American slavery—that natives are bought and sold, and beaten as here; that it was next to impossible for the poor to get away from there, as they could not raise the means to pay their passage—she knew great numbers of emigrants who wanted to come back, but they could not get away: that letters were intercepted at the Post Office and examined, and if unfavorable to the Colony, they would not be sent; that President Roberts, and other dignitaries traveled on the backs of the natives as we do on horse back, (the last statement of Mrs. M., Mr. Pease acknowledged as true,) and many things of the same sort.

Mrs. Gantts, another colored lady recently returned from Africa testified to the same things. Mr. Pease again had the meanness to impugn the statements of those women, though he had never been there himself. He was ready to brand every body as a liar who would not corroborate his own "facts," though many of them had previously been proven to be false. He read a long list of Reverends, Right Reverends, Generals, Honorables, &c., &c., as members of different Colonization Societies, to prove that it is a good thing. (The same list of dignitaries might be read to prove that Slavery and the Rum-traffic are good things.) He read long and prosy letters from interested parties in Africa, published in his own paper, lauding Liberia, as a paradise.

On the 2nd evening, these women brought letters proving they sustained unimpeachable characters, and were prominent members of Churches in Philadelphia—their own pastor being present to testify to their merit.

Mr. Aaron called Mr. John D. Phares, of this Borough, who spent several years on the coast of Africa, and who corobborated all the ladies had said—except the intercreption of letters,—of that he had no knowledge. He affirmed most impliecitly, that slavery, in its worst form existed Liberia, &c. Mr. Pease again had the extreme courtesy to question the veracity of this man, and to disprove it he read the Constitution of the Colony.

These statements are highly probable—they are exactly what we would expect from a Colony founded by such influence. The emigrants are mostly slaves, emancipated for the purpose. They are taught here by the society sending them, that slavery is right—that extortions and violence are justifiable—that might makes right, and what is to hinder them from making slaves of the natives? Their previous education, their religion, and their ideas of republicanism do not, and now we ask what can restrain them from it when the inducement is presented?

The last speech of Mr. Aaron was a magnificent effort. He urged the people to remember that this array of living witnesses were more trustworthy, than the letters of the interested men of the Society—that the Colonization scheme was the truckling tool of the Slave Power—that it was originated and controlled by slave-holders for their peculiar interests. He read from Mr. Pease's own letter to an Alabama Planter, assuring him that Colonization would not interfere with the Slave system in the remotest degree. He depicted the cruelty and injustice of the scheme, and the duplicity of some of its prominent votaries, with thrilling eloquence and power. In sober truth, every statement and argument advanced by Mr. P., was promptly met, and most triumphantly refuted.

Mr. P. has made no converts here—at least none to his side, that's certain. We would advise him to go to Africa himself, and try to remove some of the evils of that country before he urges the colored people to go there—he need not be afraid of dying, for if he has faith that Africa is to be redeemed by his efforts, God will spare his life there. These are our honest sentiments?

P.S.—There was a Stenographic reporter on the stage the first evening—on the second evening he was absent. What was the matter?

THE PEACE DEPUTATION AT ST. PETERSBURG.

A letter was received on the 26th by Mr. Pease, of Darlington, England, from his brother at St. Petersburg.

Mr. Pease states that the deputation was admitted to an audience of the Emperor, which lasted half an hour. The Emperor received them most graciously, and expressed himself much pleased with the object of their visit, and the motive which induced them to make so long a journey. The Emperor afforded them every opportunity to express their views and stated to them at great length what he thought of the present state of affairs. He said they should not leave without being introduced to the Empress, and on the Empress entering the room the Emperor explained the object of their journey. On taking their leave, the Emperor shook them heartily by the hand; and on quitting the palace they were much struck by the cordial reception given to three plain, humble, simple men of peace.

Mr. Joseph Sturge, another of the deputation, states that the Czar received himself and colleagues in the most courteous manner, and listened with the greatest attention to the address which they were deputed to present to him from the pacific bodies which they represented. They were induced to hope from the tone and manner of the Emperor that he was not insensible to the appeal, although the deputation were not equally confident that it would have the effect of staying the warlike preparations which were going on all around them. At the conclusion of what may be termed the official audience, the Autocrat introduced the deputation to the Empress, by whom they where most graciously received. Although it was the wish of "the Friends" to be as quiet as possible during their stay in St. Petersburg, it appears that their presence in the capital of Russia creates no inconsiderable degree of interest among the inhabitants, and that when they are observed in the streets they are not unfrequently followed by crowds of persons who take a favourable interest in the object of their mission.

Mr. Sturge had intended to be in Birmingham on Monday next, but at the request of the Emperor the deputation have determined to remain in St. Petersburg a day or two longer than it was originally purposed to continue.

AN INCIDENT AMONG THE FREED MEN OF JAMAICA.

A correspondent of the Tribune writing from Kingston, Jamaica, gives the following illustration of what freedom has done for some of them who once wore the yoke of Slavery:

"I had attended an anti-slavery meeting at the period of the August festivities, which are always observed by the peasantry, at the free village of Hastings, situated about twelve miles from Falmouth, in an interior direction and was returning home late in the evening, somewhat fatigued with the labors of the day, when in passing through another free village, called Granville, a black boy ran after me, saying, "Mr. W———wishes to see you, sir." Reining in my steed, I inquired, "Who is Mr. W———?" Upon which the boy replied, pointing to a neat house at a little distance from the road; "He lives in that house, sir." Now, it so happened that I had been struck with the appearance of the very house, as I rode past in the morning. There was about it an air of comfort that proclaimed its owner as being well to do in the world, and I wondered to whom it belonged; some retired planter, who has laid by something handsome, thought I. Here, then, curiosity was to be gratified. I rode up the avenue in full expectation of meeting Mr. Canetop or Mr. Dunder.

On arriving at the entrance of the house, I was, to my surprise, met by a respectably dressed, and as afterward was shown, intelligent black man, who introduced himself to me as Mr. W———. He very positively asked me to walk in and take a glass of wine saying he had observed me at the meeting taking notes; I must be fatigued with that occupation, and my long ride, and must stand in need of refreshment, apologizing at the same time for what he called the liberty he had taken. I went into the house when I saw a long table laid with damask tablecloth, scrupulously white and clean, and set out with a handsome dinner service, among which some articles of silver spoons, etc., and cut glass ware figured conspicuously. There were present a number of black and dark colored young men and women, with some of whom I happened to be acquainted—among whom I noticed a very fine young black man, the stepson of W———, who had recently been married to a young woman who was also present. After a glass of wine it needed but very little pressing to induce one to partake of a substantial and even elegant dinner, and I spent one of the most pleasant evenings I have enjoyed, and did not reach Falmouth until 9 o'clock at night, which I did, highly delighted at the hospitality and the delicate politeness of my worthy host. And yet this man, previous to the first of August, 1838, had been a slave on a sugar estate. This is no isolated case. There are many in Trelawney and other parishes, who have got on as well as Mr. W———. The above mentioned incident carries with it its own commentary.

FOOTPRINTS OF SLAVERY.

The Buffalo Express contains the particulars of an attempt on the part of a Methodist clergyman of Missouri, the Rev. Pleasant Ellington, to obtain possession of the body and soul of John Freeman, a respectable colored man, who had resided several years at Indianapolis, and gained a competence and the respect of the people by his industry and good conduct. Ellington claimed him as his slave, a fugitive from his service in Kentucky, and having made oath that such were the facts, before a U. S. Commissioner, was in a fair way to reduce a free man to slavery, as was the case with Solomon Northup. But by the representations of the citizens of Indianapolis, who it seems were not anxious to get rid of their colored townsman, the Commissioner was induced to postpone his decision for sixty days, to permit Freeman to obtain evidence to oppose the claim, from Virginia, where he had lived a freeman. Leroy Patillo, an aged and respectable person, responded to the appeal of the endangered black man, and coming to Indiana at once recognized his old acquaintance, and maintained that he was no chattel. Ellington insisted upon further proof—and slaveholders in Alabama and Georgia testified in behalf of the injured colored man. He was saved; but the kidnapper let go his hold very reluctantly.—But for the public sympathy, and the prompt measures adopted, a man who owed no service to the task-master, either morally or legally, might have now been sweating under the lash of some brutal Legree. As it is, he has been put to an expense that swallows up all his little property. This is the sort of thing that Nebraska is menaced with. Men and brethren! shall it be accomplished?

Another case, differing somewhat from the above, although of but slightly greater hardship, has recently occured in New Orleans. It is well known that in the slave States, some of them, at least, the least taint of negro blood condemns the possessor to the condition of his mother, and there are numerous slaves as white as many whose descent is purely Caucasian. Several most distressing cases have been noted, and one in Baltimore not long since, in which this taint has subjected white women to cruel persecution. In New Orleans there resides a family named Pandelly, whose connections are extensive and influential. Some of them have been scholars and teachers of high repute. One of them recently became a member of the City Council, from which an attempt was made to eject him, on account of falsely alleged negro descent. The prosecution was abandoned, the charge being proved unfounded if not malicious; and the injured person instituted a suit for damages; which, however, were not awarded, notwithstanding the family had suffered severely from the scandal. It appears that the cross is of the Creole French with Indian blood. The great-grandmother to whom the several branches trace their descent, was the supposed daughter of an Indian mother by a father, and was known by the soubriquet of La belle Sauvagesse. The family name was Dimitry, and several of the sons have been distinguished as scholars. A daughter married a Mr. Pandelly, from whom descended the plaintiff in the case alluded to. His case was decided in his favor by the court; but he was made to suffer, in common with all his family, from this unjust prejudice, which the laws sustain against the descendants of colored persons.

Thus we see the barbaric features of Slavery exhibiting themselves on every hand. Are they such as commend the system to an enlightened Christian people?—Rochester Democrat.

THE ENGLISH POWER IN INDIA.

Count de Noe who has resided a long time in India, and is said to be thoroughly conversant with the resources of the British in that country, has addressed a communication to a Paris journal, upon the dangers that are generally believed to threaten the British Indian possessions, by invasion from Russia.

He is confident that the English have nothing to fear from an attack by Russia.—The reason he assigns for his belief are substantially as follows: The military power of England in that country is already great and increasing every day, both in men and materials of war. The military confederation of the Sikhs has ceased to exist, and their whole territory is annexed to the British possessions. The Russians would not find a single Indian nation which could or would wish to aid them in overcoming the English dominion. The Indians know the English well, and they have no knowledge of any other European nation, and they could not be persuaded to second a plot of any other nation, of whose manners and customs they are entirely ignorant. They fear that they would lose rather than gain by any change. With the English for their rulers, they see their religion, their property, and all their manners and customs respected; and they would not willingly hazard this state of things by a mere change of masters.

The difficulties of an attack upon the country by Russia are so great, intrinsically, that no one who is acquainted with the circumstances can entertain such an idea for a moment. The immense distance between the two countries; the extensive deserts to be traversed; the difficulty of sustaining an army, which for such an attack must be very numerous; the inconvenient routes by which troops and munitions of war must be transported; the water in certain parts of the deserts which it would be necessary to traverse; the fatigues and diseases incident to a change of, climate, and the certain loss of horses and beasts of barthen; all concur to demonstrate the absurdity of such an undertaking.

And even admitting that an expeditionary corps might arrive in good condition on the frontiers of India, who can doubt that the English would be fully prepared to receive them? They would have at their immediate command a numerous, powerful, courageous, well-disciplined and equipped, and well-fed army, ready for action. The issue of a first attack would certainly be in their favor, and such a check to an enemy without means of retreat or of succor or of reinforcements, would be fatal.

The alliance of Persia with Russia in an expedition against India, is considered by Count de Noe as an illusion. Persia has no good troops, and she would find in the Indian population on her frontiers inveterate enemies, who detest her, and who would under such circumstances be of great use to the English. The English, moreover, would only have to send a squadron into the Persian Gulf, to insure from that nation a speedy demand for peace.

The English army in India, including European troops and native militia, numbers 300,000 men. The latter are said to be excellent troops, and devotedly attached and faithful to their flag. The English have also a very considerable fleet, which would be efficient in the India seas; and it would be indispensably necessary, a sine qua non that any foreign power which should attack India should be mistress of the sea.—Boston Traveller.

THE ABBE DE LAMENNAIS, a zealous ecclesiastic during the first half of his life, and an anathematized, dissenting free-thinker during the latter portion, died last Monday, at the age of 72 years. He renounced his allegiance to the Church of Rome, in consequence of two interdicts launched by the Pope at a book and newspaper of his, in which he maintained that the church ought to be independent of the state in pecuniary matters. Since this separation, he has hated Popes and Popery, priests and priesthood, with very genuine fervour. He was a Carlist under Napoleon, and when the Bourbons were restored, commenced an opposition against them. He was fined 36 francs under Charles X. and imprisoned a year under Louis Philippe; under the republic, he was a leader of the Mountain. Since the coup d'etat he has been translating Dante, but has left nothing sufficiently advanced to be published. His life has been an exceedingly inconsistent and turbulent one, and the Churchmen consider his "works scandalous and his end deplorable." Two of his books, "Indifference," and "Thoughts of a Believer," are works that will last. His funeral took place yesterday. According to his last instructions, no religious rite was performed; the coffin was not carried to church on its way to the tomb, no prayer was said over the grave, no cross, stone or head-piece marked the spot where he was buried—which was in the common trench of the poor. In five years this trench will bs dug over again to receive more tenants. In all this M. de Lamennais is consistent with the pantheistic profession of the last years of his life; but it must be confessed that such an example, coming from a man of such brilliant intelligence and profound learning, is likely to exert a deplorable influence. The Government announced that as it heard the funeral was to be made the occasion for an anti-religious demonstration, it would allow none but the relatives of the deceased to follow the hearse. As Lamennais had ordered that only eight persons whom he named, should accompany his remains, the precautious of the police were needless. There was not the least crowd or disturbance.—Paris Correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune.

GROSS SUPERSTITION.—Incredible as it may appear, there are still persons to be found in Canada, who believe in the existence of witches, and of the practices formerly ascribed to them. In the neighbouring county of Russell lives an aged dame, whom the superstition of her neighbours has from some cause or other invested with the character of a witch, and to whose malevolent agency are ascribed all the cases of mental malady, and lingering sickness that have occurred for some years in the neigbourhood. On the principle, we suppose, that there is no poison to which Providence has not provided an antidote, the neighbourhood has also furnished a person of opposite sex, who has for some time followed the lucrative and pious occupation of exorcising the witch, at the rate of six dollars per victim. A clergyman from Bytown hearing of the absurd stories that were afloat, remonstrated with the man, and so far apparently with success, that he promised to forego his calling in future, although we have heard of his having restored any of the fees previously received by him for his supposed mastery over the Black Art.

To argue the enlightened persons from the supposed witch's vicinity, out of their belief in her supernatural league with the power of darkness, seems so far a hopeless task, and it is even at this moment believed that a person laboring under a disease of the liver is a victim of her diabolical machinations. An instance came under the personal knowledge of the writer two years ago in which the sickness of an individual was ascribed to her agency. Nor is it possible to reason persons, otherwise apparently intelligent, out of this belief, the Witch of Endor being appealed to as an unanswerable argument that such things can exist.—Bytown Citizen.

NUMBER TWO.

We know not what better caption to give our Leader, than the one above, for what we have to say is on various topics connected with the appearance of this number, and the future prospects of the Provincial Freeman.

When the first number was issued, all things looked dark and dreary, as to the prospects of this enterprise. Nobody knew how the Press would regard it. We did not know how Abolitionists would greet us, except that we knew of some of a peculiar sort, who would either regard us coldly or oppose us. How the Black People would respond to the effort, was doubtful, also, because there was much to be apprehended in the shape of combined foolishness and wickedness in certain quarters, of an interested and selfish sort.

But the spirit of the London Convention, in spite of its enemies, who attended it (opposing it before and after its being held)—consistent souls!—the result of canvassing in various towns in Canada and in the States, the friendly greeting of our brethern of the editorial corps; all show us that something may be done, and good may be done, too, with an enterprise like this. The energy, the activity, the union, the public spirit, with which our own people and our friends have responded to the effort made to establish an independent Paper, among the heretofore oppressed class in Canada, indicate a state of progress, and foretoken a prospective prosperity, every way encouraging and refreshing. It is to be hoped, that Mr. Ward's visit to Britain, will not be without good results, in this direction. Though that visit was not directly connected with, or in behalf of the Freeman, it will be, still, seen that his very appearance in Europe, his acquaintance with philanthropists of the old world, the extension of his correspondence, and the increasing of his influence, will all tend to make him the more useful, as the Editor of our Journal.

Already, the co-operation of powerful personages has been enlisted in our behalf, and the pen of one of the most influential Editors, in one of the cities of the north, is engaged to contribute to our columns. And though it look somewhat pretending in persons as humble as we, the remark may be maintained, that should the Freeman survive the critical period of its early childhood, it will be no unimportant medium of communication between the friends of the downtrodden on both sides of the Atlantic.

It is a matter of some interest to the friends of this undertaking, that it has not been begun hastily and imprudently. The first number was published and paid for. No other was issued, until it was ascertained that the enterprise bade fair to be successful. This number appears as the fruit of such practical inquries, as the evidence of a reliable basis for future hope, and as an earnest of probable, if not certain success. Still, but partial canvassing has been done, either in the States or Canada. When, therefore, the several members of the Publishing Committee, the different friends in localities, the Stockholders and the Agents, shall have fairly and faithfully canvassed, there is less reason to doubt than to feel sure of success.

Having said so much, we will now take the liberty of meeting the question—

WHY ESTABLISH THIS PAPER?

1. We answer, Because the interests of the large and growing colored population of Canada demand such an organ, for several reasons. We now number some 40,000, it is to be presumed, with constant accessions being made to our numbers. The accessions are not of escaped slaves, only, but along with those, a number of intelligent, influential, wealthy free men, of various occupations, who are abundantly capable of contributing to the very best weal of our beloved country. A like class, in the neighboring States, know nothing of Canada, and they never will know, until they can have some cheap, reliable means of information furnished by persons on the spot. Lectures and tracts have done and will do much to give this information; but these cannot be so multiplied as to meet the demand, but they do increase it. They who read a tract, or hear a lecture, wish to read or hear more.

Such need intelligent information of our climate, soil, productions, institutions, customs, laws, progress, &c., &c.

Besides, there are some colored people in the States, who are most strongly prejudiced against Canada. They prefer Yankeedom, with disfranchisement and oppression, religious and political, existing and increasing, to a land of impartial laws and a Constitution knowing no distinctions of color, and a Government in which all alike participate, and a sovereign who lives chiefly for the welfare of her subjects. Some of this class actually throw dust in the eyes of persons who propose to cast in their lot among us by misrepresenting our condition, our institutions, our Government, &c. We need a paper to meet this class, and to inform the inquiring class. And, right here, though for the thousandth time, we may as well add, that if for nothing else, we need a paper to expose the false tricks, selfish plots, and lying impostures of parties who make a trade of going to the States to lie, by representing the Black Population of Canada as being in a starving condition. Indeed we must either cease to blame people on the other side for believing us to be a set of paupers, or we must sustain some reliable medium through which the contrary shall be known—the truth in opposition to the falsehoods of itinerant self-seeking impostors.

2. We need an organ, too, for making our voice heard at home. Some of our wants, grievances and demands are peculiar to ourselves. It is so with other classes. We form a considerable element in the political constitution of our country, one way and another. As the great country grows, we grow with it; as it improves and progresses, we are carried forward on the bosom of its onward tide. Questions will arise affecting us as a class, which we must know how skilfully and efficiently to meet. To be always at the mercy of the demagogue of the hour, is neither safe, dutiful, nor in any sense becoming. We must allow our fellow subjects to know who we are and what we want, through our own authorised mouth-piece. Hence we must have a mouth-piece. Is not that plain?

Besides, it is due to our Constitution and Government, that we should train ourselves so as to fit us for the discharge of the duties of freemen, in full. Such freemen we never were before; and hence the need of our being fitted as well to look after our rights and interests as to discharge our duties.—We beg to ask especial attention to those two points. They are, to our own mind, matters of importance. Indeed, upon our first arrival in Canada they struck us forcibly; and every day, their importance to us has increased.

3. We say it in no ill spirit, but whatever blame may be cast upon us for saying it, it is neither to be denied nor concealed that there is not and never was a newspaper in Canada which represented the intelligence of colored Canadians; never one, whose respectability made it such a paper, as in a free country we need not be ashamed of. We do not ask the friends of the Paper, nor the Publishing Committee, nor the Stockholders, to be responsible for this remark. We say it on our own responsibility, and if anybody chooses to find fault with it, let him write to us, and he shall have his say in our columns. But we venture to say that our statement is simply true.

4. We beg to add, that none of the papers published by our people, in the States, answer our purpose. They either pass us by, in cold contempt, ignore us altogether, keep themselves or their readers, or both, ignorant of what Canada is, or in some other way, by opposition or neglect disparage us, as much as convenient. They will do us but very little good. We recollect a paper, of small size, published and edited by a Mr. What do you call him? called the Impartial Citizen, wherein there never was one column of information concerning Canada. And one of the reasons was, the Editor knew next to nothing about Canada. We fear that other Editors in the States, will be of as little service to us as that gentleman then was.

Good friends, we have a paper because we think we need one, and we have told you some reasons why. Do you agree with us?

But listen to us and we will add a word still further.

There is an importance in the position of the Colored Population of Canada in particular, and British America, in general, which we, nor our friends here, or in the United States, sufficiently estimate. We ask attention to this point.

In no country, in the world, does the condition of our people bear relations so important to the cause of the enslaved, as here. We have two great falsehoods to live down; two great Yankee lies that we have reason to know, are doing us the greatest mischief, on more than one Continent. They are,

1st. The Negro is unfit for Freedom.

2nd. The Negro cannot live on terms of equality with the white man, on the American Continent.

The discussion of these two points we will neither use the time, nor the condescension to enter upon, now. All we ask attention to, just at this moment, is, that the development, education and progress of Canadian colored men, will do more to stamp those two Anglo-Saxon assertions with their native falsity, than anything else this side of Heaven, can do. Slavocrats cannot and will not see progress in the West Indies. They can hinder it in the United States. The progress we make in Canada, is so near to them, it has so much to do with their former victims, and, at the same time, is, through God, so completely, and for ever, beyond their reach, that they must see it, must feel it, but cannot hinder it. Who cannot see that a respectable Paper will greatly aid this work?

MR. WARD'S TOUR.

Accounts from England, of a reliable character, bear evidence to the great amount of service—abiding service—done the cause of Anti-Slavery as well as Temperance and other measures of reform, by Mr. Ward, since he left America, in April last. A new era in the history of colored Americans seems to have been ushered in by reason of his especial labors.

Anti-Slavery men, colored and white, have visited Great Britain from America, and yet if papers so eminently qualified to give an opinion on capability, as the British Banner, Leeds Mercury, Cheltenham Free Press, &c., &c., are to be taken as evidence, he has distanced, far distanced his predecessors in the agency line.

Accounts from Scotland bear the same testimony to his usefulness. It is not only as the indefatigable agent of the Toronto Anti-Slavery Society, and as the representative par excellence of colored Americans, in capability, energy and address, that his tour is to be considered the most important ever made by a colored man to England, but it is that the occasion has at last been made and improved, to effectually wipe out the imputation of natural inferiority, wholsale destitution of the colored people of Canada, and wholesale pauperism, ignorance and servitude of colored people in the United States.

It has been clearly demonstrated, by the Cheltenham Address, that the free colored people of North America, and those among the slaves, who can make the opportunity, aspire to something more abiding than the dubious fame suited only to those who love to be pitied and helped. He has shown that they are not all paupers and menials; but that a sense of self-reliance supports them against the united opposition of those who love despotism. True, there is manifested a sort of uneasiness at the success of his mission, by men who get 25, 50, and in some instances we verily believe, 100 per cent, by reporting nearly every colored man in Canada a fugitive, and every fugitive in needy circumstances. Those persons see the way hedged up to a "perfect harvest" in England, on behalf of the suffering fugitives in Canada. Mr. Ward's speeches tell what class of fugitives do need. Besides, Mr. Ward is not in the United States encouraging slaveholdess by reports of great need among the runaways, but he is "at home" among a people not only willing to receive fugitives from oppression, but to help them when they arrive, if they need it. Up to this time, there has been no abatement of his success in any way, and the prospect is that there will not be.

An Anti-Slavery Convention will be held in Cincinnati, U. S., on the 11th, 12th, and 13th of April next.

ANTI-SLAVERY RELATIONS.

As a new, though humble instrumentality in the Anti-Slavery field, it is necessary to state clearly the position of the Provincial Freeman, and the relation it holds to the great Anti-Slavery bodies of America; 1st, that there may be no doubts in the minds of the public as to its real position; and 2d, by way of reply to questions already propounded.

As a matter of curiosity, growing out of the establishment of a paper devoted to the measures it is proposed to advocate, the inquiry has been made by friends in the U. S. as to the "bearings" of the Freeman; "whether towards Garrisonianism, Lewis-Tappanism, Douglassism, Free-Soilism, or what?" In other words, will this journal be committed to the distinguishing doctrines of any one of the above schools exclusively?

No, friends, no! In the United States, the centre of operations of American slavery, and hitherto the field of active anti-slavery operations on this continent, circumstances not directly affecting us, have divided abolitionists into several classes; each of which has in its particular way, and with especial deference to the peculiar tenets held, endeavored to lead the growing liberal sentiment of the people. The national relations of abolitionists in the U. S., the peculiarity of the civil and religious polity under which they live, and their present local position in the Northern division of the country, no doubt, determine the phase of Anti-slavery effort with them; but with Canadians, as with British subjects everywhere, the case is quite different.

Living in a country in which chattel slavery is not tolerated; in which this man's origin or that man's peculiarities of feature, complexion, &c., are not made subjects of special legislation, and do not militate against against him, it is not thought to be either practicable or necessary to insist, solely, upon a political view of the matter.

We wish to help create a sentiment in Canada, and out of Canada, that shall tell against Slavery; and to point out, so far as we can see it, the course that people in this country should pursue to that end.

The matter of political action to affect Slavery should, we think, be left for the consideration of abolitionests, in those communities in which it is legalized; to them, properly belongs the right to adopt whatever course of action therein, a knowledge of its practical bearings may suggest. It is not for us to say, Do this or do that to remove the evil from among you; but, Be just and untiring in your efforts to speedily accomplish your object;—leaving to ourselves the right at the same time to prefer this or that course as a matter of opinion. But we do claim for Canadians the right to say how they will work.

With British subjects, then, whether by birth or adoption, the question assumes and can assme only a moral phase. Having no slaves, (the southern U. S. assertion to the contrary notwithstanding,) extending to each class the immunities of freemen, it is important to aid in fashioning public opinion on the question of Slavery by insisting on a strictly Scriptural course of conduct between man and man;—on the part of Governments towards individuals;—on the part of individuals to preserve their freedom, that the enormities of a system such as American Slavery and its cognates, Russian despotism and Italian and Austrian oppression, may be clearly understood and destroyed.

The precaution of exposing to the moral, religious and immoral, the immoral, irreligious, revolting features of any system of oppression however mild, (?) is indispensable to the preservation of liberty in this country, contiguous as it is, to a powerful nation in various parts of which Slavery is not only invested with the sanctity of lawful protection, and made the distinguishing feature of political preferment; but in which the general polity, is, by contrast with the long tried and approved axioms of the most liberal Government of Europe and our own country, suggestive of exciting change; where the deceptive glare made by the cry of "equality! progress! toleration!" obscures the evils inflicted upon all clases, too surely resulting from despotism practised upon one class.

Our crusade, then, must be a moral one. If a sound moral and religious influence, when exerted by individuals, can accomplish great good, surely the influence of large communities, such as this, for instance, in its character of a liberal, powerful, well sustained Province, can do more. If Slavery is better than freedom in its general features, to individuals, it is also in particulars; if better for individuals or clases in a country it is for the people at large. If slavery is the better condition, the relation is a moral one, its results to the enslaved are elevating, and the idea that freedom is desirable is nothing more than a wild hallucination of disordered intellect. But it is not so. The experience of mankind, whether they will confess it or not, is, that Slavery works positive evil; and, it is not unimportant to observe that the moral sense of mankind, formed, sustained, enforced by Christian teaching and example, is opposed to it. Then, duty requires that it be destroyed; sympathy for those who cannot of themselves break its iron grasp requires it; and as the influence of nations is not sectional but world wide, and as among those of America, our own is preeminently gaining importance, from position, relation to European governments and national origin, it is of the first moment that a strong moral feeling shall be created here.

The British government and people possess a power, determination and influence, hardly equalled by any other nation; and it is very clear that efforts made in this part of Her Majesty's dominions to countenance the despotism in the U. S., at the same time that they deeply injure us, have a direct influence in retarding the period of emancipation. These remarks will, it is hoped, satisfy all that it is neither our duty nor inclination to be the advocate of any particular school; but at the same time that we endeavor to enforce the broad and comprehensive ground of the moral bearings of the question, so firmly insisted upon by British anti-slavery men every where, we shall accept whatever we understand to be anti-slavery, in spirit and tendency, in the views and doctrines held forth by the different schools of the United States.

RUSSIAN DESIGNS ON CANADA.—Through the interception by the authorities of some suspected correspondence, it appears that a scheme has been mooted to land a few thousands of Russian veterans in Canada, secretly and in disguise, by way of the United States, with the intention of harrassing the Power of England in this distant portion of her dominions. It is said, also, to have been suggested, that an attempt should be made by the Russian Government to bring about an understanding with the United States for the partition of British Territory in America, so to be arranged as to leave the question of slavery in its present position—that is, to give as much to the Slave States as to the Free States, the sacrifice of the West Indies, and, if need be, a large slice of Mexico, to be included in such arrangement between the two powers.

We give the report merely as we find it, without vouching for its correctness. We should rather premise, however, that the Czar will find enough to occupy his attention in more important localities nearer home, to prevent his sending off a large portion of his best troops on so Quixotic an expedition as the invasion of Canada. The proposed alliance, offensive and defensive (for it amounts to that,) between Russia and the United States, however much it may be to the taste of the Southern despots, provided we may judge of things by their names and of people by their professions, we should pronounce to be simply impossible.

D.

THE EMIGRATION CONVENTION.

We publish on our outside the Call for a National Convention of Colored Men, to be held in Cleveland, Ohio, on the 21th, 25th and 26th of August next. It is not, however, to be understood, that we consider the Call as intended to include Colored men resident in the Provinces. Indeed, the object of the Convention would rather indicate that such ought to be excluded. That object, so far as we can gather from the Call, seems to be, to discuss the propriety and practicability of removing by voluntary emigration the oppressed colored people of the United States whether free or enslaved, beyond the reach of their oppressors. We will not now stop to argue the question. On some future occasion we may possibly express our views upon it somewhat at length. It may suffice to state generally that we think every man has or ought to have an exclusive and inalienable right to judge for himself in this matter. We say to the slave, You have a right to your freedom and to every other privilege connected with it, and if you cannot secure these in Virginia or Alabama, by all means make your escape, without delay, to some other locality in God's wide universe, where you will be allowed to enjoy the rights and perform the duties, as you bear the stamp and impress of manhood. We say, further, to the free colored people of the States, wherever they may be, You are under no necessity or obligation to remain where you are. It might, for some peculiar reasons, be desirable that you should remain; but if an opportunity offers for elevating yourselves and families in the social scale, by removing to the West Indies, to Canada, or to Greenland—we care not whither—you are culpable if you do not at once adopt it. Some will urge, and probably do urge, that this is exactly what your enemies in the States desire. So be it. Because any enemy unwittingly desires what is for your advantage cannot possibly be any reason why you should change your course. "Fiat justitia ruat cœlum;" under the full conviction that in this matter by doing justice to yourself first, you best promote the welfare of your race everywhere, and that of the enslaved and oppressed in the United States particularly.

It may be desirable that a limited number of colored Canadians should attend this Convention. Of course, according to the terms of the Call, they cannot be admitted as delegates. Five delegates from each State seems to be all that is contemplated by the framers of that document; and as it will scarcely be allowed by residents in the Province that they are as yet, or are likely for the next five months at least to be annexed to the States, and taken under the fostering protection of the Eagle's claws, it will be somewhat difficult to assign them a place in the Convention. Besides, as votes will have to be taken on the various topics that come up for discussion, and as those topics will of course refer in part to the place (if any) to which the colored people of the United States ought to emigrate, usage and propriety require that none but those who are presumed to be the representatives of the persons more immediately interested, ought to take an active part in the proceedings.

THE NEBRASKA BILL.

This infamous measure has for the present, to all appearance, received its quietus in the House of Representatives. By a vote of 110 to 95, it has been consigned to that "vasty deep," the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It must there take its place on the calender behind two or three hundred other bills, which must be disposed of or set aside before the Nebraska Bill can be reached, except by a suspension of the rules under a two-thirds vote. It appears on an analysis of the vote that several Southern members were in favor of this iniquity; while fifteen were absent; thus showing that the South is by no means unanimous for the passage of the Bill. It is doubtless owing to the agitation that has been raised throughout the Northern States that Douglas and his associates have encountered so sudden and severe a check in their nefarious attempt to curse a territory nearly equal in extent to the whole of the free States, with the demoralizing and destructive influence of slavery. It is gratifying to think that the traitor has so quickly reaped the traitor's reward, without even the thirty pieces of silver in consideration of its infamy. Douglas's hopes for the Presidency are forever blasted. However deeply the Democratic party of the United States may have sunk in obsequious servility to the slave-power, they dare not so insult the manhood of the North and what remains of honorable sentiment in the Free States, as to present the name of one so deeply committed to slavery propagandism as Douglas, to the free suffrage of the people. Aspirants for office will take timely warning from the example thus set before them, and be cautious hereafter how they stake their reputation and their hopes upon the chances of success that present themselves in the initiation of measures alike hostile to the true interests of both white and colored, at the same time that they are opposed to the moral sense of the whole civilized world. While those who have been struggling hitherto against mighty odds, and hoping almost against hope, will note the defeat of the traitor with joy, and gather from it fresh courage and fresh hope to cheer them on to renewed exertion.

D.

Elliot Cresson, Esq., well known as a prominent Colonizationist, and some time President of the American Colonization Society, died lately in Philadelphia. It is worthy of remark that out of all his vast wealth, he bequeathed only $1000 to the Society with which, during his lifetime he had been so intimately connected. It is to be hoped that at the last he had somewhat repented of his unchristian prejudice, and that as a future opened up before him, in which there is no complexional caste, and no abasement on account of color, his philanthropy approximated more nearly to the universe-embracing apothegm, "The world is my country, and all mankind my country men."

D.

Riot in New Haven, (Conn.)—On the 18th inst. a serious collision took place between the students of Yale College and a portion of the citizens, in which one of the latter was killed.—Afterwards the citizens procured two cannon, which they loaded with stones, in the absence of balls and proceeded with them to the College with the intention of using them against the building in which the students had fortified themselves. The police, however, succeeded in spiking the guns and so for the present preventing further mischief.

ATTENTION!!!

"Self-reliance is the True Road to Independence."

A number of persons as yet, probably, unacquainted with the intention to publish this paper, will receive a copy of this issue, by which it is hoped they may be induced to subscribe; numbers who have pledged themselves to aid in its support will, in like manner, be reminded of their promises. We do hope that young people and old will help to forward a good work.

Canadians are not too well supplied with papers advocating the measures herein set forth, so we are not prepared for the cry in this quarter of "papers enough!" The matter is settled for another paper here. Persons abroad want reliable information of Canada, from Canada; that they shall have, if they will speak and act encouragingly. The advocates of emigration will have an opportunity to compare the facilities of this country, with others on which their attention is now fixed. The lovers of the ridiculous will also be highly entertained, no doubt, when they hear, as they will if they take the paper, of the somersets, manœuvres and antics now in full tide of operation, especially at the "west end." We have now, awaiting forthcoming issues, resolutions and counter-resolutions, accounts of meetings held and the resolves passed thereat, and of resolutions published, but not passed at any meeting, for begging and against it, for the Provincial Council and against it, for the United States National Council and against it, and for exclusive institutions and against them, all showing that some among colored Canadians, as among all other people, intend to kill, while others try to cure. Canadians, East and West, see and speak freely of the importance of the enterprise, and from them we hopefully look for patronage.

Will not the young particulary, take hold, and each one engage to do what he can to give character and efficiency to the paper, by sending on one, two, three or fifty subscribers, as they may be disposed, and also by sending articles for publication? We hope they will not be slow to assume their proper duties, to relieve the old men of a portion of the labor, never failing, meanwhile, to profit by their counsel.

SOUTH vs. NORTH.

The Charleston Courier, in a late number, reviewing Theodore Parker's Discourse on Slavery and the Nebraska movement, takes the opportunity to give the North its due in reference to its truckling subserviency to Southern influence, as under:

There are frequent passages, in this strange exhibition of the mad parson, which, in the main, truthfully as well as strongly, detail and depict the various occasions on which Southern interests have obtained the mastery in Congress, or, at least important advantages, which are well worthy the consideration of all who erroneously suppose that the action of the General Government has been on the whole, adverse to Slavery. The truth is that our Government, although hostile, in its incipiency, to domestic Slavery, and starting into political being with a strong bent towards abolition, yet afterwards so changed its policy that its action for the most part, and with only a few exceptions, has fostered the slaveholding interest, and swelled it from six to fifteen States, and from a feeble and sparse population to one of TEN MILLIONS. In confirmation of these views, the reverend declaimer undertook to demonstrate that the idea of Freedom had its "culmination point in time, about 1780," and "in space," at Faneuil Hall—"for up there," and he pointed to the portrait of SAMUEL ADAMS, "is one of the men who represented that idea; and that only twice, since the Declaration of Independence, had the idea of Freedom, in Federal Councils, prevailed against Slavery;" whereas the Slaveholding interest had triumphed no less than nine times and was about, in the passage of the Nebraska bill, to achieve its tenth victory.

In one or more of the foregoing extracts, we have shown how Parson PARKER admires the fidelity of the sons of the South to its interests, in spite of his loathing and contempt of the South and its slave system. We now exhibit in contrast his very flattering portraiture of his cherished North, where base cupidity and servile truckling and subserviency to the South almost universally prevail.

Another "Sectional" Question.—The January number of the Northern Islander, a paper published by the Mormon settlement on Beaver Island, Lake Michigan, thus discourses about the "peculiar institution" of that peculiar people. We can not see, as things are in the States, but that the argument of the Islander is a fair one; neither can we discern how the abettors of a system of universal concubinage can with any show of decency object to the Mormons because of their polygamy. We trust that Messrs. Badger, Jones and the other raving would-be "abolitionists of freedom," will be able to clear up this matter to the satisfaction of their confreres of Utah and Beaver Island.

What business has Congress or the United States with the law concerning marriage? That is a domestic matter of each State, in which each is sovereign.—Fifteen of the States allow a large portion of their population, (the slaves,) as many wives as their master please, and as many concubines as he can hire, and turn them off when he pleases, and to assign them to poverty and destruction. In all the States vast numbers are publicly kept as common prostitutes, and has either Congress or any other power has been appealed to. But because the Mormons in Utah have, like the Puritans in New England, determined to be governed by the laws of God, they must forsooth be refused admission into the Union. Does not republicanism itself guarantee to Utah the right of self government? Have not the very same grounds to establish polygamy, that Michigan has to prohibit it, an instance in duality? Is the republicanism of America a reality, or a mere pretence, or a swindle? Nothing can be clearer than that if the people of Utah see fit to institute and practice polygamy, no power on earth can legally prevent them.—The only real difficulty in the matter will arise when those who have been legally married in Utah to a number of wives, choose to go with their wives to reside in other States. Marriage in all the States is a civil contract, and the general rule is, that if the contract is valid when made, it will be enforced everywhere. But this rule is not universal. Conflicts are likely to grow up on this question. In the case of Indians married in their own country, and of a few Turks and Chinese sojourning for a short time in the States, their polygamy has been winked at, and the courts have not determined the rule of law in the premises. But it is doubtful whether the same liberality will be extended to the Mormons.

Education of Idiots.—On the 10th inst. a number of idiots educated in the Asylum of the State of New York, were examined before the State Legislature at Albany, and gave encouraging evidence that the care humanely bestowed upon that truly afflicted portion of the community is well rewarded. Our neighbor The News of the Week takes the opportunity, when noticing this examination, to remark as follows, in reference to the absence of kindred institutions in Canada:

We have repeatedly urged on the Canadian government to imitate the example so well set them by the State of New York in this respect. We trust the next session of the Provincial Parliament will not be allowed to pass, without having something done in relation thereto. The last census shows, that there are many people so afflicted amongst us, and numbers of whom although full grown, are unable to take care of themselves. For several years back, one might be daily seen wandering about the streets of this city, a disgrace to our philanthropy. Therefore any measures that might be taken for their benefit, to be perfect, should not only provide education for the young, but also an asylum for the old and helpless who have no friends to assist them. A measure of this kind will be most popular. The people will cheerfully pay the expense necessary to carry it out. In proof of this we could mention one township, at least, where the people have voluntarily taxed themselves to defray the expense of supporting a man who is mentally and physically incapacitated from doing so himself, which is highly to the credit of that municipality, and a reproach to the Legislature for not doing the like for the Province generally.

GLEANINGS

The War, &c.—Great activity and enthusiasm prevail in England and France in making preparations for the war, according to the latest accounts, and thousands are being sent to the Turkish Provinces. Lord Ragland will, it is said, be Commander of the English forces. In an engagement in Asia, near Shafkates, 2000 Russians were killed!

—Charlotte K—, a gentleman writer, but lady correspondent of F. Douglass's Paper, is particularly severe on Oddfellows and Oddfellowship, among Colored Americans.

Mr. J. B. Gough was presented with a Silver Water Jug, at a Soiree, held in Tanfield Hall, Edinburgh, as a token of appreciation of services rendered by him to the Temperance cause. A Scotch Society has employed him to lecture for them, for three months, for $1000; so say the papers. A handsome salary that!

Our Paper.—We are at length enabled to lay before our friends and others, the second number of the Provincial Freeman. It will scarcely be needful to inform those of our readers who are at all conversant with the mysteries of the Printing Office, that we have had to encounter and overcome all the usual difficulties incident to a new enterprise, besides not a few that may be fairly presumed to be unusual. That the paper is as yet, all that it ought to be, either as regards its typographical appearance, or its literary character, it would be useless to pretend; at the same time we venture to give expression to a confident assurance that ere many weeks have elapsed, it will be found to have attained to a high, if not to a first rank among the stars that bedeck the firmament of literature on our Western Hemisphere.

ARREST AND RESCUE OF A FUGITIVE SLAVE IN MILWAUKEE.

From the Milwaukee Daily Sentinel.

The greatest excitement was caused on Saturday morning by the announcement that a Fugitive Slave had been arrested about four miles this side of Racine, by Deputy U. S. Marshal C. C. Cotton and four other men, one of them named B. S. Garland, the alleged Owner of the fugitive, and another, a constable of Racine, in all five white men; and brought to this city, and placed, handcuffed in our jail. The particulars of the transactions are these:

The colored man's name is Joshua Glover, and is claimed as the runaway slave of S. B. Garland, of St. Louis county, Missouri. He is alleged to have run away in 1852.

Glover was in the employ of St. Clair & Rice in a mill near Racine. On Friday night, while seated in his shanty, five men broke open the door suddenly, rushed in upon him and felled him to the ground. They then hand cuffed him, took him into a double buggy with nothing on but his pantaloons and shirt, and drove off north, and after having lost the way, at last brought him to Milwaukee County Jail. Here he was lodged in a cell, hand cuffed. Our Deputy Jailer, with commendable feelings of humanity, took off the hand cuffs, and treated him with care and kindness.

As soon as the matter got wind, the greatest excitement prevailed; a large crowd collected in the jail; hundreds of men were aroused, and declared that he should not be taken from the city. Lawyers without number were busy at work, searching through the sections of the Fugitive Slave Law. The Revised Statutes were opened in a number of law offices to the chapter on Habeas Corpus, and every thing that could be done within the law, for the release from custody of Glover was resorted to.

Some man rode through from Racine on horse back, and gave the first information that our jail contained a fugitive—that one of its cells had been polluted by the blood of a slave. We, with others, went to the jail, and found the fugitive in a cell. He was called out into the passage, and what a sight was there! The man was cut in two places on the head; the front of his shirt was soaking and stiff with his own blood.

The man told us that he had been in this State about two years, and that he was at work for the persons we have named above, and that they owe him about fifty dollars; and he was sitting in his shanty when the men came in, and one placed a revolver to his head; he put up his hand to push it away, when he was knocked down senseless, and removed to the waggon. The man or men swore that if he shouted or made the least noise, they would kill him instantly.

A habeas corpus was immediately got out before Judge Jenkins, and a civil warrant before Albert Smith, Esq., Justice of the Peace, for the damages sustained by the unfortunate man. A telegraph sent to Racine for a warrant for the arrest of the five men engaged in assaulting him in his shanty.

The Court House bell was rung at about 2 P. M., the alarm sounded for the first ward, thousands flocked to the Court House square, and around the jail, the excitement being intense. After sometime, the crowd was called to order, by Jas. H. Paine, from the Court House steps, when Gen. E. B. Wolcott was chosen President, and A. H. Bielfield, Secretary.

A committee consisting of four from each ward, was appointed to draft resolutions and present them to the meeting. The Committee consisted of Jas. H. Paine, Wm. Whitnal, John Furlong, S. M. Booth, and Dr. E. Wunderly.

The crowd, which had kept increasing, was then addressed by Byron Paine, Esq., General Paine, S. M. Booth and A. H. Bielfield. Each speaker was loudly cheered. The resolutions were called for and read to the meeting, and adopted with great cheering. They were as follows:

Whereas, A man named Joshua Glover, living in the neighborhood of Racine, had his house broken into, a pistol presented at his head, was knocked down and badly cut and bruised by Deputy Marshal Charles C. Cotton and Benj. S. Garland, his pretended owner, before any legal process was served upon him, was fettered and brought by night to this city, and incarcerated in our county jail; and,

Whereas, A writ of Habeas Corpus has been issued by Judge Jenkins to Sheriff Page a Deputy Marshal Cotton, commanding them, in the name of this State, to bring the prisoner before him, and show cause why the prisoner should not be released, which writ has not been yet obeyed; therefore,

Resolved, as citizens of Milwaukee, that every person has an indefensible right to a fair and impartial trial by jury on all questions involving personal liberty.

Resolved, That the Writ of Habeas Corpus is the great defence of Freedom and that we demand for this prisoner, as well as for our own protection, that this sacred Writ shall be obeyed.

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to stand by this prisoner, and do our utmost to secure for him a fair and impartial trial by jury.

Soon after the resolutions had been read and passed, a Vigilance Committee of twenty-five was appointed to watch that the fugitive was not secretly taken away, or tried except in an open manner. We understand that the Committee was instructed to ring the bells, and call the city to their aid in case any attempt should be made to get the fugitive away from the jail.

During this morning, a writ of Habeas Corpus, as above mentioned, had been served upon Sheriff Page. He immediately made return that the negro was not in his custody, or under his control, but was in custody of the U. S. Marshal and Deputies, under a warrant from Judge Miller, of the U. S. Court. Another writ was got up by the negro's counsel, C. K. Watkins, Esq., and put in the Sheriff's hands to be served upon the Marshall and was so served. This was about 5 P. M. Within a short time, the steamer arrived, bringing about 100 men from Racine, who marched in solid column to the jail, where the negro still remained in charge of two deputies of the U. S Marshal. This accession to the numbers of the crowd added fuel to the flame, and after a short time a demand was made for the man; a refusal being made, an attack was made upon the door with planks, axes, &c. It was broken in, the inner door and wall broken through, and the negro taken from his keepers, brought out and placed in a wagon, which was driven at great speed down to Walker's Point Bridge, where he was placed in another carriage and leave South on the way to Racine. The military were called out, but had not gathered when the crisis came.

The Sheriff of Racine County was with those who came by the boat, and had warrants for the arrest of the owner, Mr. Garland, and others, for assault and battery. Mr. G. was arrested and taken to J. E. Arnold's office, who acted as his counsel. A writ of habeas corpus was at once issued from Judge Miller's Court, and was taken to that office. An understanding was entered into that Mr Garland should be forthcoming on Monday (this) morning, and he was left in custody of the U. S Marshal, to be produced at that time

CONSTITUTION OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL.

For the purpose of improving the character, developing the intelligence, maintaining the rights and organizing a Union of the Colored People of the Free States, the National Convention does hereby ordain and institute the

"National Council of the Colored People."

Art. 1. This Council shall consist of two members from each State, represented in this Convention, to be elected by this Convention, and two other members from each State to be elected as follows: On the 15th day of November next, and biennially thereafter, there shall be held in each State, a Poll, at which each colored inhabitant may vote who pays ten cents as poll-tax; and each State shall elect, at such election, such delegates to State Legislatures, twenty in number from each State, at large. The election to be held at such places and under such conditions as the public meetings in such localities may determine. The members of the National Council in each State, shall receive, canvass, and declare the result of such vote. PRIVATEERING.

With the heroism the glory, and the triumphs of war, there come also its scandals, its excesses, and its horrors. It is impossible but that it should be a season of license, in which the worst passions invade, like vultures, the sad field of honor, and, like robbers, snatch a spoil from the victims of wreck or sea slaughter. It is unhappily within the knowledge of our readers that, under the name of privateering, legalized piracy was once considered an honorable profession, and Christian gentlemen, sitting at the dinner table or returning from church, agreed to send out armed ships with letters of marque, to prey on the peaceful commerce of the seas. It was, of course, a matter of painful necessity to stop the commerce of the foe, and our men of war had the same warrant and justification for the capture of his merchantmen as of his armed vessels. This was done in the way of public and honorable warfare by the command, not merely the permission, of the constituted authority. But over and above this, as a measure of retaliation, and as an auxiliary mode of offence, we allowed anybody who liked the bloody trade, to turn pirate for awhile, to range over the sea with a crew of cut-throats, and seize any merchant-vessel under the hostile flag, all for the purely selfish consideration of booty. The thing was so old, so common, so customary and familiar, that few saw any harm in it. Perhaps the best way of satisfying even the unscrupulous that there is harm in it, and that the whole proceeding is barbarous and brutal in the extreme, will appear by supposing a parallel in land warfare. What if the Duke of Wellington, on crossing the Pyrennees, had brought with him a swarm of Spanish guerillas, and given them written licenses to plunder the peaceful inhabitants of France, and murder all those who resisted their exactions? The very idea is monstrous and intolerable. Yet this is precisely what was done upon the ocean throughout the whole war. To seize and appropriate a waggonload of merchandize and shoot the waggoner and his associates would be respectable theft to put on board the ships property which would have been brought safely into port. To seize the same merchandize and the ship, murder and to murder the same guardians performing the office of supercargo or seamen was honestly thought right, it was done every day; and many excellent, honorable, and religious persons made their fortunes by the practice with as little remembrance to their moral instincts as they would grow potatoes or made cotton twist. There was indeed some little risk about it—a being that a privateer sometimes "caught a Tartar" in the shape of a man of war. This degree of risk was considered to place the enterprise rather beyond the reach of pauper seaman, and to receive it as the luxury of those who had a few thousand pounds to spare, and souls of proportionate magnanimity. So, to fit out a privateer was thought as injudicious in a small trader as a man with large demands on his purse is, as it would be in the present age to speculate to any depth in a railway speculation or a loan bargain in the funds. The man who risked his all in a privateer which had the ill luck to fall into the enemy's hands, simply waddled off, like the "lame duck" of the Stock Exchange. So far, he lost the respect of his fellow citizens. That the miscreants he had hired had murdered some score of French fishermen or sailors, and had half of them been killed in their turn was a matter of indifference.

Lord John Russell's answer to Sir William Clay's question last night, gives us some hope that naval warfare will be gradually purified of those scandals which have hitherto so unreasonably distinguished it from its sister operations by land. The question referred indeed primarily to the case of certain Russian ships, with British cargoes, now on the sea with Turkish firmans, and with subsequent protection from the British Government against its own men of war. Sir W. Clay wished to know whether the French Government could be induced also to respect these vessels. To this question no distinct and positive answer could be given, but Lord John Russell promised the best offices of the British Government. This of course does not go very far, as it refers only to the case of certain vessels of which a list has already been given to Government, and the cargoes of which are British. But the question suggests a further enquiry as to the whole practice of interference with the ordinary operations of commerce. What is there in the element that should make so great a difference between the morality of naval and military warfare? When we enter a hostile territory it is true that we do not interfere with agriculture and commerce, but only just so far as is necessary for strictly military purposes. We seize cattle, vehicles, food for man and beast, firewood, boats, and every thing that our armies may require for their maintenance, or for carrying on the war. We force labour; we levy contributions from towns, and inflict heavy penalties in case of refusal; we break up roads, level suburbs, destroy plantations, inundate low grounds, stop the channels of rivers and the mouths of ports, remove buoys and beacons, and confiscate the property of those who attempt to force a blockade. We even go so far as to lay waste a country in the face of a pursuing foe, or to stop an anticipated advance. All this is very dreadful but justified by the stern code of war, which, though stern is also humane, seeing that no amount of mere material property can be weighed in the balance with the lives of men—those men our own soldiers, fighting for us and our cause. But all that we have described and enumerated above is short of wanton destruction, and also of mere robbery. The drunken private cannot be restrained from plunder; but the general in command cannot seize the contents of the private warehouses and shops of a conquered city, and sell them for the benefit of the British government or of his own army. No substantial reason can be alleged why the rule should not apply to naval commerce, and why the ships of the enemy are to be seized and appropriated wherever they are, whatever their cargo, and whithersoever bound. To stop commerce is one thing, to plunder another. It may not, indeed, be easy to say how we may do one thing without the other; as, if we are to stop ships at sea, and take possession of them, simply as a measure of defence, we must also repay ourselves for the cost of the operation. But one thing is very clear—an end must shortly be put to the practice of piracy in form of law. Let us at once refuse to grant letters of marque, and disallow them in the case of the foe. Let us at once recognize no such thing as a privateer, as distinguished from a pirate and hang both indiscriminately as soon as they fall into our hands.

The war now impending will probably give us a good deal of work in this way. The Mediterranean has always been infested with pirates from the age of Homer to the present day; and the subjects of His Majesty King Otho are as much given to robbery by sea and by land as they ever were. These are the people we have to fear. There will never be wanting Greeks of the pliest old school to take letters of marque from the Emperor of Russia, and with that warrant they are not very likely to distinguish nicely between a merchantman of one nation and a merchantman of another, so as both be equally well laden and equally ill armed. Should His Greek Majesty's subjects join the war in this villainous capacity, we trust that our men of war will be instructed to give them the same summary justice that Sir James Brooke gave the people he supposed, whether rightly or not, to be pirates on the coast of Borneo. The shortest way will be the best, and we shall think very ill of our captains if they have not effectually suppressed piracy or privateering—it matters not for the name—in the Mediterranean, before the first twelvemonth of the war is passed. Should it be found that the so called privateers take refuge in the ports of Greece, or that armaments are fitting out at those ports with the manifest intention of pursuing that bloody game it will be necessary to take some decided steps with those ports, so as to secure them from being put to this use for the future.

NICHOLAS AND NAPOLEON.

Reply of the Czar to the Emperor's Autograph Letter.

We announced yesterday that the Emperor had received a reply from St. Petersburgh.

In this letter to the Emperor, the Czar discusses the conditions of arrangement which were proposed to him, and declares that he cannot enter into any negotiation, except upon the basis which he has already made known.

The Czar [illegible] a pacific spirit, but [illegible] to [illegible] cause for war [illegible] to navy [illegible] While, [illegible] rights to Turkey, the Emperor [illegible] protectorate of the country, on the [illegible] with England and with the sympathies of Germany.

The Czar [illegible] declared [illegible] ready [illegible] to [illegible] Ottoman Empire to [illegible] Nor has any other question ever entered into this discussion.

Our attention is directed towards Austria, whose position calls upon her to play an active and important part on the present occasion. But Austria has always declared herself with great firmness in favor of those points which were laid down in the protocol of the Vienna conference, and of the 5th.

We have every confidence in the trustworthiness and chivalrous character of the young Emperor of Austria, and we find, besides, a guarantee for the discharge of his engagements in the interests of his people—interests which are identical with our own.

Under the original circumstances of European politics, France strong in her loyal and disinterested intentions, has nothing to fear from the impending struggle. She knows, besides, that she may rely on the energy, as well as the wisdom of the Emperor.—Paris Moniteur.

THE GOSPEL TRIBUNE.

PROSPECTUS.

The first number of a monthly paper, to be known as above indicated, is proposed to be published in Toronto within a few months, and not later than the First day of July, 1854. The work in size and appearance, to be at least equal to the Missionary Record or Christian Observer; and as much superior to either in style and execution as the subscription list will warrant.

Distinctive object:

To enlarge the limits of Communion and Church-Membership, among Christians, to the greatest possible extent; and to circumscribe those bounds to the exclusion, if possible, of all other characters, without otherwise disturbing the Membership of existing Churches; till acknowledged Christian Character shall constitute the only passport, at any time, and the perfect passport at all times, to every Communion and Church worthy of the Christian name; "that the world may believe" in Christ, even as he prayed.

General objects:

The promotion of Religious, Moral, Intellectual and Social Improvement, under the guidance of Divine Revelation, submitting every move and measure to the test of Gospel Principles.

Supporters.

The distinctive and general objects of the work are such as to claim for it the patronage of all classes of men, excepting those wedded to other pre-requisites of Communion and Church-membership, than acknowledged Christian Character; and here it is recorded withgreat pleasure that the encouragements tendered, thus far, are in strict accordance with the above general claims.

Origin and progress:

This movement has long been contemplated. For twenty years the subscriber has made the distinctive object of the Gospel, Tribune his special study; examining carefully the personality denominational aspect of Religious Societies, their reciprocal bearings, their mutual relations, and the nature of their combined influence on the evangelization of the World. Latterly, his position as Publisher of the Scripture Manual, has probably afforded him the best possible facilities for personally testing the strength of his positions, and for the attainment of certain important information, but little of which he had previously been able to obtain. All may rest assured, however, that no undue advantage will ever be taken of the frankness and candor with which Christians of every name, as well as skeptics of every class, have freely expressed their convictions in the presence of the Travelling Colporteur; the capacity in which the Publisher is still extending his observations through Canada and the neighboring States.

Co-laborers:

Of distinguished worth and of well-known literary ability, are already secured in the several sections of Canada, and in the States of the American Union; and arrangements are now in progress, to obtain from living responsible writers in Britain, important assistance in the development of the Tribune's Mission.

Terms and notices:

The Terms are One Dollar per Annum in advance,—otherwise Two Dollars; it being found that one half of the Subscriptions, not paid in advance, are worse than lost. Editors—friendly—will render assistance by noticing this Prospectus. All parties willing to aid, may at once commence soliciting the names of Subscribers. Two books—the Scripture and Laconic Manuals—fully gilt, and the Paper one year, will be forwarded to the person who first sends the names of ten Subscribers; and one of either of the books, in substantial leather binding, or the Paper one year, to every one who sends ten names. Subscriptions and all other communications for the Paper to be sent post-paid, marked Money, (if inclosed) and addressed, Robert Dick, Box 411, Toronto.

NOW.

Arise! for the day is passing,
While you lie dreaming on;
Your brothers are cased in armor,
And forth to fight are gone;
Your place in the ranks awaits you;
Each man has a part to play;
The past and the future are nothing
In the face of the stern to-day.

Arise from your dreams of the future—
Of gaining a hard fought field;
Of storming the airy fortress;
Of bidding the giant yield;
Your future has dreams of glory,
Of honor (God grant it may!)
But your arm will never be stronger,
Or needed as now—to-day.

Arise! if the past detain you,
Her sunshine and storms forget;
No chains so unworthy to hold you
As those of vain regret;
Sad or bright, she is lifeless ever;
Cast her phantom arms away,
Nor look back, save to learn the lesson
Of a nobler strife to-day.

Arise! for the hour is passing;
The sound that you dimly hear,
Is your enemy marching to battle,
Rise! rise! for the foe is near!
Stay not to brighten your weapons,
Or the hour will strike at last;
And from dreams of a coming battle,
You will waken to find it past.

The Gipsy Slaves of Wallachia.

All travellers who have journied from Zemlitza on the Danube to Bucharest, agree in painting the country they are obliged to traverse in the most sombre colors. Once out of sight of the lines of trees that border the Danube, you enter upon an interminable dismal plain, with a level horizon that surrounds you like a circle, of which you are ever the centre. There are no objects behind, to mark your progress by their gradual disappearance; there is nothing ahead, to encourage you on; no mountains of blue rising higher and higher, becoming substantial as you advance, breaking up their long line into peaks and valleys bristling with crags or clothed in forest. If you would know that you are in motion you must look upon the ground beneath your feet and see the pebbles and plants pass slowly backwards as your wagon moves sleeply on, or whirl dimly by as the karoutchor pursues its mad career. In winter time, an additional dreariness is given to this desert by the absence of the sun, which is hidden from view by one vast cloud stretching from horizon to horizon, low down, so as almost to resemble a mist just risen from the earth. Here and there, a few slight elevations, a foot or two high, indicate the presence of an underground village. At various distances, tall poles rise into the air, marking the positions of wells, around which the sky is speckled by flights of crows and vultures. Now and then you meet parties of peasants clothed in sheepskin, and wearing prodigious mustachios, wandering across the level. At night the only sound is the wind whistling through the low bushes, occasionally bringing to the ear the reports of a volley of musketry fired by some party of travellers who amuse themselves in this martial way.

It is not uncommon in crossing these sad plains to come upon groups of wild-looking individuals, black as Ethiopians, scantily covered by old rags, stepping jauntily out, waving there arms, nodding their heads, rattling fragments of songs, and clattering together as they go, the blacksmith's tools which they bear upon their backs. Further on, perhaps, when night has fallen, an hour or two after these odd-looking people have gone ahead of your wagon (they take two strides for one of your oxen) the ground ahead will probably become spangled as with glow-worms; and presently a sort of whirlwind of strange sounds, half song, half shout, will be borne by the night breeze, to mingle with the buzz of your own caravan, and the creaking of the wheels. You have come upon a village, and encampment, a burrow of gipsy troglodytes (dwellers in caves,) who are either sitting around the remains of the fires they have lighted to cook their evening meal, or, with open doors or trays, by the the light of a candle stuck in the ground, are engaged in smoking red clay or cherry-wood pipes, and drinking the harsh wine of the country.

These people are of the most humble and most unfortunate section of the Wallachian people, the Zigans, who of old formed a flourishing little state, paying tribute to the Greek empire, but who are now reduced to a condition of abject slavery. Their history is most obscure, and it is not with certainty known whence they came or by what steps they descended to their present level. It seems certain, however, that they belong to the same family of wanderers who are known in Egypt as Gayaras, in Hungary as Zingari, in Germany as Zigeuner, in Spain as Gitanos, in France as Bohemians, and in England as Gipsies. Their own traditions derive them from Syria, whence they were transported in the eighth century, by one of the Greek emperors, to Thrace. On account of some peculiarities in their manners, perhaps of some strange forms of doctrine, they seem to have become detested and despised by neighboring nations, and especially by the Mohammedans. When the Turks penetrated into their territory instead of merely requiring tribute from them, they attacked them with fury, dispersed them, hunted them down like wild beasts, and condemned those to perpetual servitude whose lives they spared. In this persecution they were encouraged by the Christians, who shared, indeed, the greater part of the newly made serfs among themselves.—It is estimated that at present there are more than twenty-three thousand Zigan families in Moldo-Wallachia, comprising about a hundred and fifty thousand souls. A certain number of these belonging to the State, which employs them in mines and public works; whilst the others are divided among the monasteries and the Boyards. Some of these latter possess as many as five or six thousand, engaged in the most laborious works connected with their estates, in part let out upon hire. They sell or exchange them at certain fixed periods of the year, bringing them like cattle to market; until lately, they treated them with such severity that they not unfrequently drove them to suicide. Many Boyards of humane character now grant a semi-liberty to their Zigans, allowing them for so much a year to go about as they please, seeking for work, and retaining the produce of it. Once every spring, the half-enfranchised slave must make his appearance and pay his tribute. Sometimes, also, he brings an instalment of his own price, and thus manages by degrees to free himself.—An industrious man may earn his liberty in ten years; but this unfortunate race has been so brutalized by long suffering, and is so addicted to every kind of debauchery, that very few succeed in rescuing themselves from bondage. Amongst the Boyards of the present day there are a good many whose copper complexions, white teeth, and general cast of countenance, evidently prove them to be descended from Zigans.

The physical constitution of this unhappy people is strongly marked. The men are generally of lofty stature, robust and sinewy. Their skin is black or copper-colored, their hair, thick and woolly; their lips are of negro heaviness, and their teeth as white as pearls; the nose is considerably flattened, and the whole countenance is illuminated, as it were, by lively rolling eyes. All, without exception, wear beards. Their dress consists commonly of a piece of tattered cloth thrown carelessly around them; perhaps an old bed curtain given by some master, or a blanket that has gone through every degree of fortune, until it has been rejected by the scullion.

As is the case in many savage tribes, the women are either extremely ugly or extremely handsome. Most of the Zigans are beautiful up to the age of twenty; but, after that time, they suddenly shrink and shrivel, change color, bend, and lose the lightness of their step, as if an enchanter's wand had charged them from youth, admired and wooed, to dishonored old age. The dress of these women is peculiar, consisting generally of nothing but a tight tunic or bodice made of sheep-skin, and scarcely reaching to the knees. It leaves their legs, their arms, and their necks bare. Over their heads the most coquettish throw a white veil, and some few indulge in leather sandals. As ornaments they were ear-rings of brass filligree, necklaces of paras strung upon a slender thong, and a variety of metal bracelets.—The children go naked up to the age of ten or twelve, and whole swarms of girls and boys may sometimes be seen rolling about together in the dust or mud in summer, in the water or snow in winter—like so many black worms. As you pass by, a dozen heads of matted hair and a dozen pairs of sharp eyes are raised towards you, and you are greeted with a mocking shout, which alone tells you that the hideous things are your fellow creatures.

In fine weather the Zigan is a very independent being. He sleeps in the open air, in the forests, in the fields, in the streets of the towns—anywhere, in fact, where he can find a place to lay his head. However, it is their custom, for the summer season, to erect little sheds of canvass, of straw, or of branches, or of mud; whilst in the winter they scratch deep holes in the earth, which they roof with reeds and turf. Their furniture is surprisingly simple, consisting of an old kettle, a few two pronged forks, and perhaps a pair of scissors, a poignard, and a gourd to hold brandy or arakee—to the use of which this race is particularly addicted. When they have stowed these articles into their holes, or under a shed, they call the place their home, and go back to it every night. They squat upon heaps of filth, and begin smoking their pipes, while the women set before them the supper which has been cooked in the before-mentioned old kettle, swung upon three sticks over a fire of wood brought by the children, mixed with a kind of peat. Sometimes a piece of turned meat, which all Christian cooks have rejected in the butcher's shop, or a portion of some animals which have come by an untimely death and has been distributed by a generous Boyard, is added to a portion of beans or maize on which the Zigans generally support their strength. They use no plates or spoons, but dip their hardened fingers into the steaming kettle, and bring up a ball of porridge or a fragment of meat, which they cool by throwing from one palm to the other until they can venture to cast it down their throats. The women and children eat after the men, who, as soon as they have wiped their hands in their hair, take again to their pipes, and—if they can afford it—to drinking. They make themselves merry for an hour or two, until fatigue comes over them and then go pell-mell to their huts, or stretch out by the embers of the fires. Nothing can be more abundantly filthy than the habits of this degraded tribe. They are often compelled to abandon their village on account of the dreadful state to which they have been brought by their carelessness. The abandonment costs them nothing in feeling or in money: they are essentially wanderers. When the air is too pestiferous to breathe, they shoulder their working utensils and the furniture, and remove a mile or two away. If it be summer, they set up their sheds again in a few hours; if it be winter, and the frost has not yet come on, they form subterranean dwellings in the course of half a night.

As we have said, a good many of the Zigans are employed in the rough labors of agriculture. The greater number, however, are artisans, and are celebrated for their ingenuity. Their favorite trade is that of the blacksmith, but they can turn their hands to anything; and the bazaars of Bucharest are filled with a vast variety of toys and fancy-work, which would do credit to our cleverest workmen. But the vagabond tendencies of the Zigan—perhaps, also, the contempt with which he is regarded—prevent him, except in the rare instances we have mentioned, from rising, by means of his industry in the social scale. It is difficult to learn anything of their religious or other opinions. From his talk one would sometimes fancy him to be half a Christian, half Mohammedan; at other times to be a fire-worshipper, an infidel, a believer in fetishes, or what you will. He is a man of many colors, like his language, which contains traces of an original character, but which is encrusted, as it were, with words borrowed (it might, perhaps be more appropriate to say stolen,—for the Zigan, like his brethren we know of, has great propensities) from a dozen different dialects. The sound is not at all unmusical; and some of the songs which have been taken down are curiously characteristic. The following is the beginning of one of them:

"Through all the pathway of the sky
Quail with sharpen'd beak doth fly,
Christos passing with sharp beak,
What, oh dun quail, dost thou seek?
To the grog-shop come with me,
And treat me to some arakee!"

It will be seen from these lines that the ideas of the Zigans on various points are somewhat confused, or at any rate, it seems rather odd to interrupt a pious quail in its doxologies by an invitation to tipple. Perhaps, as in the case of many eastern songs, the words are arbitrarily thrown together for the sake of harmony—an observation that might apply sometimes to the verse-making of our more civilized regions.

The Zigans are not only poets and singers, but they are musicians also, and their favorite instrument is the fiddle. They often ask permission of their masters, the Boyards, to form what are called Witzoulin or storms of music, consisting of ten or twelve members, who go about the country to the towns, and castles of the rich, and let themselves out at so much an hour. No ball is considered complete without one of the musical storms, who ask very little for their services, pretending that they are paid by their pleasure; but who unless they be grievously wronged, generally contrive to leave a deficit behind them somewhere, either in the larder or the hen-roost. They often lead a few bears about with them; and when there are no balls to attend, dance a strange dance among themselves for the amusement of the public. Forming into a circle, men and women, they begin to utter frightful cries, and then, as the fiddle strikes up, whirl, jump, roll, crawl together, separate, throw their arms and legs and arms into the air, wag their heads, shake their bracelets, and work themselves, up into a kind of fury. The dance, in fact is a kind of compendium of the bolero, the salterella, and the fandango. Sometimes, a single performer goes through a ferocious jig, which may be called the jig of murder and suicide, for these two pleasant things are the basis of his representations. The acting is often so clever, that the unaccustomed spectators shriek, and rush away to save themselves. The ragged and breathless artist, fancying they want to escape payment, pursues them with his greasy cap held out, shouting for a piastre.

Little is really known of the relations of the Zigans, among themselves. Marriage can only take place within the limits of the property of one master, whose permission, also, is required before the ceremony can take place. There is no ceremony of betrothal, no intervention of match-makers or friends; the youth goes to the father of the girl he has chosen, and, after some attempts of politeness—as offering a pipe, or praising the length of the old gentlemen's beard—comes straight to the point, and proposes himself as a son-in-law. Few questions are asked, few conditions made. Unless there be some important objections, the young lover receives permission to call his comrades together, and build a hut during the course of the night to receive his bride. The very next day he requests his mother to prepare a full pot of porridge, and then repair to the dwelling—a hole six feet square, or perhaps a tent of branches—where the maiden of his choice, dressed in the sheep skin tunic, with a veil borrowed from a neighbour, is modestly crouching in a corner. He takes her by the hand and leads her to where his family is collected. The oldest man of the tribe is there by appointment, encouraged by a fee of a few handfuls of porridge, and lastly mutters a few words by way of blessing. This is the whole ceremony, if, indeed, the great feed that follows be not more worthy of that name; and thus the Zigans continue from generation to generation. We are sorry to be obliged to add that both women and men are as a rule, exceedingly debauched.—Household Words.

"A quiet tone is observable in the Russian organ!" said Mrs. Partington, as the line in the telegraph news arrested her eye. She mused upon it a moment. "Church organs, I dare say; and we heard tother day that the Emperor of Russia—dear pious man—was organizing his soldiers to go and give the gospel to the Turks at the point of the bayonet. Quiet toned organs! Well, I wonder if they wont get one for our church that'll play nothing but serious tunes, for the one we've got'll play Yanke Doodle jest as well as Old Hundred, and for my part I don't put no faith into it." She looked at the vane on the top of a distant spire that turned in the wind, and mixed its variableness with church organs that prayed many tunes, and men of the church variable as the organs, while Ike was teasing the kitten with a bran new cap border that the old lady was just doing up.

Gold in the eastern townships of Lower Canada is said to be so abundant as too throw the golden discoveries of California and Australia into the shade. What seems rather strange, however, is that all the rumonred rich discoveries have been made on the land belong to the British American Land Company. It is even said that the snow on the land of this Company if carefully melted will yield five dollars worth of gold to the pan of snow. But joking apart, the Sherbroke Guzette says that there is no doubt, that valuable specimens, indicating a rich gold field, have been found, but whether future operations will realize present expectaions, time alone can determine The British Americrn Land Company are busy in preparing to commence work at the "Placers" on the opening of spring. A Defence of Fleas.

(From Household Words.)

One of the peculiarities which strikes me most among the inhabitants of Turkey is their love of fleas. I am obliged to use the word inhabitants, because all are not Turks who live in Turkey; and all are alike in this respect, whether Osmanli, Armenian, Bulgarian, Wallack, Moldavian, Greek, or Jew. They pounce upon them with a cry of delight wherever they find them, and fondle them before putting them to death. They show as much art and address in their capture as a keen sportsman may evince in trying to get a shot at a flock of wild ducks. The fleas are not ungrateful for being thus held in honor, and have effected a very considerable settlement in the country. They are, in point of fact, on of the nationalities of Turkey; the only one which has nothing to ask of government; which has no wrongs to redress, or injured innocence to bluster about. Most of the houses being of wood, they find warm commodious quarters—quarters which are utterly inaccessible to the broom of the houseman. I use the word houseman, because there is no such thing as a housemaid in Turkey.

These little animals are so prompt and ferocious in their assaults, and have, moreover, such a keen appreciation of the delicacy of any fresh arrival, from a distant country, that they keep a stranger in a perpetual state of liveliness and motion: which is, doubtless, extremely beneficial to his health, especially if he be slothful.

No idea of dirt or disgrace seems to attach to a houseful of fleas—these pugnacious little animals being looked upon as recognised proprietors in the country, and as having as much right there as any one else. Any attempt, therefore, to exterminate them from a bed or sofa, would be laughed to scorn utterly. A Perote lady (and a Perote lady is the very essence of fine ladyism,) will often stop several times in the course of a flirtation, languidly to catch a flea upon her dress: feebly smiling while she twiddles him in her fingers, and then passively dropping him on the floor. Two grave Galata merchants will stop in the midst of a bargain sportively to catch a flea on the shirt front of an acquaintance; and cracking out his crisp life on the counter, will proceed to draw a bill on London, or to discuss the exchange, the depreciation of Kaimes, and the rise of gold.

No individual throughout the country seems able to resist the fascination of hunting a flea wherever he sees him. What trapping was to the Red Indians—what the fox-chase was to the squire of our childhood—flea hunting is to the Oriental: it is a passion—a delight. As soon as the lively little game breaks cover, no matter where or when, the eyes of the Perote light up with an unwonted fire; a keen sporting expression passes over his face; he raises his head stealthily by a sort of instinct; the certainty of his aim might pass into a proverb, and the next moment the hand has descended, and the Perote is twiddling his finger and thumb with tranquil satisfaction, and has resumed his occupation, be it what it may. He would stop to catch a flea, on his way to be hanged or to be married. He must have missed appointments, lost fortunes, by the habit; but it is engrafted in his nature, and is unconquerable.

I have gone into rooms where fleas lay thick as dust upon the floor, and each of my steps must have killed hundreds of them; but if I ever ventured to express the smallest distress upon the occasion, I became as incomprehensible to the men of Pera, as if I had told a Chinese I disliked stewed dog.

They will even argue the point with you, if you press them closely, and maintain that the flea is like the elder Mirabeau—the friend of men. They will tell you that fleas keep up an irritation on the skin which is highly beneficial in a hot country, and prevents the accumulation of morbid humors. On my remonstrating also with an hotel waiter about finding them constantly in the bread (some baked and some alive,) that individual, who spoke all the languages of the world in bad French, assured me the baker had a superstition about them, and thought them lucky! Pumping him with a light hand, I found he was not quite free from the same idea himself, and that it obtains generally throughout the country, He said, that to allay the irritation they occasioned, was at all times a pleasing occupation: that it was to be remarked, no flea ever bit a man in a dangerous place or injured his eye, or his ear, or opened an artery; therefore fleas were the friends of men. He did not know (nor do I) what many of the Perote gentlemen would do, if it were not for the unfailing entertainment supplied by fleas. He believed they kept people who had nothing to do out of mischief. He said that the courteous catching of a flea upon the person of another, offered a frequent and pleasant opportunity of commencing a conversation, or beginning an acquaintance. That acquaintances so formed had often ripened into warm and lasting friendships. He had even known more than one instance of Perote marriages brought about by a cheerful and inoffensive gallantry of this kind. He was much surprised at the unjustifiable anger of an English lady at dinner, upon whose shoulder he had succeeded in catching a flea by an adroit movement of his left hand, while his right was occupied in presenting her a dish of kid stuffed with chestnuts. She screamed, and her gentleman threatened to horsewhip him. He confessed his feelings were hurt and his reason confounded by this behavior on the part of my country people. No Perote lady would have raised her eyes from her plate during such an occurrence.

I endeavoured to soothe him by saying we were a people who lived in an inclement climate, and to whom, therefore, the utility of the flea was comparatively unknown; but he would not believe it. He could not bring his mind to bear all at once on a fact which appeared to him so remarkable. I was like the Christian knight who told an African king that he could ride his horse dry-footed over some of our rivers in winter, and who was immediately bow-strung

I remember a personage of no mean rank once calling my attention specially to see him hunt and kill two fleas, who were reposing together on the linen cover of a sofa. He began by rousing them into flight with the golden point of his pencil, and then pursued them in a state of the liveliest excitement for some minutes. (He had a long white beard, and was a man of an august presence.) At length he ran down his game, and taking them in the usual way between his finger and thumb, finally slew them upon the pipestick of a brother sportsman who offered it spontaneously for the purpose.

In the mosques, in the market-place, in the palace by the sweet cool sea-side, and in the coffee-houses in the hot and sultry town—wherever there is a Perote there is a flea, and the Perote's greatest delight is to capture it.

Railway Travelling in Russia.

We proceeded, bag and baggage, to the station of the Moscow Railway. Only one train starts daily; and the hour at which this most important event takes place is, or ought to be eleven, A. M. Travellers are commanded by the government to be at the station at ten precisely; and even then they are liable to be told that the train is full—as it is quite an unheard-of thing to put on an extra carriage for any number of passengers. Having arrived, therefore, at ten minutes before ten, to be quite sure of being in time, our luggage was seized by a soldier, police-man, or railway porter (for they all wear somewhat the same uniform), and carried in one direction, while we rushed in another to show our passport for Moscow, to procure which we had been to three different offices the day before. Here the descriptions of our persons and our reasons for traveling, which it contained, being copied at full length, we were hurried to another counter, where we got it stamped; whence, catching sight of our baggage en passant, we sped on to the ticket-office, and then, returning to our portmanteaux, we went through a few formalities, which ended in receiving a ticket to add to the number of those with which our pockets were now pretty well filled. The anxiety of mind which such a variety of documents causes is not to be wondered at, when the consequences which the loss of any of them would entail are considered. Ladies in Russia do not think of trying to carry their tickets in their gloves. We now betook ourselves to the waiting-room, which we should have thought handsome had we not been detained in it so long that we got tired of admiring it. For an hour did the destined occupants of the train sit patiently on the benches, every man with head uncovered—for even a skull cap is an abomination to a Russian under a roof. Every man in military garb seemed to have the entree to the platform, while the doors were rigorously shut against us unhappy civilians. At a quarter before eleven, however, they are opened—a general rush follows, and we are hurried through the barrier, the door closes behind us. Soon the whole barrier becomes thronged with people, waving their adieus as ardently as if we were booked for Australia. A bell, a whistle, and a sort of dull attempt at a scream, are, as in more civilized parts of the world, the signal for starting; we leave the weeping eyes and waving pocket handkerchiefs, behind us, and in the course of ten minutes, find, to our satisfaction, that we have increased to fifteen miles an hour. We have hardly done so ere we have arrived at a station. Everybody rushes out and lights a cigarette. We are to stop here ten minutes, and the people during that time walk up and down the platform and smoke; then we huddle into our old places, and have time to look about us. A second class carriage accommodates about fifty people. They are built as in Austria and America, with a passage in the center, perambulated by a man in uniform, who occasionally asks people for their tickets. He seems to make inquiry the first time to satisfy himself that you have got one, and afterwards more as an amusement, which he apparently enjoys the more if he fancies you are going to sleep. The men are bearded, and dirty, and relate stories in a loud tone of voice, for the whole company, most of whom have evidently never been in a railway before. At every station the same scene ensues. The unsmoked ends of the last station's cigars having been carefully preserved, are lighted afresh, and vehemently smoked on the platform during five or ten minutes, as the case may be. The stations are all very spacious and uniformly constructed, with an immense domed building for engines attached to each. Though there is only one passenger-train daily, there are three goods trains, always well loaded with inland produce, tallow, fur, tea, &c., or with cotton from St. Petersburg to the interior. I should hardly think the line could possibly pay; but as it is a government concern nobody has any means of ascertaining this fact. Whether it pays or not, the railway traveler in Russia soon discovers that the requirements of trade are as little regarded by government as his own personal convenience; for the restrictive policy of the empire must ever neutralise, in a great measure, the beneficial effects of rapid communication, while the difficulties which have always been placed in the way of free mercantile intercourse exist in full force, though the physical obstacles by which it has hitherto been encompassed are overcome. In fact, though the public cannot but be benefited by the formation of railroads throughout a country, it is hardly for the public benefit that railroads are constructed here. Russian railroads seem to be meant for Russian soldiers; and it is the facility thus afforded of moving large bodies of men, that invests this mode of communication in Russia with an importance which does not attach to it in Great Britain, or perhaps any other country in Europe, to an equal extent. When St. Petersburg, Moscow, Odessa, and Warsaw become connected, Russia assumes an entirely new position with regard to the rest of Europe. A few days, instead of many months, will then suffice to concentrate the armies of the north and south upon the Austrian or Prussian frontiers. Through this same quarter of the world, many hundred years ago, poured those barbaric hordes which over-ran civilized Europe;—it would, indeed, be a singular testimony to the spirit of the age, if the next invaders made their descent by means of railroads.—Russian Shores of the Black Sea.

"Why is the letter d like a ring?" asked a young lady of her lover, who was as the generality of his sex in such a situation; "Because," added the damsel, with a modest look, "you can't be wed without it."

The Oyster Business.

The New York Journal of Commerce is telling us all about the trade that is carried on in Oysters on the coasts of the Northern States—particularly Connecticut. The facts, as we give them, are interesting, and will be new, we think, to many of our readers.

Contrary to the prevailing notion, a comparatively small proportion of the oysters for which this region (Connecticut) is so famous, are natives here, but are brought from Chesapeake Bay, in immense quantities in the spring, when they are planted, to be taken up in the fall. Their original cost is about 25 cents per bushel, to which 15 cents for freight is added. Native oysters, being generally preferred by epicures, are nearly all consumed at home, while the adopted Southern oysters are sent off in every direction, to all parts of the country.—The method of preserving them is singular. They are first opened and put in kegs or cans, which are afterwards packed in boxes containg ice, of a capacity equal to from welve to twenty gallons each.

The enormous extent of this trade may be inferred when it is known that from 150 to 200 vessels, mostly schooners, are employed in conveying oysters to this port (New Haven)—the cargoes consisting of from 2000 to 6000 bushels. The profits, too, have been highly remunerative, where ordmary sagacity has been exercised: one firm having cleared during the last four years $75,000 or $100,000. 'Failure' in the oysters is scarcely ever known. The business is chiefly engrossed by about twenty firms, the largest of whom send off from 1000 to 1500 gallons of oysters per day. The firm of Levi Rowe & Co., who have one of the largest establishments, with branch houses in Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Hamilton, C. W., &c., estimate that their business this season will amount to 150,000 gallons. No less than twenty vessels are employed by them, and from 75 to 100 individuals, mostly girls and boys, find constant employment in taking oysters from the shell, during six months in the year. These girls often acquire a wonderful dexterity in their department, the several movements required in going through the process being performed with all the regularity and precision observed in touching the keys of a pianoforte. If set to music, however, the ear would be grated with a succession of sounds much like this—click—gonge—splash! Click—gonge—splash! &c. The first indicates the use of the hammer in removing the edges of the shell; second, the insertion of the knife; third, the final deposition of the disemboweled animal in a tub prior to packing. The hammer is thrown down each time it is used, but the knife is always retained in one hand. These openers receive as compensation 2 cents a quart, and some of them earn $2 per day, though $1 is more commonly earned. As there are about 150 oysters to the gallon, the individual who opens 100 quarts, or 25 gallons per pay necessarily opens 3750 oysters during that time.

The operation of planting is after this fashion: The oyster vessels, upon their arrival from the south, are anchored near the site of the proposed beds, and their cargoes are removed by small boats which come along side. The beds are formed by staking off the groumd into small lots or squares, each of which is spread over with about fifty bushels so laid that one shall not lay on another. By Fall, the oysters have considerably increased in size, and greatly improved in flavor. If allowed to remain too long in the beds, the oyster, not being acclimated to northern winters, perishes with cold.

Sugar-Making Weather.

The 3rd and 4th of March were excellent sugar-making, or, rather, sap-running days. This favorite occupation of old Canadians, and the natives of America, is carried on mostly in March. There is something in it very agreeable and healthy. In the March air, in the woods, there is often a stillness, broken only by the chirping of the little woodpecker, the cry of the jay, or the gambols of the squirrels; which pleases the thoughtful mind. The woods begin to smell like spring, the sap to mount the trunks of the trees, and hence the buds to swell. The autumn leaves crackle under the feet, and the snow lies in patches over the forest. In the back townships, it lies unthawed in the dense forests, awaiting April suns. The country boys and girls delight to spend a few hours each day about the sugar-bush. Sugaring-off has delights for the country swains, which city gentility knows little of. Here many a future rustic match commences; and love plays his pranks over the bowl of maple sugar. The girls are invited to the sugar-bush, at the sugaring-off; and, in turn, invite their male favorites to the Canadian quilting-bee. Live on and love, ye happy country girls; for, while you know not the cares, vanity and nonsense of city life, health, happiness and contentment dwell in your hearts.—Son of Temperance.

Water.—Some four-fifths of the weight of the human body are nothing but water. The blood is just a solution of the body in a vast excess of water—as saliva, mucus, milk, gall, urine, sweat and tears are the local and partial infusions infected by that liquid. All the soft solid parts of the frame may be considered as even temporary precipitates or crystalizations (to use the word but loosely) from the blood, that mother-liquor of the body; always being precipitated or suffered to become solid, and always being redissolved, the forms remaining, but the matter never the same for more than a moment, so that the flesh is only a vanishing solid, as fluent as the blood itself. It has also to be observed, that every part of the body, melting again into the river of life continually as it does, is kept perpetually drenched in blood by means of the blood-vessels, and more than nine-tenths of that wonderful current is pure water. Water plays as great a part, indeed, in the economy of that little world, the body of man, as it still more evidently does in the phenomenal life of the world at large. Three-fourths of the surface of the earth is ocean; the dry ground is dotted with lakes, its mountain-crests are covered with snow and ice, its surface is irrigated by rivers and streams, its edges are eaten by the sea; and aqueous vapour is unceasingly ascending from the ocean and inland surfaces through the yielding air, only to descend in portions and at intervals in dews and rains, hails and snows. Water is not only the basis of the juices of all the plants and animals in the world; it is the very blood of nature, as is well known to all the terrestial sciences; and old Thales, the earliest of European speculators, pronounced it the mother-liquid of the universe. In the later systems of the Greeks, indeed, it was reduced to the inferior dignity of being only one of the four parental natures—fire, air, earth and water; but water was the highest in rank.—Westminster Review.

The Mysteries of Cookery.—It is said that some of the great cooks of ancient Greece carried their art to such perfection, that they were able to serve up a whole pig, boiled on one side and roasted on the other, and stuffed besides, though without visible mark of the knife upon it. The inventor of this feat was cruel enough to keep the process secret for a whole year. At length it was revealed that he had bled the animal to death by a very small wound under the shoulder, by which he had also extracted the entrails piecemeal; that he had forced the stuffing down the throat; and that, by means of barley-paste, he had prevented the roasting on one side, having boiled it afterwards. It is said also of these Greek cooks, that by their saltings, picklings, and fryings, they could actually make a turnip pass for any kind of fish or flesh they chose!

Evenings at Home.

Now stir the fire, and close the shutters fast;
Let fall the curtains; wheel the sofa round;

Throws up a steamy column, and the cups
That cheer but not inebriate, wait on each:

Cowper's "Task."

A Persian Fable.—A merchant had a pet parrot, and previous to going to India he asked Poll what present he should bring her. "No present," said the parrot, "only when you see my brothers dancing on the green sward, tell them how I pine in a little prison." The Merchant journeyed and delivered the message, and a parrot immediately fell dead from a tree. The merchant returned and immediately told his parrot, who fell dead from his perch on hearing the news. The merchant, with tears, picked up the body and cast it out, when to his surprise, the parrot revived and flew to a tree, singing, "The India parrot taught me to die to be free. One day, O master, thou shalt so gain thy freedom!"

CALL FOR A NATIONAL EMIGRATION CONVENTION OF COLORED MEN,

To be held in Cleveland, Ohio, on the 24th, 25th and 26th of August, 1854.

Men and Brethern:—The time has now fully come, when we, as an oppressed people, should do something effectively, and use those means adequate to the attainment of the great and long desired end—to do something to meet the actual demands of the present and prospective necessities of the rising generation of our people in this country. To do this, we must occupy a position of entire equality, of unrestricted rights, composing in fact, an acknowledged necessary part of the ruling element of society in which we live. The policy necessary to the preservation of this element must be in our favor, if ever we expect the enjoyment, freedom, sovereignty, and equality of rights anywhere. For thas purpose, and to this end, then, all colored men in favor of emigration out of the United States, and opposed to the American Colonization sheme of leaving the Western Hemisphere, are requested to meet in CLEVELAND, OHIO, on TUESDAY, the 24th DAY of AUGUST, 1854, in a great NATIONAL CONVENTION, then and there, to consider and decide upon the great and important subject of emigration from the United States.

No person will be admitted to a seat in the Convention, who would introduce the subject of emigration to the Eastern Hemisphere—either to Asia, Africa, or Europe—as our object and determination is to consider our claims to the West Indies, Central and South America, and the Canadas. This restriction has no reference to personal preference, or individual enterprise; but to the great question of national claims to come before the Convention.

All persons coming to the Convention must bring credentials properly authenticated, or bring verbal assurance to the Committee on Credentials—appointed for the purpose—of their fidelity to the measures and objects set forth in this Call; as the Convention is specifically by and for the friends of emigration, and NONE OTHERS—and no opposition to them will be entertained.

The question is not whether our condition can be bettered by emigration, but whether it can be made worse. It not, then, there is no part of the wide-spread universe, where our social and political condition are not better than here in our native country, and nowhere in the world as here, proscribed on account of color.

We are friends, too, and ever will stand shoulder to shoulder by our brethren, and all true friends in all good measures adopted by them, for the bettering of our condition in this country, and surrender no rights but with our last breath; but as the subject of emigration is of vital importance, and has ever been shunned by all delegated assemblages of our people as heretofore met, we cannot longer delay, and will not be further baffled; and deny the right of our most sanguine friend or dearest brother, to prevent an intelligent enquiry to, and the carrying out of these measures, when this can be done, to our entire advantage, as we propose to show in Convention—as the West Indies, Central and South America—the majority of which are peopled by our brethren, or those identified with us in race, and what is more, destiny, on this continent—all stand with open arms and yearning hearts, import

SLAVERY RAMPANT.

The following is an extract from a sermon recently preached by Rev. Wm. H. Furness, of Philadelphia, one of the few clergymen in the States, who dare to speak boldly and openly, the whole truth respecting the sinfulness of Slavery. It is earnest and impressive, and exhibits faithfully the present aggressive attitude of the slave power.

I remember perfectly well, when I was young, and the subject of Slavery was mentioned, old men shook their heads and looked grave, and said, that was the curse that would blast the hopes of the country and bring ruin on this land. Mr. Jefferson said, "I tremble for my country when I think of the justice of Heaven." And it was anticipated then that the way in which this great evil was to work us woe, would be by bloody massacre and insurrection, by a fierce war of the two races, black and white. But now it would work our ruin in a more cunning way, not by stirring up the slaves to deeds of blood, but by taking advantage of our great outward prosperity to extinguish the spirit of freemen in our hearts, to obliterate all sense of the difference between Freedom and Oppression, by buying us up with its blood-earned cotton, and making us all directly or indirectly slaveholders, if not slave makers. This is the way in which the forebodings of our fathers are now being realized.

But, after all, friends, the picture of the future, to which passing events are pointing us, is so dark and appalling, that although it is hoping against hope, I cannot but think that the people of these States, still calling themselves Free, are not yet so blinded and besotted by their material success, not yet so lost to all faith in the divine worth of Freedom and Humanity, but that they will see, before it is too late, and that this Nebraska Bill will enable them to see—that it is utterly idle to expect to keep any terms with this outrageous Wrong; that it is bound by the very instinct of its nature to wage ceaseless war with Freedom; that it will not and cannot respect even its own compacts and compromises a single instant after they have ceased to serve its purposes; that it will never be satisfied until it has erased every vestige of Liberty from the land. And if so, then the lovers and servants of Freedom have no alternative but to insist upon its entire Abolition. We are not safe so long as it is suffered to linger on a single foot of our soil. There are those who would fain be content with driving it back within its original limits and keeping it there. But it was once confined within only seven States, instead of its present number fifteen. And yet it could not be kept there. See how triumphantly it is marching over the Broad West, trampling in the dust the limits which it once professed to respect, and seizing and wielding as its rightful sceptre the whole power of the central government. I repeat, there is no alternative. No terms are to be or can be kept with it. With one heart and soul and at every hazard, Union or no Union, we must, in all righteous ways, go for its entire banishment from this soil. For so long as it lasts the Union is not a Union of free men with free men, but a Union of masters and slaves.

And now the present perilous crisis of our affairs gives us at least one advantage, namely, that whereas in times past Slavery has claimed to be only standing on the defensive against Northern agitators and mischiefmakers, it has now itself assumed an offensive attitude. Under no pretended pressure of necessity even, it has opened upon us the whole subject anew, and it has shown that no time-honored agreement shall stand in its way. It challenges us to the conflict. We must resist it, or hold out our hands for its manacles. Most earnestly do I pray that we may see and understand the portentous signs of the time; that we may hear the voice of Freedom calling upon us aloud to come to her aid, now in sore peril; that our hearts may thrill and burn with the appeal of mankind, adjuring us by every sacred consideration, by all that we hold dear on earth and in Heaven, to be faithful to our outraged and hunted brother, as we would that he should be faithful to us, were we in his place and he in ours.

I would fain persuade myself that, enervated and made selfish as we are by the wonderful prosperity that is so rapidly multiplying our numbers, and building our cities anew and in increasing splendor almost every year, I would fain hope that we have not yet wholly lost all power to discern the priceless utility of magnanimity and self-sacrifice. Your money, be it ever so safely invested, can be of use to you but a very little while. In a few years, at the farthest, you must resign it all, every cent of it. It cannot purchase for you a single hour. It can afford you no consolation at last. But, and this is its noblest use, it can buy you an inward satisfaction which the world cannot give nor take away. Be ready to sacrifice it utterly for the sake of Freedom and of God; serve God with it by devoting it to the welfare of man, by holding it as a trust put into your hands for this very purpose, and you will receive new revelations, of what is really useful, worth living and worth dying for. In the conscious love and possession of things invisible, intangible, imperishable, you will come to know, what no argument could convince you of, the undying, divine soul of your being. Serving God thus, you will experience his Almighty Power to bless you beyond all that you could have asked or imagined. Praying to him, hungering and thirsting for righteousness, for the deliverance and welfare of mankind, you will be profited indeed, even with that inward peace, which will remain undisturbed though the earth be removed out of its place and the mountains be cast into the midst of the sea, a peace which no words can describe, and which passes all understanding.

THE CHRISTIAN'S DUTY TO LIBERTY.

At length, God seems to have caught the wicked in their own craft. It was not in the power of all the men in the North to develop so earnest a feeling against Slavery and for Liberty as is now finding a tongue, and giving itself forth, all over the North. All that for which we have been counted uncharitable, by men anxious to be honourable toward the South, has come to pass.

We have steadfastly declared that Slavery was not, and could not be, a local influence, simply because it was a local institution. A morass may have a local position, but the malaria which it exhales will fill the whole atmosphere, and be wafted by the winds in every direction. Slavery is felt in every fibre of our nation. It has deadened the public feeling to liberty. It has suppressed every generous expression of liberty, except when cautiously guarded was limited to whites. It has brought our young men to use all the specious reasonings that monarchists, the world over, employ in defence of oppression. There has not been since the days of Nimrod, the patriarch of slave-hunters, to this hour, a plea for injustice, a sophistry in favour of the absolute power of one man over another, that our young men have not been taught to employ. That sense of the sacredness of man which the Bible inspires has been lost. That outright expression of men's natural rights and civil equality, which every one of our old revolutionary documents breathes, and of which the Declaration of Independence is a type, has become unpopular, and is very widely regarded as a patriotic flourish, very well for the times in which it was uttered, but not founded in truth, and not to be honored by us. The whole body politic has been poisoned.

We have declared, from the beginning, that the South was untrustworthy; that there could be no honour among men who were engaged to defend an institution which epitomized every evil and every crime which it was possible for man to commit upon man. We have forewarned men, that the South, after using them for their own purposes, would at length pay them off as Judas was paid by the priests. But it is worse than that. The priests would not touch the thirty pieces, which the wretch, in his remorse, desired them to retake. The South is determined to clutch again the price paid to the North for allowing slave States to come into the Union against her clear moral convictions!

We have, in every form, protested against compromises, and declared that the two parties to compromises, such as have played so important a part in our past history, were either knaves on the one side, or dupes on the other; or, if both parties sacrificed principle for a consideration, they were like the soldiers who, while Christ hung a dying, divided his raiment between them upon the throw of dice.

We have, above all, over and over again, conjured sober men not to believe that there could be any peace—abiding, profitable peace—growing out of settlements so false as compromises must always be. There can never be peace till there is justice at the bottom of it. All the power of God in the Gospel is engaged to agitate and bombard any peace that does not make rectitude its foundation; and, on the other hand whatever storms are in the heavens, that which is founded on right and truth shall be like the house built upon a rock.

We repeat these things, because we believe that the public mind is in a condition to learn; and it is important beyond measure, that certain facts and principles should be taken, and now made the basis of all further action.

1. It is utterly impossible for Slavery and Liberty to exist under the same Constitution without conflicts and agitations, which will grow more and more violent, as the nation grows in strength, until one or the other is utterly subdued.

2. Compromises are demoralizing and utterly fallacious. They do not remove the disease; they only drug the sense of pain with an opiate, leaving it to spring up again with increased violence.

3. All those scruples of honour and forbearance which have led the North to keep back her testimony, to hold in her breath, and forego such a religious expression of her abhorrence of Slavery as it was in her power to make, have been wasted. We are dealing with an antagonist that takes all and gives nothing.

We defy any man to give a single instance in our whole history in which the South has made a single CONCESSION TO LIBERTY!

She has been haughty and dictatorial. She has been restless and threatening. She has demanded concession upon concession. She has accepted them at our hands, as a lord takes his vassal's tribute. Our magnanimity has been wasted upon men that only know how to despise them who yield habitually to their unjust demands.

4. For the last time, God has called upon the North! When these remaining territories pass over to the South, there is no thing more left. We pass into the minority. Liberty thenceforth is a faction; despotism will be crowned, and regent. What we do for all time, must be done now.

5. But, in this extremity, it is very possible that some sugared expedient, some treacherous and smooth-named middle course will be suggested. If the North has not yet learned that middle courses are quicksands, she may despair of learning anything ever by that sharpest of all schoolmasters—Experience. We must sink our shaft down below all reasons of expediency, all reasons of present ease, all mercenary reasons, until we find solid ground of moral principle. Let the conscience of the North settle this question, not her fears. God calls us to a religious duty. Long has our talent laid in a napkin. Our testimony for liberty has been waived; our assertion of freedom has been timid and without enthusiasm. We have refused to accept at God's hands the true mission of the North, to preach liberty to the captives, and elevation to the whole human family. At length, let the banner flow out to the winds; let the battle begin. There will never be another day of grace if this goes past. Retreat now, and the North will never retreat again.

6. We beseech Christian men and ministers to put this question where it belongs, upon a religious basis. Let them think of their duty in the assertion of human rights, in their own land, as they feel their duty of preaching the truth of Christ, whether men will hear, or whether they will forbear.

Oh! that God, by breathing a spirit of prayer upon his people, and of unflinching fidelity, would give us a token that He has appeared at length for our salvation!—H. W. Beecher, in the Independent.

EXPECTED MIGRATION OF TOBACCO PLANTERS.

That the slaveholders really expect to occupy Nebraska, notwithstanding what is said in certain quarters, is clear from the following paragraphs, which we transcribe from the Charleston Courier of the 18th instant. It is part of an answer to the censure passed upon Senator Butler's course by some of his constituents in South Carolina:

"Do the exceptants to Senator Butler's course ever ask themselves what they would have gained, if the Nebraska and Kansas bill had passed without the removal or abolition of the Missouri line, to which those regions have been expressly subjected by the legislation and compromise of 1820? The result would undoubtedly have been the surrender of those territories to the free soilers. Although we hold it clear that the Missouri restriction is unconstitutional, there are a large number who think otherwise, and nothing short of an abolition or removal will have the effect of opening those territories to slaveholders. We have reason to believe, from reliable authority, that, without this measure, a non-slaveholding population would at once occupy those territories, and the slaveholders, now there, would have to recede—nay, to give way to an emigrant horde of red republicans, in principle, if not in national origin, full of the deadliest hostility to Slavery. But, remove the Missouri line and restrictions, and Kansas, we are well assured, will be settled by tobacco-planters, for the production of which staple the soil and climate are said to well adapted; and Nebraska will almost necessary take its social character and political complexion, and local institutions, from Missouri, on which it borders. If Senator Butler had deserted his Southern associates, he may have contributed to defeat the bill—but he would have assumed the responsibility of dividing the now united South, and would have achieved, for his constituents and the South, "an Irishman's gain"—he would have gained a loss.

"The bill, reduced to its true character, and freed from all sophistical confusion, and especially from the glosses of men of extreme views, on either side, is nothing more than all territorial bills, under the constitution of the United States, except that it removes doubt by declaratory legislation, by impliedly, if not expressly, asserting the supremacy of the constitution over the unconstitutional Missouri Compromise and restriction of 1820."

Of the possession of the lower part of Nebraska, called Kansas in Douglas's bill, the slaveholders feel very sure, in case the bill should become a law. The tobacco-planters are ready to emigrate thither with their slaves; and where they fix themselves, the free laborer, "the red republican," as the Charleston print calls him, will not settle. That region is expected "to take its social character, and political complexion, and local institutions, from Missouri, on which it borders;" in other words, Slavery will be transplanted to Nebraska the momant the bill passes. Once planted, we need not say how impossible it will be to root it out. The passage we yesterday quoted from Mr. Butler's remarks, made on Monday in the Senate, shows that they expect to hold their bondmen by sufferance. There is to be no legislation on the subject; the representatives of the territory are to pass no new laws, and yet Slavery is to exist, and spread, and become the custom of the land. The master, when his right is questioned, is to answer, that he holds is work-people as property under the Constitution.—Evening Post.

CONSTITUTION OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL.

For the purpose of improving the character, developing the intelligence, maintaining the rights and organizing a Union of the Colored People of the Free States, the National Convention does hereby ordain and institute the

"NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE COLORED PEOPLE"

Art. 1. This Council shall consist of two members from each State, represented in this Convention, to be elected by this Convention, and two other members from each State to be elected as follows: On the 15th day of November next, and biennially thereafter, there shall be held in each State, a Poll, at which each colored inhabitant may vote who pays ten cents as poll-tax; and each State shall elect, at such election, such delegates to State Legislatures, twenty in number from each State, at large. The election to be held at such places and under such conditions as the public meetings in such localities may determine. There shall be a farm attached to the School.

Art. 4. The committee on Protective Unions shall institute a Protective Union for the purchase and sale of articles of domestic consumption, and shall unite and aid in the formation of branches auxiliary to their own.

Art. 5. The committee on Business Relations, shall establish an office, in which they shall keep a registry of colored mechanics, artizans and business men throughout the Union. They shall keep a registry of all persons willing to employ colored men in business, to teach colored boys mechanical trades, liberal and scientific professions, and farming; and also, a registry of colored men and youth seeking employment or instruction. They shall also report upon any avenues of business or trade which they deem inviting to colored capital, skill or labor. Their reports and advertisements to be in papers of the widest circulation. Art. 7. Each committee shall have absolute control over its special department; shall make its own by-laws, and in case of any vacancy occurring, shall fill up the same forthwith subject to the confirmation of the council. Each committee shall meet at least once a month or as often as possible; shall keep a minute of all its proceedings, executive and financial, and shall submit a full statement of the same, with the accounts audited, at every regular meeting of the National council.

Art. 8. The National council shall meet at least once in six months, to receive the reports of the committees, and to consider any new plan for the general good, for which it shall have power, at its option, to appoint a new committee, and shall be empowered to receive and appropriate donations for the carrying out of the objects of the same. At all such meetings, eleven members shall constitute a quorum. In case any committee neglect or refuse to send in its report, according to article 8th, then the council shall have power to enter the bureau, examine the books and papers of such committee; and in case the committee shall persist in its refusal or neglect, then the council shall declare their offices vacant, and appoint others in their stead.

Art. 12. A member of the council shall be member of only one of the committees thereof.

Resolved, That the Council shall be delegated to select its various Committee.

Resolved, That the Council shall have power to offer a premium for prize essays on different subjects agreed on by Council.

Resolved, That the said Council shall hear and grant petitions, and be governed by the rules of legislative bodies, and their decisions shall be final.

Resolved, That in establishing a National Council for our own special improvement, and a Manual Labor School for the education of our children in science, literature and mechanical arts, this Convention do this, not to build ourselves up as a distinct and seperate class in this country, but as a means to a great end, viz: the equality in political rights, and in civil and social privileges with the rest of the American people.

Anti-Slavery Movement in Cuba.

Resolutions have been introduced, and are now pending in the Legislature of Louisiana, denouncing the administration for not interfering to prevent the abolition of slavery in Cuba. Our telegraphic despatch of yesterday brought us this piece of intelligence. The south is evidently getting very uneasy about the active philanthropy of their neighbor, the Captain General of Cuba. Pezuela has already shown a disposition towards freedom, which, however, it may be in accordance with the dictates of justice and humanity, is not, of course, in harmony with the southern sentiment.

The freedom of the emancipados the colonization scheme, and the tariff limiting the price of slaves promulgated by the Captain General of Cuba, are three severe blows to the slavery interest. The direct effect of each and all of these measures is to reduce the value of slaves as a marketable commodity, and thus to give a competition to free labor. These are cunningly devised measures on the part of the Captain-General of Cuba. They are based upon a very shrewd calculation of the meanness and selfishness of mankind. To turn the interest of the Cubans in behalf of liberty, might be practicable when no hope was left for converting their hearts. Hopeless of any scheme of pure benevolence, distrustful of appeals to the sentiment of the slave owners, Pezuela wastes no time upon the Cuban's love of his fellows, for it may be hard to reach, but goes straight to the Cuban's self-interest, which meets him in the way.

We have hopes that the present Governor of Cuba, if not prematurely interrupted by the cabals and intrigues of the Court of Spain, may do much for humanity in the island of Cuba. The proposition before the Legislatnre of Louisiana, asking for interference with the 'domestic institutions' of Spain, comes strangely enough from the South, so jealous of all meddling, either by word or deed, with their own peculiar condition.—*N. Treatment of Coloured Subjects of Great Britain in the United States.

Mr. Kinnard wished to ask the noble Lord the Leader of the House, in what state the correspondence between the British and United States Government with reference to colored seamen [being British subjects,] on the vessels to which they belong arriving at a port in any of the Southern States being imprisoned on account of their color, now was, and whether there was any truth in the report that colored seamen [being British subjects] have been not only imprisoned but afterwards sold into slavery, if unable to pay the cost of their imprisonment? He had documents in his possession which led him to believe that this had occurred.

Lord John Russell said: Lord Clarendon was of opinion that it would be better not to produce the correspondence, relying on the Legislature of the States to make such alterations in their laws as would prevent the currence of their causes of complaint. [illegible] hear.] In Carolina the Governor [illegible] posed an alteration which had not [illegible] ried into effect, but it was understood it would be again proposed [illegible] believing that there would be [illegible] provement in the legislation [illegible] na and Georgia upon [illegible] Clarendon, he repeated, [illegible] the correspondence

Fugitive Slaves and their Sable Advocate.

In the valuable Report on the last Census of the American States, to which we have more than once referred, there is a paragraph devoted to "Slaves," which deserves especial notice. "The number of slaves who ran away from their masters within the year ending June, 1850, was 1,011." Of these, it is asserted, many were retaken. This is a loose way of stating the fact; and we can have no doubt that the number who effected their escape was much larger. But it is well to have the fact admitted, that slaves were making their escape from American Institutions at the rate of at least a thousand a-year, while the boasted manumissions, by which the American Colonizationists have pretended that Slavery was to be gradually abolished, were, in the same year, only 1,468, of whom some were sent to Liberia." Of the 1,468 manumitted, 1,130 were from the four old States of Virginia, Delaware, Maryland, and Kentucky, where slave-labour has long ceased to be profitable in working the exhausted soil. The fugitives are chiefly from the Southern States, in which the living "property" is more valuable. The slave-population of the United States has increased in the last ten years, at the rate of 28 per cent., having risen from 1,487,356 to 3,204,089; while the free colored have increased only 10 per cent. and now number 482,661. We leave our readers to calculate how long it will take, to get rid of Slavery in the United States, by the combined operation of manumissions and the "underground railroad," or "taking French leave."

In listening, however, to Mr. S. R. Ward's simple and touching anecdotes of the escape of the poor fugitives from American freedom, it occured to us, that one of the pleasantest sites that a philanthropist could well pitch upon for a residence, would be near the Suspension Bridge over the Niagara, on Queen VICTORIA'S side of the river, or on some spot commanding the ferry. It must be a sight worth crossing the Atlantic for, to see a brave fellow suddenly transformed by the effect of crossing that stream, from a mere chattel, a vendible commodity, a beast of burden, into man. The old legendary superstition, which tells us that witchcraft is dissolved by running water, is here realized. Many a poor black TAM-O'-SHANTER fleeing for his life, has been known to save it here as by a neck. Mr. Ward tells us of a poor fugitive lad, who, on approaching the ferry, recognised, to his dismay, his owner, and was seen by him. Away he flew to the Suspension-bridge, his master after him, and never looked behind him, till he stood free upon British soil. In another instance, the fugitive was in the ferry-boat, when his owner, riding up, threatened to shoot the ferryman if he pushed off. The slave (as he still was,) snatching up a bar of iron, declared he would kill him if he did not cut away. The ferry-man, remarking that, if he must lose his life, it would be best lose it in doing right, pushed off; while the pursuer, pistol in hand, remained paralysed by astonishment and vexation at the successful courage of his lost property.

When, however, we hear or read of these fugitive slaves, one is always apt to picture them as negroes, or at least of ebony hue. The Census recognises no distinction of complexion or race. There is a great difference, however, made in the market. A young mulatto girl, not darker than a European brunette, fetches a fancy price with American connoisseurs; and slaves may be met with, with the Anglo-Saxon blue eye and flaxen ringlets, who are just as liable to be seized as effects, by a creditor, and sold to the highest bidder, as is any Uncle TOM. Mr. Ward mentioned the case of a lady who had to take to flight with her daughter, both being the slaves of the girl's father; and so perfectly white was the child, that the mother succeeded in passing her off as her young mistress, and herself as her attendant, and thus effected the escape of both. The fact is, American Christians are very particular about colour in free persons; and, in the North more especially, they have Black pews and Black churches; but they allow no such illiberal prejudices to disturb them in respect to white, brown, or black property. We are afraid, that we shall never obtain any honest statistics respecting the colour of American slaves. Yet it is a point not undeserving the notice of our Ethnologists, and Professor AGASSIZ himself. Possibly, they may have some ingenious hypothesis to explain the springing up of these anthropolgical varieties. Be it observed, that the blue-eyed and flaxen-haired, or olive-coloured slaves of the United States, are not merely distinguished by colour, which may vary in the same race almost as much as the plumage of birds of the same genus, but by their Indo-European features and craniological characteristics. Away, then, with the cant about the separation between the races! Of the fugitive slaves, many have as little of the negro about them, as their Anglo-Saxon owners.

As to our friend S. R. Ward, we are glad that he is unmistakably black; as black as an Ethiopian Arab; as black as was probably the Egyptian Memnon, or the Indian Gaudama Budha; as black as the Moorish conquerrors of Carthage and Grenada. We are glad of this, because we think his appearance among us, more perhaps than that of any colored Christian minister who has yet visited this country, will tend to disabuse the public of the lingering prejudice which attaches the idea of mental inferiority to a sable hue. Mr. Ward is himself a living demonstration of the essential unity of the human family. We will match him as a living witness against Professor AGASSIZ, HAMILTON SMITH, and all the infidel Ethnologists or Anthropologists of Slavedom. Born a slave, both his parents slaves, but brought up in freedom won by his mother's courage, he is in voice and elocution more European, more English, than are the majority of American citizens. He has neither the Indian expression of countenance, nor the nasal enunciation, of the proud Yankee. He has the frankness, the modesty, the tact, and the sound judgement which we are apt to regard as the prerogative of an educated gentleman. Uneducated he is not; self-educated he is, of necessity, and keenly to the value of those literary advantages which he was debarred. In public address no man can more accurately and beautifully observe the broad distinction between the proprieties of the pulpit and the vacities of the platform. Although the first orator of his colour that has appeared on a metropolitan platform, he is nothing the most like an Anglo-Saxon but feature and complexion undeniably of the Ethiopic type. We hope that the practical to thousands among us, upon the Inspired declaration, that "God has made of one blood all nations that dwell upon earth," will not be forgotten; that the imaginary wall of partition between the races, will be seen to be a theory as unphilosophical and contrary to fact as it is anti-Christian in sentiment; and, above all, that, when, henceforth, we hear of the enforcement of the execrable Fugitive Slave Law, and of the hunting down with dogs of the fugitive American Slave, Englishmen and Englishwomen will call to mind—not any heroine of fiction,—but the mother of WARD, fleeing with her infant charge to escape from being sold away from both husband and child, or, the slave-mother who acted as servant to her white slave-daughter, to avoid their brutal capture, or, the mulatto maiden fleeing to escape being put up to auction in the slave-market. Most sincerely do we congratulate Mr. WARD upon the success which has attended his patriotic efforts on behalf of his poor Canadian fellow-subjects; and, when he leaves us, he may feel well assured, that the cause of the Fugitive Slave, which he has so eloquently pleaded, will not be forgotten by the Evangelical Churches of this country.

Religious Character of the Chinese Revolution.

DEAR SIR: As every thing regarding the insurgents possesses a degree of interest at the present moment, I beg leave to send you the following account:

Having obtained admission into the city of Shanghai, this afternoon, I proceeded to one of the chapels belonging to the London Missionary Society, where I commenced preaching to a large congregation, which had almost immediately gathered within the walls. I was descanting on the folly of idolatry, and urging the necessity of worshipping the one true God, on the ground that he alone could protect his servants, while idols were things of nought, destined soon to perish out of the land—when suddenly a man stood up in the midst of the congregation, and exclaimed, "That is true—that is true—the idols must perish, and shall perish. I am a Kwang-se man, a follower of Tae-ping-wang; we all of us worship one God, (Shangte,) and believe in Jesus, while we do our utmost to put down idolatry; every where demolishing the temples, and destroying the idols, and exhorting the people to forsake these superstitions. When we commenced, two years ago, we were only 3000 in number, and we have marched from one end of the empire to the other, putting to flight whole armies of the Mandarin troops that were sent against us. If it had not been that God was on our side, we could not have thus prevailed against such overwhelming numbers; but now our troops have arrived at Teen-tsin, and we expect soon to be victorious over the whole Empire." He then proceeded to exhort the people, in a most lively and earnest strain, to abandon idolatry, which was only the worship of devils, and the perseverance in which would involve them in the misery of hell; while, by giving it up, and believing in Jesus, they would obtain the salvation of their souls.

"As for us," he said, "we feel quite happy in the profession of our religion, and look on the day of our death as the happiest period of our existence. When any of our number die, we never weep, but congratulate each other on the joyful occasion, because a brother is gone to glory, to enjoy all the magnificence and splendor of the heavenly world. While continuing here, we make it our business to keep the commandments, to worship God, and to exhort each other to do good; for which end we have frequent meetings for preaching and prayer. What is the use, then," he asked, "of you Chinese going on to burn incense and candles, and gilt paper; which, if your idols really required it, would only show their covetous disposition? just like the mandarins, who seize men by the throat, and if they will not give money, squeeze them severely, but if they will, they only squeeze them gently." He went on to inveigh against the prevailing vices of his countrymen, particularly opium-smoking—"that filthy drug," he exclaimed, "which only defiles those who use it—making their house stink, and their souls stink, and will make them stink for ever in hell, unless they abandon it. But you must be quick," he adds, "for Tae ping-wang is coming, and he will not allow the least infringement of his rules—no opium, no tobacco, no snuff, no wine, and no vicious indulgence of any kind. All offenses against the commandments of God are punished by him with the severest rigor, while the incorrigible are beheaded—therefore repent in time!"

I could perceive, from the style of his expressions, and from his frequently quoting the books of the Tae-ping dynasty, that he was familiar with those records, and had been thoroughly trained in that school: no Chinaman, who had not been following the camp of the insurgents for a considerable time, could have spoken as he did.

He touched also on the expenses of opium-smoking, which drained their pockets, and kept them poor in the midst of wealth: "whilst we," he said, "who never touch the drug, are not put to such expense. Our Master provides us with food and clothing, which is all we want, so that we are rich without money."

I could not help being struck, also, with the appearance of the man, as he went on in this earnest strain. Bold and fearless he stood, openly denouncing the vices of the people; his countenance beaming with intelligence, his upright and manly form the very picture of health, while his voice thrilled through the crowd. They seemed petrified with amazement, their natural conscience assured them that his testimony was true, while the conviction seemed to be strong amongst them, that the two great objects of his denunciation, opium and idolatry, were two bad things, and must be given up.

He spoke in intelligible Mandarill, with an occasional touch of the Canton or Kwang-se brogue. His modes of illustration were peculiar; and some of the things which he advanced were not such as Christian missionaries are accustomed to bring forward. The impression left on my mind, however, was that a considerable amount of useful instruction was delivered, and such as would serve to promote the objects we have in view, in putting down idolatry, and furthering the worship of the true God. Another thought also struck my mind, namely, this is a class of men that can with facility be controlled. They must, for a time be allowed to go their own way. It may not be in every respect the way which we could approve, but it does not appear to run directly counter to our objects. In the mean time, we can go on in ours, and inculcate such truths as they may forget, or state correctly what they fail to represent aright. Tae-ping-wang may thus prove a breaker up of our way, and prepare the people for a more just appreciation of Divine truth, as soon as we can get the Sacred Scriptures freely circulated among them.

I am, yours truly,
W. H. MEDHURST.

SHANGHAI, Dec. 14, 1853.

Intemperance—what it Costs and what it Causes.

We extract the following from a circular sent us by John J. E. Linton, of Stratford. The facts are striking and conclusive against the liquor traffic, as productive of a very large proportion of the offences that are tried before police and criminal courts.

I hope you will approve of my thus publicly stating the following facts:

The Sheriff of Albany has said "EIGHT TENTHS of all the commitments here are in consequence of the use and sale of Rum."

The Sheriff of Dutchess county, "FOUR FIFTHS of the crimes here are immediately or indirectly the fruit of intemperance."

The Sheriff of Erie, "During the several years that I have kept in jail, Nine Tenths of all the crimes committed have had their origin in intemperance."

The Sheriff of Niagara, "Three Fourths of the petit offences have been committed while under the influence of intoxicating liquor."

The Police Justice of Buffalo reported that "for several years intemperance has been the cause of Nine Tenths of all the crime brought to his notice;" and so on.

In Massachusetts, it was said, that of 12,000 crimes, in one year, Three Fourths were the fruits of intemperance.

Sir Matthew Hale (the great and good Chief Justice of England) after twenty years observation, declared, "That, if all murders, and manslaughters, and burglaries, and robberies, and riots, and tumults, and adulteries and fornications, and rapes, and other great enormities which had been committed within that time, were divided into five parts, four would be found to have been the result of intemperance. And so on.

What do the records of cases before our courts in Canada testify?—of Montreal Kingston, and Toronto (recently published) and before magistrates' quarter sessions, police courts, recorders courts, or assizes, Readers of Newspapers, of Temperance papers, of official reports, and of returns of convictions,—what say you?

In this county of Perth, in 1853, the sum of £600 was allotted for the "Administration of Justice," and taxed upon you as a county tax, and it is supposed the sum required will be between that and £800 for 1853. Will it be less in 1854? What is the sum for?

There were 85 cases returned by the Magistrates in the "Returns of Convictions" for 1853, to the Clerk of the Peace, and it is well known there were very many cases of complaints, besides, not reported or returned.

What proportion can be, near the truth, put down for crimes, &c., tried or produced in the county of Perth for 1853, as resulting directly or indirectly from the traffic in intoxicating drinks? The proportion may be stated as nearly Nine Tenths!

What was the cost to you, the taxpayer of this county, and to the individual parties—loss of time, &c., as to these crimes, great and small, in 1853!

The sum of £168 15s is the total amount for tavern licenses for 1853, as returned the county Inspector (payable to the township,) and £37 10s. for shop keepers, and £45 four distillers (payable to the Government)—in all, £246 5s. Would it have been cheaper to have taxed the county a similar sum as the tavern licenses or the whole, or to have had the Maine Liquor Law in operation, with no licenses to sell intoxicating drinks? Shall the system be continued? You have the power in your hand—see the Act 16 Vict., cap. 184, sec. 4, and the form of by-law to be passed can now furnished to your reeves, the same as operation, and when it is being proposed others to the inhabitants.

WHO WROTE THE HULSEMANN LETTER?

BOSTON, April 4, 1851.

Dear Sir: A few of the Solid Men of our City were thrown into a terrible state of excitement during Mr. Everett's late visit to Boston, by an unexpected claim set up by him to the honor and glory of the Hulsemann letter. This seemed, indeed, to have been the principal purpose of his visit, for soon after he arrived he addressed a letter to Fletcher Webster, in which he stated what he said Mr. Webster was probably aware of, that he was the author of the Hulsemann letter, and that the original draft, in his handwriting, would be found among the papers of his father, who, in consequence of his laboring under one of his periodical colds at the time, had requested him (Mr. Everett) to prepare the answer to Mr. Hulsemann. Mr. Everett went on to say, that he had not kept all his letters to Mr. Webster, and he regretted that this draft was among the missing ones; and as he was anxious to retain, the evidence of his being its author, he requested Mr. Webster to send it to him.

Mr. Webster did not hesitate, I believe to do so; at least Mr. Everett received it on the following day. In the course of a few days, and before Mr Everett's return, he sent Mr. Webster a printed copy of his draft on one side of a large sheet, laced on the other with the draft as amended by Mr. Webster, so as to show precisely what portion of the document belonged to each respectively, and with it a letter stating that he intended to have a thousand copies struck off for circulation among his friends, in order that there might be no difficulty at any future day in establishing his claim to its authorship. I have not seen a copy of this, but if I can get one, I will send it to you.

This claim of Mr. Everett has created a terrible commotion among the other executors of Mr. Webster, and the very small circle among whom it has transpired. The feeling generally among them is, that Everett, after having so long consented to the literary fraud which, for political purposes, had been practised upon the public, he has no business to come forward now and disturb the matter. As the editor and eulogist of the Great Expounder, he had glorified him as the author of that letter, and no longer was it a position to reclaim any of the honor of it, even if it had belonged to him.

On the other hand, Mr. Everett's friends think that the glory of the letter can no longer do the deceased any god, and may do Mr. Everett a great deal, ad that because he lent a man his coat in cold weather, there was no reason why he should not have it back again when the weather becomes warm. I think it will lead to a row among the old Webster men, all of whom, at present, at least, who know it, are very much disgusted. As soon as I hear what answer Mr. Webster made to Mr Everett's letter covering the printed sheets, I will send it to you. **

ANTI-SLAVERY DISCUSSION.—KENTUCKY.

I am again on the great moral battle-field of the South. Rev. John G. Fee and myself are going out to the encounter, "two by two."

We have a series of protracted meetings on hand, stretching over several counties, and still the cry is, from new quarters, tle toleration for the views of others great crime. I was as much surpris pained, on a recent occasion to hear a ular preacher—one who has taken his s on virtue's side, in most of the movem of the day, and who has been especially dent in advocating the cause of "prohi tion"—denounce unsparingly and unneces arily a well-known book and its author. I speaking of the viciousness of our popula amusements, and more immediately of theatrical performances, he took occasion to name "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and pronounce the work a "bad" one, "a vile libel on our country;" and say sneeringly, that "it must have required a very brilliant effort of Mrs. Stowe's imagination to picture a woman leaping from one mass of floating ice to another, across a river in mid-winter." Now, it so happens that Mrs. S. had a bona fide flesh and blood original for this picture, as well as many, very many others in her book, as may be seen by referring to her "key." And it only argued a sad lack of information, on the part of the speaker, to pounce so eagerly on a "thing which he understood not." I doubt (on pretty good authority,) whether the Rev. gentleman has read either "Cabin" or "Key." Surely he might have expended his indignation on the stage representation, without involving the innocent writer of the simple well-told tale who is, doubtless, as guiltless of its being dramatized as the preacher himself. The impression left on any candid mind by a perusal of a work, whether such can endorse its sentiments or not, must be I think, that it was written in the spirit of fairness, and its author's motives were good, and only good from the beginning to the end.—Cor. Phil. Register.

of that State. He argues that the it variance with the National Constitution which secures the citizens from unreasonable search—that the provisions of the providing for the seizure and destruction of liquor is inconsistent with the constitution of the state, which provides that property shall not be taken without compensation—that the law is generally unreasonable, and would injure the temperance cause! These objections are urged every time by every rum politician, and every interested devotee of Bacchus, and have all been refuted a thousand times. The most contemptible objection urged, is the fear expressed of injuring the temperance cause, while he undoubtedly received a fee of some $50,000 or $100,000 for writing that very letter.

The Rum Power of New York will thus have another lease on the pockets and vices of the people for another year—and we trust, but one year. We doubt not that the people of New York will renew all their assertions to place a man in the Executive Chair who will respect the claims of humanity as well as the wishes of the people. This single message will prove no injury to the temperance cause in the long run. The embecile tool who thus sets his own bribed notions against the wishes of the people deliberately expressed, is a tyrant in principle, and will assuredly meet the indignant contempt of every true Democrat. — Olive Branch

A Word about, and to Emigrationists.

The supposed crusade by John Mitchell, of convict notoriety, against Canada, has called forth disclaimers from both the press and private citizens of these provinces, in no way flattering to the prospects of annexationists in the U. S. Each seems to vie with the other in expressions of pa-

Emigrate to the Tropics, you will find as much as you will be able to manage, fostered and strengthened by the negroes themselves. A man's dark color is no proof against prejudice. Should you labor for a livelihood, complexional identity will not save you. You will find colored nabobs as thick as hops, who will dispute every inch of ground with you, on the score of your pecuniary "inferiority." Colored men are as merciless as other men, when possessed of the same amount of pride, conceit and wickedness, and as much, if not more ignorance. They make just as bad masters as the worst of the whites, in their best moods, and infinitely worse in their worst. It is reasonable that they should; then who expects more at their hands when dependent upon them, than at the hands of others? Who would wish to be part of their exclusive nation; if one could be found outside of Central Africa, or inside of Hayti? You cannot be a whole African Nation here brethren, but you can be part of the Colored British nation. This nation knows no one color above another, but being composed of all colors, it is evidently a colored nation. An integral part of this nation you can be, looking as tall or as short as your aims or efforts make you—nothing under the sun to prevent you. You complain in the United States that you are taxed without being represented, while others are represented when taxed. From your great West, free New England, and Middle States, in the same breath that your leaders talk of hope and ultimate triumph by staying there, they wail out their fear and despair. Strange consistency! No despair at the prospect of a Nebraska Bill; no attempts to excite sympathy, if the case is so hopeful, for a reasonable time. If the period of your triumph is very remote—arguments in favor of staying are puerile. But we speak to you in all kindness; we wish you to be where you can act like men. To talk of doing great things where you cannot get a foot hold, as anti-Emigrationists do, is questionable with us. First take a position, and then what can prevent you from accomplishing what you desire? That you can take here, you have often been told.

You call a Convention to which your liberal men invite all in favor of Emigration, to consider to what place you should go. We of Canada wish success to you, but why need we attend? we have emigrated—we know but this country is all any reasonable person would ask; as you are not so certain, our suggestions in Convention would savor of intrusion. We can only give you a general invitation to Canada—state the advantages and give you our reasons. Had your Convention been a North American Convention the case would have been different, but being a National affair, and we hailing from another nation, we may only hope for your "arrival" on our shores in due time. Should you come, do not leave it brethren, till Emigrants step in before you and select all the fine positions; you know our failing is to delay until the opportunity is gone. Now is the time for men who wish to buy good lands in good positions, to purchase the same. Now is the time for those who love more than the name of Liberty to realize their wants.

We have talked severely of you, in the first part of this article, in view of your almost wilful blindness to your own interest, but when we reflect on your hard lot as nominal freemen—we become considerably "softened."

But you talk of emigration to Central America and other hot places. Know you not that men are there before you? Central and South America Central Africa and Egypt, if you please, have as many great men now as they know what to do with. The black men of those countries want men to trim up their cane fields, at 3s 9d per day, at the most, and find yourself. You can trim your own fields in Canada by paying 7s 6d an acre for the land, or another man's if you have not energy enough to have fields of your own, at better pay than that. Now if this is not enough to induce you to come hither, what will? What will you do, or what your women say, for they must go along, when surrounded by big spiders, lizzards, snakes, centipedes, scorpions and all manner of creeping and biting things? Do you want to be sun-struck? Do you court yellow fever and laziness, haughty employers, and contemptible black prejudice? If you do, go in peace. *

Rev. Wm. King.—The Buxton Settlement.

The Rev. Wm. King, of Buxton, preached a very instructive discourse in the Sayer Street Chapel, on Sabbath evening last. Mr. King is thought by colored Canadians, and we think very properly, too, to stand in the front rank, if not at the head of philanthropists in this country. He is emphatically a Prophet that hath honor in his own country. The settlement of which he is the founder, is a practical demonstration, nine thousand acres large, to say nothing of its influence on other miles of acres, of the motto we have chosen for our paper, which by the way, is Mr. King's own sentiment. Every man helps himself in Buxton, and every man's neighbor helps him to do so—he does not pull him back, nor feel envious at his honest and honorable prosperity. No old clothes, no land begging—no liquor, no ignorance and consequently, no intolerance, are household words in that excellent settlement. Every man buys his land, and pays for it—buys his own clothes and pays for them; sends his children to school regularly, and early, and goes to and supports a church himself, in which no caste nor color distinctions are known. The thought of forming the Elgin Settlement suggested itself to Mr. King's mind, not as the desideratum, to refute the stale and thread-bare charge of incapacity so often made in the United States where evidences of self-support, among colored people, are more numerous than examples of incapacity, but, impelled by the noble desire to remunerate his own freed men, the comprehensive and benevolent scope of his mind, at once embraced as worthy objects of his policy, self-emancipated freed men, and free men. The Elgin settlers were not all slaves as is generally supposed; no line of demarcation is drawn among them; all are adopted British freemen—the only condition required from purchasers, being a certificate of good moral character from freeborn persons, or fugitives, for some time residents in the Province—a just discrimination in favor of all parties wishing to purchase the lands, and offensive to none. The conception and perfection of the entire plan, is worthy of a great energetic and practical mind, and the success of the measure, comes opportunely to the aid of the many individual cases of enterprise and self-reliance, to be seen in this country among colored men, and especially in the West. Ignorance walks abroad in Canada, occasionally, as well as in other countries; not always in muskrat and moccasins, but often in beaver and broad cloth. In the latter case it is always necessary to double the amount and vary the labor to make its effects known. Get moccasin on the scent once, and he will go direct to the game; but conventionalities have so deteriorated the other, there is this fussing about respectable precedents, and that appeal to selfish ins and after all a drawl and a hesitancy to adm lated facts, that we, thank God, and become ho wherever we can collect together, as we c Elgin, a goodly number at once.

The Elgin settlement is a reflex of the geniu that matured it, and whenever we see, as we d in Mr. King, a christian gentleman standing a the exponent of some practical thought for th better health of humanity—swayed by none othe than his own good conscience, and propelled by mighty will—not even pausing to ask Will thi do, or what is your opinion of that, but hewin out a road for weaker ones, and bravely leadin on, now encouraging, now directing, we feel cancel half the debt the oppressor owes the oppres sed, and to forgive the other half. *

Canadian Politics.

Our politics-loving readers have not, we fear, found much in our paper, hitherto, to suit their tastes. We have, indeed, kept our columns remarkably free from that exciting topic. The truth is, that there is at present very little of general interest, to which we can direct attention. There are quarrels personal in abundance, which some of our cotemporaries are endeavoring to clear up—we surmise, from the difficulty they seem to have in making out a clear case—with rather indifferent success. We have no inclination to get mixed up in such matters, and therefore forbear from giving any opinion respecting them. When the din of battle ceases and the smoke of conflict has cleared away, we shall probably be enabled to see for ourselves, and to indicate to our readers, the aspect and progress of political events. Be it remembered, however, that we are no partizans, neither are we neutrals. We have no party purposes to serve, neither have we any personal end to gain. It is not impossible, therefore, that we may be Conservative, Liberal or Radical at different times or the same time, as one or the other of those parties initiates or advocates measures in accordance with our own views. Independent in all things, we hope to keep our judgment free from bias, and to form our opinions of men and things upon their own merits alone. We have set our minds upon getting at the true and the right on all subjects, and doubt not but that in the long-run an enlightened public will approve and appreciate our course.

The Tea Meeting.

A very interesting Tea Meeting was held in the Baptist Chapel, (Rev. Wm. P. Newman, pastor, corner of Queen and Victoria sts., on Wednesday evening, the 5th instant, the proceeds from which are to be used for church purposes. We have no means of knowing how many persons were present, but, as the house was crowded to its utmost capacity, we think four hundred of both sexes and of every variety of complexion under the sun, rather under than over the estimate.

After partaking plentifully of the things provided the exercises of the evening were commenced by singing by the choir, prayer by Rev. H. J. Young and after an introduction by the Chairman of the evening, Dr. Willis "short but spicy" speeches were made by Professor Lillie, Messrs. W. Watkins, J. Nasmith, and Revds. Wm. P. Newman and H. J. Young, interspersed with music from the choir. The speeches, though brief, were good. Prof. Lillie, who had visited Nebraska, dwelt principally upon the wickedness of granting that fine country to a slave state. Mr. Watkins was quite severe upon the ministers of Methodist Church in the U. S., reading from their own resolutions their adherence to slavery. Mr. Nasmith, who had just returned from Scotland, was quite witty; he had lived in New Orleans, and had learned of slavery much that was hideous concerning it, but he "did not want a black wife, though." He concluded by urging support to ministers. Mr. Young suffered from hoarseness, but did not think with his brother Watkins that ministers who were in favor of slavery were ministers of the Gospel of Christ. Mr Newman followed in a very fine speech on behalf of the ladies; after which, Dr. Willis urged a denominational union for prayer against slavery extension, and slavery. The proposition will yet be carried out we hear. A prayer and the Benediction were then made and he company parted apparently highly pleased.

Mrs Warren, Mrs. Lewis and Miss Richards return thanks to the citizens on behalf of the Committee appointed to superintend the arrangements, for their very liberal patronage on the occasion. The sum realized (£28 10s) far exceeded their expectation. *

The Rev. Dr. Duff.

This distinguished missionary to the Heathens, has by his visit to Toronto, awakened an interest in the cause of missions unknown heretofore. The meeting held in the Wesleyan Chapel on Tuesday last, will long be remembered. The spacious building was literally jammed long before the hour to commence exercises. At 7 o'clock, the Hon. James Harvey Price, Chairman of the meeting, made an excellent opening speech. Resolutions suitable to the occasion were then read and supported by several Revd. gentlemen, after which Dr. Duff came forward, and enchained the attention of the audience for more than three hours in presenting the claims of mission, and particularly India missions upon British christians every where.

Taking the Bible as the revealed authority for christian duty, and planting himself thereupon as upon a rock, he spared not those who neglect its requirements.

By gradual steps his audience were lead to a field in which the harvest is ripe but the laborers few.

British India with her vast recources, her varied clime, and her hundreds of millions of idolatrous inhabitants, with their anxiety for Gospel truth, was opened up before them. The Dr. though of the Free Church, is not tramelled by the conventionalities of any sect, an original thinker and worker—he stands out not as the representative of any existing school, but as another christian luminary already drawing towards him men of kindred minds. May the sympathies of working christians go with him. *

M. R. DELANY.—Our readers will find on another column a letter from this gentleman. We regret that there should be errors in the Call for an Emigration Convention, which we have published. It was copied from a stray number of Douglass's Paper, that fell into our hands. The corrections, of which the Doctor speaks, will be made as soon as the Editor of the Alienea American supplies us with a paper containing the authorised version. We may somewhat have misrepresented the views of the signers of the Call, in consequence of those errors, but we do not see how they can possibly affect our view of the case, respecting the attitude very generally assumed by colored Canadians toward the Gre vention. They have already passed the Rubicon, and, as far as we know, "—" have no reason to regret it. If they cannot boast with the old Roman, "I came, I saw, I conquered," they can at least say that they have in many instances succeeded well, and in all, the prospects are flattering and satisfactory. It would in such circumstances be the height of folly for them to seek any further emigration. The Call seems to us to be intended for quite another class—those namely, who think it desirable to emigrate.

An Affair of Honor.

The House of Representatives of the United States, as our readers are probably aware, furnished the other day, a rather curious episode, in the shape of a quarrel between two members, which created much excitement at the time, and almost, as some say, resulted in a Duel. The aspirants to the honor of being shot at, were Messrs. Cutting, of New York, and Breckenridge of Kentucky—two of the most talented men in the House, and in some sort leaders of their respective factions. The affair arose out of the circumstance that Cutting proposed the motion to send the Nebraska Bill to the Committee of the Whole, which motion prevailed, greatly to the chagrin and irritation of Breckenridge and other slavemongers, who appear to have been determined therefor to settle a personal quarrel upon Cutting And in this way it was done—Cutting, in a speech replying to an assault made upon him by Breckenridge, said that that gentleman had "skulked;" whereupon Breckenridge arose in great wrath, insolently demanding that the phrase should be retracted This Cutting refused to do, and Breckenridge thereupon charged him with falsehood. To this charge Cutting rejoined that he would make reply in another place. Out of this arose a correspondence between the two "honorable" gentleman, comprising in all fifteen letters, which have been given to the world through the columns of the New York Herald, and at any time, we presume, may be found there by those of our readers who are desirous of knowing how matters of that kind are conducted, and the formalities and preliminaries needful to be gone through, in order to get the satisfaction of a bullet hole in some vital spot, and die, in consequence like a "gentleman of honor." In the case in hand, however, the powder was saved, and the bullets also. The "gentlemen" came to the conclusion that they had better not fight, after all. Mr. Cutting forbore the satisfaction of practising upon the body of Mr. Breckenridge, with an "ordinary rifle," at sixty paces, as proposed, and Mr. Breckenridge, very reluctantly, no doubt, yielded up his better judgment to the advice of his friends, and did not take a friendly shot at Mr. Cutting with an "ordinary duelling" pistol, at ten paces, as he very generously, through his second, vouchsafed to do. The goose quill was brought into requisition, instead of those dangerous weapons Mr. Breckenridge expressed his regret to Mr. Cutting, that a misunderstanding should have occurred. Mr. Cutting reciprocated; and—so ended "an affair of honor."

GLEANINGS.

—The proprietors of the N. Y. Tribune have had to pay damages to the amount of $150, for publishing a telegraphic despatch from Boston, reflecting on the character of Mr. Thatcher.

—The Ohio State Agricultural Fair will be held on the 20th, 21st and 22d of September next.

—An accident occurred on the Hudson River Railroad, a few days since, in consequence of the fall of a large mass of rock upon the line at the time the train was passing. The locomotive and two baggage cars were smashed to atoms. None of the passengers were injured; but four persons in the Company's employ were badly bruised—three of them so severely that their lives were despaired of.

—The Hutchinson Family are singing in Pittsburg.

—On the 17th of March, an earthquake was felt in St. Jago de Cuba, which shook the buildings, and the shipping in the harbor.

—Mr. J. B. Gough will realize not less than £3000 for one year's services as a temperance lecturer, in Great Britain, besides presents of plate and other valuables.

—Queen Victoria, in her yacht, preceded the Baltic fleet to sea. Thousands of admiring spectators witnessed the sight.

—A religious sect, called the Contemplators, has sprung up in Sweden.

—Fights between the Omahas and Sioux Indians, have taken place near Council Bluff

—A Canadian schooner, name unknown, was upset, a few days since, off Oswego.

—The colored citizens of Norristown, Pa., have presented Rev. Samuel Aaron, of that city, with a pair of gold spectacles in a silver case, as a small token of regard for his late successful effort in dissecting the pretensions of the Rev. J. Morris Pease and the Colonization scheme. Except the speech of Mr. Aaron, the colored people seem to have had it all their own way. The large Baptist church was densely crowded; but under the management of Mr. John Williams, everything passed off pleasantly. Rev. S. Amos made the presentation; and after the eloquent response of Mr. Aaron, Messrs. Ware and Brown, and Prof. Reason, made short, but appropriate speeches. The affair wound up with music from a good choir.

—The Indians have been committing depredations near Laredo and Fort Chadborne, in Texas. Near Laredo they stole a quantity of goods. Not knowing what use to make of pepper-sauce and catsup, they threw them over the oxen, but secured for their own use some bottles of Jamaica rum.

—The Greek insurrection has been suppressed.

—The House of Representatives of the United States refused, by a vote of 119 to 26, to receive the following resolution from Mr. Campbell:

Resolved, That the President be requested to cause negociations to be opened with the Government of Great Britain, with a view of ascertaining upon what conditions that Government will consent to the annexation of the Canadas to the United States of America.

The 119 were sensible men. "Manifest destiny" agitators, of which school Mr. Campbell seems to be an adherent, ought to be aware that there is a slight difference between Britain and Mexico. Yankee silver may be snapped at incontinently by Santa Anna and his brother adventurers, at the same time that it may appear sufficiently leaden in the estimation of Lord Aberdeen. But supposing the Government to be willing to negociate, what class of Canadians would ever consent to be represented by such sapient statesmen as Mr. Campbell? John Bull can help Turkey and attend to all his other business at the same time, without borrowing from, or selling to Jonathan.

—The Committee appointed at the instance of the Toronto Anti-Slavery Society, to receive the funds collected in England, by the Rev. S. R. Ward, for the aid of recently arrived fugitives, report that £1,144 15s. 9d. have been collected; £50 5s. promised; and £400 paid over to the Society in this city.

The Secret Correspondence.

The correspondence on the Eastern Question, excluded from the Blue Books, has been laid before Parliament. It is interesting and curious, but too extensive for our columns. The correspondence arose out of the demonstration about to be made against Turkey, by the Emperor. On Sir H. Seymour's pressing the Emperor for some explicit assurance respecting his intentions towards Turkey, remarked that "Turkey was in a very critical state, and may give us all trouble" In a further conversation on the subject, he more explicitly stated his views, and hinted at a partition of Turkey between Russia, Austria and England. Lord John Russell, in a despatch, dated, Feb. 9th, replied that it was "impossible to negociate respecting the dissolution of a power that may not take place for 20, or 50, or 150 years to come."

On the presentation of Lord John Russell's note to the Emperor, he went on to say by way of reply:—

'That in the event of the dissolution of the Ottoman Empire he thought it might be less difficult to arrive at a satisfactory territorial arrangement than was commonly believed. 'The Principalities are,' he said, 'in fact an independent state under my protection; this might so continue. Servia might receive the same form of government. So again with Bulgaria There seems to be no reason why this province should not form an independent state. As to Egypt I quite understand the importance to England of that territory. I can then only say, that if, in the event of the distribution of the Ottoman succession upon the fall of the empire, you should take possession of Egypt I shall have no objections to offer. I would say the same thing of Candia; that island might suit you, and I do not know why it should not become an English possession."

"As I did not wish [says Sir H. Seymour] that the Emperor should imagine that an English public servant was caught by this sort of overture, I simply answered that I had always understood that the English views upon Egypt did not go beyond the point of securing a safe and ready communication between British India and the mother country,

In dismissing Sir H Seymour the Emperor said. "I have confidence in the English Government Ce n'est point un engagement, une convention que je leur demande; c'est un libre echange d'idees, et, au besoin, une parole de gentleman; entre nous cela suffit."

These conversations were embodied in a Russian memorandum, dated Feb 21 which stipulated that "the result of this discussion was to remain what it ought to be a secret between the two sovereigns."

The final result of this diplomatic correspondence is known. But how the matter itself will terminate, whether Turkey will be dismembered, or its sovereignty maintained may require years of warfare to decide.

MR. EDITOR:—

We most gladly welcome your Journal to the field of labour. We consider it greatly needed, particularly in that specific field of disseminating information in relation to Canada and the general subject of emigration. There is needed some channel through which that important subject can be impartially discussed. Affording this to the people, and I warrant they will not move blindly nor ignorantly No one, I think, can for a moment question the necessity of your paper, though you intimate there may be, or are such persons.... They must be narrow-minded indeed. Besides this, we need a number of active men in the field, not devoted exclusively to anti-slavery discussions, but to placing before the people all the subjects affecting our general interest. Our cause moves tardily, because there are so few at work at it.

We have in the States but two papers, and they dependant almost entirely on the labors of two men, whereas each should have half-a-dozen whose undivided time and attention should be directed to the various subjects of our general interest. I think I may safely say that we have never discussed any one subject, except slavery and human rights. None of the enterprizes of the day, or subjects of business have ever been held up to our people, by either white or black editors I know that casual mention has been made, and that we have been continually admonished by them to be temperate, honest and industrious! "You must levate yourselves," say they But when did any one of the thousand Lecturers ever take the field for any practical purpose? What abolitionist ever went to work among the Colored people of the U. S., with fifty or a hundred thousand to provide business or employment?—None that we know of.

These duties, however, now devolve on ourselves. Our papers must be surrounded by the ability of a number of efficient men and women too, each devoted to some specific field of investigation. In that way the wants and wishes of the masses will be reached.

But the first difficulty is, we all have families and "responsibilities," and cannot work without pay. But if the abolitionists really mean what they say, why not support a Colored Editor with an office, and a host of attendants, as well as a white one?

I have noticed that all the various trades among the whites have organized themselves into associations for mutual benefit, and mutual protection, against the encroachments of capitilists. The beneficial results are incalculable. They tend to provide capital for industrious and responsiblemen, and labour and employment for others, and to promote and sustain economy in living, by combining their capital and making their purchases at wholesale. They report that in this way they save from thirty-five to forty cents on the dollar, or in other words make sixty-five or seventy dollars, laid out in that way, go as far as a hundred in the ordinary way of purchasing severally by retail.

This is the kind of abolition our people need, and the subject to which our editors should direct their attention, their paper will be appreciated and supported.

It is, I think, unfortunate for us that we have no public men but ministers, and they mostly illiterate and uninformed, and really hostile to improvement, who believe that we must pray for what we ought to work for. I hold that our churches and ministers are but poor contributors to our elevation. Some of them, by the inculcation of their false and superstitious notions, do more to retard than accelerate our progress.

But don't understand me to throw the weight and responsibility of our advancement on Editors. By no means. An editor is but an individual, and can but do the business of an individual. He cannot of himself make or create "a good paper." This is the business of the people themselves. Still nothing is more common than to hear people complain of our papers, while they themselves are doing nothing to render them objects of interest. It is in vain that we look over the columns of our journals for reports of Committees on subjects of business, such as trade, or commerce, or farming. Certainly it is not the duty of editors to provide these. It is these, however, that render a Paper an object of attraction and interest. If our Ministers would either extend the field of their operations, or one half of them leave their churches, and go to work at these subjects they would render a far greater and more lasting benefit to the people.

The Emigration Convention.

EDITORS OF THE PROVINCIAL FREEMAN:—I this morning received the favor of a copy of your paper, (No. 2) of which you may continue to favor me regularly.

You have been pleased to publish in your columns, the "Call" for the National Emigration Convention, to be held in Cleveland in August next For this, I doubt not, you will have the thanks of all the friends to that movement But I designed to ask you to do this and the cause the kindness as well as the justice, to copy the "Call" from the Aliened American, as that is the only correct copy of it now being published in any of the papers; that in Frederick Douglass's Paper being incorrect in many particulars, even parts of sentences and paragraphs omitted, as well as a large part of the list of signers, from different States. And as your paper will also have an English or trans-Atlantic circulation, we desire to be properly represented in this movement and not made to appear ridiculous among foreigners. I have more than once called the attention of Douglass's Paper to the errors of the Call as published in it, but without avail.

You also commit an error in supposing that delegates to the Convention will be restricted to five in number. This is not the case, as you will see by reading over the Call. The five named in it, has reference to the signers of the Call, and not to the representatives of the people who may come to the Convention. You will see that the number of delegates will not be restricted, except in one instance, which is specified in the Call.

As to those who may be expected to attend; not only may the Canadas be expected; but, as this is a matter of Continental interest—we are in hopes that they may come from British America, Russian America, (has it any coloured inhabitants,) Mexico and the West Indies.

Please make the necessary corrections and alterations, and believe me your co-worker in the cause of God and Humanity.

M. R. DELANY.

Pittsburg, March 29th, 1854.

THE CHARITABLE CONCERT, to which we drew the attention of our readers in the last number of the Freeman, came off quite successfully, on the evening appointed. We were highly gratified by the spirited manner in which some of the finest pieces of Hayden and Mendelssohn were given by the choir It would be invidious to signalize as particularly worthy of commendation any individual performance, when all was excellent. The St. Lawrence Hall was well filled by a fashionable audience; and we presume the receipts at the Concert equalled the expectations of the Old Countryman and friends, who originated it.

☞ Our readers will observe, by looking at the date of this paper, that we have missed a week. We greatly regret that we have been compelled to this course, by the scarcity of sufficient hands. We have now got somewhat straightened up, and hope to go on regularly hereafter.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A Public Meeting was convened at Cross' hall, on Monday evening last, at the instance of the Committee which was formed last June of Freemasons'-hall, to assist in the carrying out of the object for which the Rev. S. R. Ward was delegated, last year, to this country, from the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, namely, to raise a fund for the purpose of affording to fugitive slaves resident in Canada temporary relief on their arrival in that country from the scene of their bondage.

Samuel Gurney, Esq., took the chair at seven o'clock, when the hall was crowded in every part.

The Chairman, in opening the proceedings, alluded to the unspeakable hardships which the fugitive slaves now living on the shores of Canada, and under the protection of the British Government, must necessarily have been called upon to endure, in their efforts to escape from America, and obtain, and the great need there was, therefore, for rendering them some temporary assistance, in such trying circumstances as when they could not be otherwise than in a state of the most deplorable destitution. When the case of these poor creatures came to be duly considered, he did not believe that a single individual in the present assembly could refrain from responding to the call which was made upon, not only their Christian, but also human sympathies. The aid which the fugitive slaves required would be only temporary, because when they had once become fairly settled in Canada, they could easily support themselves by their labour. (Hear, hear.) With respect to the system of Slavery itself, as it now exists in the United States, he could not refrain from saying that he regarded it as one of the greatest evils upon the face of the earth (Hear," and cheers.) It was moreover, one in the most monstrous and inconsistent things which could be conceived, that a country like America should, of all others, professes to be the great propounder of the liberty and happiness of mankind, should, at the same time, forge the most cruel chains for the limbs of three millions of her people. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Gurney defended the position which is taken, upon this subject, by the Abolitionists of England. It was not true, as certain of the advocates of Slavery sought to make it appear—that there was any analogy whatever between the poor, oppressed, and overworked people of this Metropolis and the slaves of North America; and, if there was, there was also this immense distinction between England and the States,—in that country they were doing everything they possibly could, by legislation and in their social and religious institutions, to confirm and rivet the chains of the slave; while in England, both the Government and the people were zealously engaged in a variety of ways with a view to the correction of all the evils, which at present continue to exist, and which there was reason to believe, would, in due time, be very largely, if not entirely, removed. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Samuel Norman Fisher, one of the hon. Secretaries, made a brief statement respecting the formation of the Committee by whom the meeting had been called together, and its precise object, together with the nature and extent of its operations during the nine months of its existence. He stated that there had been collected £1,144 15s. 9d., and £50 5s. was already promised, which would bring up the amount to £1,195 0s. 9d. The Committee had paid over £400 to the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada; and while £320 had been expended in paying the salary and travelling expenses of Mr. Ward, the rest of the money was still in the hands of the Committee.

Mr. Ward was then called upon to address the assembly, who received him with loud and repeated applause. He began by expressing the deep and sincere thanks which he felt to those gentlemen who had given their relative influence and personal assistance on behalf of the fugitive slaves of Canada. When the Committee was formed, it was proposed to raise a sum of £1,200 for the object which they had in view. The meeting had already heard that this sum had been almost realized. He saw no reason, however, why it should stop there, and proposed, amid general applause, that the present company should resolve to make it £1,500 before they separated Mr Ward stated in a few words the character of the labours in which he had been engaged since his arrival in England, and expressed the satisfaction which he experienced, and which he was certain those also for whom he had been labouring would experience when he should return to tell them in reflecting upon the fact that the effort which had been put forth had proved successful. He then proceeded to explain in detail the methods adopted by the fugitive slaves to effect their retreat from the house of bondage and their condition when first landing in Canada. Those men did not escape merely from the United States, but from the dominion of one of the most oppressive and wicked systems of tyranny which could possibly exist. It was a most humiliating fact, that there was nothing so honourable in America as to be a slave-holder; and the larger the number of slaves a man possessed, the more highly was he respected by his fellow-citizens. The recent measures also of the Government but too plainly testified that they had no intention of abolishing the system. (Hear, hear) On the other hand, they had enacted the infamous Slave-law, and extended the legalization of the traffic to California; and the news by the very last steamer intimated, that the abomination was to be yet further extended into new territory thus sweeping away the old boundaries by which it was decreed that the slave system should be confined to one region of the country. (Hear, hear.) When reflecting upon the state of things in Yankeedom, he felt unspeakably thankful to God that Canada existed, and that if the poor oppressed people of the South could only set their feet upon its blessed shores, they could defy the power of their cruel masters, and be as free as the air of the heavens or the waves of the ocean. (Cheers)

The people of England could not fully enter into the feelings of those who had escaped from their bondage; because they had never been slaves, never known—and he thanked God for it—what it was to grow up to the age of man and womanhood, to be fathers and mothers of families, without knowing that the wherewithal of their blessings and delights of the home, and them as nearest to their children born from them and sold before their eyes, and themselves separated never to meet again (Hear, hear.) A slave never knew what it was to be a real man, in the highest and Scriptural sense of the term. (Hear, hear) Neither could he cherish any hope of being free (Hear, hear.) To him the simple conception of it in his mind, and to cherish the desire to break his accursed chains was regarded as one of the greatest crimes of which a slave could be guilty, save only the putting of such a desire into actual execution. (Hear, hear.) And most painful of all to relate of this was a state of things existing in the afternoon of the nineteenth century, so grievously upheld by a nation which is constantly affirming, in the plainest possible language, that perfect freedom is God's birthright to his creatures (Hear, and cheers.) If a slave escaped from that hard to freedom he must do it by stealth Having once formed the idea in his mind to be free, he must let no one know it; and, when the attempt should be made, he must skulk away in the night time, hiding himself in the woods all the day for fear of detection, and the cruel punishment with which it never failed to be succeeded (Hear, hear.) And when the escape was effected, it frequently happened that the injuries which the poor fugitive received by the course he was compelled to adopt remained with him through life In illustration of these points, Mr. Ward adduced a number of striking and most painful cases, which excited a lively emotion in the breasts of his auditory He to the meeting of the fearful risks which the slaves were willing to encounter in order if possible to be free—such as the being shut up in boxes like bales of goods, and crossing the Niagara River when the water was in a freezing condition, with only a plank to rest on, and the keeping from a Philadelphia paper, and hurling off again after having been once captured and horribly maimed in the scuffle which ensued in the attempt to take them back to Slavery. Men who could do all or any of these things, and encounter un-speakable hardships for the purpose of being free, deserved their freedom (Loud cheers.) But, as might be readily supposed, when those poor creatures first arrived in the land of freedom they were wholly destitute and needed some little temporary aid, and to secure the means of giving this was his chief object in appearing among the English people at the present time. (Hear, hear.) From three to four thousand persons escaped thus from Slavery every year; and there could not be a less number now in Canada than from thirty to thirty-five thousand fugitive slaves. (Cheers) But too frequently, alas! the men who found their way to Canada had been compelled, not only to endure personal hardships by the way, but to leave their wives and children still in the hands of the slaveholder, which caused a pang to the heart the most acute of all,—to be robbed of these was surely the very bitterness of the grave (Hear, hear.) He was rejoiced, however to be able to say that the escaped slaves now living in Canada, and under the protection of the British Government, most necessarily have been called upon to endure, in their efforts to escape from America, in their efforts to escape from America, all that has been described, and the great need there was, therefore, for rendering them some temporary assistance, in such trying circumstances as when they could not be otherwise than in a state of the most deplorable destitution. When the case of these poor creatures came to be duly considered, he did not believe that a single individual in the present assembly could refrain from responding to the call which was made upon, not only their Christian, but also human sympathies. And when the escape was effected, it frequently happened that the injuries which the poor fugitive received by the course he was compelled to adopt remained with him through life In illustration of these points, Mr. Ward adduced a number of striking and most painful cases, which excited a lively emotion in the breasts of his auditory He to the meeting of the fearful risks which the slaves were willing to encounter in order if possible to be free—such as the being shut up in boxes like bales of goods, and crossing the Niagara River when the water was in a freezing condition, with only a plank to rest on, and the keeping from a Philadelphia paper, and hurling off again after having been once captured and horribly maimed in the scuffle which ensued in the attempt to take them back to Slavery. Men who could do all or any of these things, and encounter un-speakable hardships for the purpose of being free, deserved their freedom (Loud cheers.) But, as might be readily supposed, when those poor creatures first arrived in the land of freedom they were wholly destitute and needed some little temporary aid, and to secure the means of giving this was his chief object in appearing among the English people at the present time. (Hear, hear.) From three to four thousand persons escaped thus from Slavery every year; and there could not be a less number now in Canada than from thirty to thirty-five thousand fugitive slaves. (Cheers) But too frequently, alas! the men who found their way to Canada had been compelled, not only to endure personal hardships by the way, but to leave their wives and children still in the hands of the slaveholder, which caused a pang to the heart the most acute of all,—to be robbed of these was surely the very bitterness of the grave (Hear, hear.) He was rejoiced, however to be able to say that the escaped slaves now living in Canada, and under the protection of the British Government, most necessarily have been called upon to endure, in their efforts to escape from America, all that has been described, and the great need there was, therefore, for rendering them some temporary assistance, in such trying circumstances as when they could not be otherwise than in a state of the most deplorable destitution. When the case of these poor creatures came to be duly considered, he did not believe that a single individual in the present assembly could refrain from responding to the call which was made upon, not only their Christian, but also human sympathies. The aid which the fugitive slaves required would be only temporary, because when they had once become fairly settled in Canada, they could easily support themselves by their labour. (Hear, hear.) With respect to the system of Slavery itself, as it now exists in the United States, he could not refrain from saying that he regarded it as one of the greatest evils upon the face of the earth (Hear," and cheers.) It was moreover, one of the most monstrous and inconsistent things which could be conceived, that a country like America should, of all others, professes to be the great propounder of the liberty and happiness of mankind, should, at the same time, forge the most cruel chains for the limbs of three millions of her people. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Gurney defended the position which is taken, upon this subject, by the Abolitionists of England. It was not true, as certain of the advocates of Slavery sought to make it appear—that there was any analogy whatever between the poor, oppressed, and overworked people of this Metropolis and the slaves of North America; and, if there was, there was also this immense distinction between England and the States,—in that country they were doing everything they possibly could, by legislation and in their social and religious institutions, to confirm and rivet the chains of the slave; while in England, both the Government and the people were zealously engaged in a variety of ways with a view to the correction of all the evils, which at present continue to exist, and which there was reason to believe, would, in due time, be very largely, if not entirely, removed. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Samuel Norman Fisher, one of the hon. Secretaries, made a brief statement respecting the formation of the Committee by whom the meeting had been called together, and its precise object, together with the nature and extent of its operations during the nine months of its existence. He stated that there had been collected £1,144 15s. 9d., and £50 5s. was already promised, which would bring up the amount to £1,195 0s. 9d. The Committee had paid over £400 to the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada; and while £320 had been expended in paying the salary and travelling expenses of Mr. Ward, the rest of the money was still in the hands of the Committee.

Mr. Ward was then called upon to address the assembly, who received him with loud and repeated applause. He began by expressing the deep and sincere thanks which he felt to those gentlemen who had given their relative influence and personal assistance on behalf of the fugitive slaves of Canada. When the Committee was formed, it was proposed to raise a sum of £1,200 for the object which they had in view. The meeting had already heard that this sum had been almost realized. He saw no reason, however, why it should stop there, and proposed, amid general applause, that the present company should resolve to make it £1,500 before they separated Mr Ward stated in a few words the character of the labours in which he had been engaged since his arrival in England, and expressed the satisfaction which he experienced, and which he was certain those also for whom he had been labouring would experience when he should return to tell them in reflecting upon the fact that the effort which had been put forth had proved successful. He then proceeded to explain in detail the methods adopted by the fugitive slaves to effect their retreat from the house of bondage and their condition when first landing in Canada. Those men did not escape merely from the United States, but from the dominion of one of the most oppressive and wicked systems of tyranny which could possibly exist. It was a most humiliating fact, that there was nothing so honourable in America as to be a slave-holder; and the larger the number of slaves a man possessed, the more highly was he respected by his fellow-citizens. The recent measures also of the Government but too plainly testified that they had no intention of abolishing the system. (Hear, hear) On the other hand, they had enacted the infamous Slave-law, and extended the legalization of the traffic to California; and the news by the very last steamer intimated, that the abomination was to be yet further extended into new territory thus sweeping away the old boundaries by which it was decreed that the slave system should be confined to one region of the country. (Hear, hear.) When reflecting upon the state of things in Yankeedom, he felt unspeakably thankful to God that Canada existed, and that if the poor oppressed people of the South could only set their feet upon its blessed shores, they could defy the power of their cruel masters, and be as free as the air of the heavens or the waves of the ocean. (Cheers)

The people of England could not fully enter into the feelings of those who had escaped from their bondage; because they had never been slaves, never known—and he thanked God for it—what it was to grow up to the age of man and womanhood, to be fathers and mothers of families, without knowing that the wherewithal of their blessings and delights of the home, and them as nearest to their children born from them and sold before their eyes, and themselves separated never to meet again (Hear, hear.) A slave never knew what it was to be a real man, in the highest and Scriptural sense of the term. (Hear, hear) Neither could he cherish any hope of being free (Hear, hear.) To him the simple conception of it in his mind, and to cherish the desire to break his accursed chains was regarded as one of the greatest crimes of which a slave could be guilty, save only the putting of such a desire into actual execution. (Hear, hear.) And most painful of all to relate of this was a state of things existing in the afternoon of the nineteenth century, so grievously upheld by a nation which is constantly affirming, in the plainest possible language, that perfect freedom is God's birthright to his creatures (Hear, and cheers.) If a slave escaped from that hard to freedom he must do it by stealth Having once formed the idea in his mind to be free, he must let no one know it; and, when the attempt should be made, he must skulk away in the night time, hiding himself in the woods all the day for fear of detection, and the cruel punishment with which it never failed to be succeeded (Hear, hear.) And when the escape was effected, it frequently happened that the injuries which the poor fugitive received by the course he was compelled to adopt remained with him through life In illustration of these points, Mr. Ward adduced a number of striking and most painful cases, which excited a lively emotion in the breasts of his auditory He to the meeting of the fearful risks which the slaves were willing to encounter in order if possible to be free—such as the being shut up in boxes like bales of goods, and crossing the Niagara River when the water was in a freezing condition, with only a plank to rest on, and the keeping from a Philadelphia paper, and hurling off again after having been once captured and horribly maimed in the scuffle which ensued in the attempt to take them back to Slavery. One Spot of Green.

When the winter bloweth loud,
And the earth is in a shroud,
Bitter rain and blinding snow
Dimming every dram below;
Cheerily! cheerily!
There is ever a speck of green
Whence the heavens may be seen.

When our purse is sinking fast,
And our friend is lost (the last!)
And the world doth pour its pain
Sharply down the window pane,
Cheerily, cheerily!
There is still a spot of green,
Whence the heavens may be seen.

Let us never yield despair,
While we have a lot so fair;
For with courage and true May,
And a trust in God to stay,
Cheerily, cheerily!
Let us seek the spot of green,
Hopeful, patient and serene,
Whence the heavens may be seen.

BREAKFAST WITH THE BLACK PRINCE.

We were going ten and a half, the lee top-sail braces and top-gallant bowlines checked, three reefs out; the ship lying down to the land-breeze, but the water smooth as a mill-pond. It was a fine weather evening; the sun gone to bed, the moon rising. We were not far from Cape St. Nicholas Mole, and standing northward along the west shore of St. Domingo. Navassa lay far to leeward, and Cape Tiburon—which is Cape Shark—was long out of sight astern.

Ahead sailed the Sybille frigate, flag-ship of Sir Home Popham, commander-in-chief on the West India Station, and our design was to pay a visit of ceremony to his sable majesty King Christophe, whose dominions constituted the northern portion of the island.

By carrying much sail, our little sloop of war kept up with the frigate and we entered the roadstead of Cape Henry at the time preconcerted. Those of us who desired it were allowed to join the officers of the Sybille, and at seven A. M. we were all present at a grand parade of the garrison, which numbered three or four thousand men.

But who was Christophe? One of the most extraordinary people of his time. He had a back court, and maintained an orthodox Red Book, with a "peerage," and a ministry of able men with French titles, such as the Duc de Marmalade, and the Comte de Limonade. But these ministers were saved much trouble in administration of affairs by his Majesty's own wonderful capacity for business. Polite, astute, he was governing Hayti with more wit than was displayed by many an European monarch. He drew the string rather too tightly, as after events showed. But his reign followed that of the bloody Dessalines, one of whose generals he had been.

He found all the world speaking French in his dominions; for as all the world that has heard of Toussaint l'Ouverture knows, the negro kingdom has been based on a French colony. Buildings, fountains, fish ponds, parks, bridges, all were French. The royal palace were the Tuileries in miniature. It had its gardes de corps, its sentries en grande tenue, its parade-ground, levelled and in the trimmest order. The town, however, seemed to be made up of the remains of former grandeur—a place of melancholy squares and grass grown-streets, now half in ruin. In the old times St. Domingo was tropical France, and Cape Henry—then Cape François—little Paris, having for rival only Port Royal, Martinique. I speak here of the northern portion of the island; for the south-eastern is Spanish—that is to say, Spanish negro.

The southern parts of the island, broken into rocks of fantastic shape, covered with foliage and luxuriant verdure, and gladed down to the bright sea in park-like beauty, present a matchless picture to the eye.—Were it not for the heat of climate, fatal often to the new-comer from Europe, and the living things of tropical danger that haunt its waters and its earth, St. Domingo would be an Eden. I have still remembrance of Aux Cayes and Isle de Vache on the south-western shore, and a day's ramble there. The weather was not oppressively hot, for it was early in March; but as I walked along the shore—sprinkled, as it was, with "sunbeam shells"—the water looked so clear and inviting, that I determined on a plunge. I got into one of the deserted boats, and pushed off into the calm and tideless sea. There could be no danger in bathing so close in, and I was getting ready for a spring overboard in five feet water, when a shark swam, tilt up, between the boat's nose and the beach, close under me. "Thank you," thought I, for showing yourself. I think I will not bathe to day, my friend."

I landed again, and rejoined our party just in time to witness a strange hubbub. They were hauling in the seine, a great commotion was inside—fish jumping in every direction, and the water was lashed into foam by some great fellow. An alligator was entangled in the net. We happened to be near the mouth of a small stream which these creatures frequented. The net was landed, and the beast despatched by the third lieutenant, who struck it on the head with a hatchet, fracturing its skull. It proved to be a young one, of about nine feet long, and was afterwards taken on board as a curiosity. We were then new to the West Indies, or we certainly should not have taken it on board. The smell of musk emitted by the carcase was so strong, that the abomination was soon slipped into the water. After such experiences, we learned to think of English parks and hills, and little English trout-streams with respect; they no longer seemed tame to us in contrast with the richer beauties of the tropics.

I shall be spinning my yarn into a tangle if I do not mind. With leave I will go back to seven A. M., and be witnessing a grand parade of the garrison of Cape Henry. The Prince Royal commanded. He was a stout young negro in general's uniform, a crimson coat with gold embroidery, white leathers, and military boots; all from top to toe—boot, face and lace—shining in the bright morning sun. It was a dismounted parade; for there was three regiments of cavalry on the ground (the Life Guards, probably) and half-a dozen of infantry of the line, besides part of the foot household brigade. There was scarcely so much glitter as there might have been. The arms, not browned, were yet rusty—perhaps from the night's dew—and the cavalry accoutrements were [illegible] to band-bricks, rotten-stone, and heel-ball. The dragoons were most ferocious-looking fellows. "Dismal the rattle of their harness grew," as they marched past at quick time. They wore the brass helmet of the French heavy horse, with its red hair hanging down behind and finished with a tuft in front; high boots, green coats, and crimson breeches, with black belts. They had muskets instead of carbines, huge spurs, and the long straight cavalry sword hooked up for marching.—Altogether they looked very unclean and rusty; but fierce, dangerous, and service-like, every man black as a cloud full of thunder. An English officer of Highlanders near me, whom we had brought up from Porte-au-Prince, affirmed that the wheelings were precise and well executed, the trumpet-calls exact, each point of war beaten on the drums, and the whole thing admirably done.

The troops seemed indeed to live under strict martial law, and went throug a parade in mortal terror. Their adjutant and instructor was a Prussian disciplinarian of unbending severity.

The parade over, and still before breakfast we were summoned to be presented to their majesties. The transition from the noise of war without, to the repose of grandeur within, was very noticeable. No man could have gone better through the whole ceremony of the presence chamber than Sir, Home. He was a dignified as well as an intelligent officer; who, while he sacrificed nothing of position or rank, yet conducted every circumstance of his visit in such a manner as could not fail to gratify the king whose guest he was. He may have had some little difficulty in keeping so many sailors, most of them young men, in hand; but altogether, he had no great reason to complain of us—and he did not complain.

The Queen and the Princesses Amethyste and Athenaide stood in rank as at St. James's drawing-room, having dames d'atours and maids of honor in attendance, pages and lords in waiting. For the satisfaction of my fair readers I have great pleasure in stating that clear muslin over purple silk or satin was the general wear. All were in grand costume, and the men covered with embroidery. The marvellous things that had been done by the Court friseur that morning with the negro hair made it impossible for us to confine ourselves to wonder at the wigs we saw. Christophe alone was plainly dressed—that is, by comparison. There was a quiet display of regal circumstance about his Majesty that was a little striking. He seemed to have taken Napoleon for his model in attire, as in many other things; wearing the dark green chasseur coat, white kerseymere knee-breeches, and purple morocco boots to meet them. He had the silver cross of St. Henry, his own order, on his breast; no other ornament; and he was carrying a three-cornered hat under his arm.

Thus, then, the royal family of Hayti, held a reception; officiating at it with a French grace, surrounded by a court brilliant in costume, and equal dignity and resplendency of paraphernalia to the whitest of imperial circles. Having backed myself out, and again edged myself in amongst those who had the entree, I became the observed of a maid of honour. But I had eyes only for Christophe, and at him I was gazing with a stare more sailor like than courtly: Mademoiselle de Limonade, she brown and lovely maid of honor, took upon herself to school me.

"Eh bien, monsieur, comment le trouvez vous?

"And I had seen the great Napoleon, then How? when? where?" she wished to know."

"It was on board the Bellerophon, at Plymouth."

"And what was he like? how was he dressed."

"For all the world," I replied "like his Majesty, except the boots; because when I saw him it was after dinner."

"The deuce!" exclaimed Lady Katharine, laughing—but that surely was not a courtly word—"so you have no mosquitoes then at Ply outh?"

The lady left me to tell the Queen as I supposed, that I was the man there present who had seen Napoleon. From her Majesty he had passed to Cristophe, and interrupting a conversation with Sir Home, made to him some laughing communication —apropos to his boots no doubt—and told her story perhaps with embellishments, as a glance at myself and a smile from the king implied.

Breakfast was prepared for us in a spacious room, and eaten from the most superb English china. There were two tables a separate one—round which was the royal family assembled being placed apart from the long sat-out, where the black peers mingled with their white acquaintances. At the first table sat the admiral at the king's right hand, with one or two highly favored lords, and as many ladies in waiting; amongst whom figured the damsel who had favored me with her attention. The entertainment was—except the Coalbrook Dale breakfast service—in all respects French. Light wines were there in profusion, claret of the best preserved fruits, and more substantial though at the same time more mysterious products of Parisian cookery. Of course, too, there was delicious coffee.

I sat down between two dukes whose titles I failed to catch; though one sounded like De Bossu, and over him I upset a bowl of brandy fruit, in turning quickly to the e bow touch of a servant. Great was the discomfiture of my noble friend, who struggled in vain to remove the syrup with his doyley, from velvet cuff and gold embroidery, and continually muttered, in terms fortunately unintelligible to me, what I have no doubt were maledictions on the awkwardness of all seafaring people. The king soon after this rose from table, and all followed his example, when my thickset neighbour De Bossu had to suffer the stifled laughter and condolence of his peers—and a great deal more pity from the peeresses, who gathered around. I was quietly informed that my friend was a very peppery man; and finding all my own endeavours after peace to be quite vain, I departed leaving him among the ladies.

We are apt to laugh at some of the St. Domingo titles. Let me observe that the Comte de Limonade was Minister for Foreign Affairs, and wrote state papers that would have done credit to a Metternich. These dukedoms and countships were derived from extensive districts, containing fine estates of the same name, and as large as some German principalities. We did not laugh at Prince Puckler Muskau when he stepped from his carriage at Mivert's coverd chaink. Why laugh at Limonade, who is not more given to such puerilites?

Dessalines—prince of cut-throats—having swept the country of every French soul; Hayti lay then at the disposal of Christophe. He did what white men in like circumstances have done; gave to his nobles lands—and let the commonality occupy where they might. He did also what white people have not always done, instituted colleges, and established Lancaster an schools over his kingdom.

It was arranged that we were to go to Sans Souci the next morning—there were several royal chateaus, and one called Delices de la Reine—but the Sans Souci was the gem, and at Sans Souci it was proposed that we should spend a day. Nine or ten carriages accordingly waited for us at the appointed hour each with its noble owner in attendance; and into a handsome chariot drawn by six horses, I stepped with a brother officer.

The vehicle was the production of Long Acre, and the silver mounted harness seemed of modern date. In other respects the set-out was old French; the postillions wore long coats of pink and green, with cocked hats and tails, and jack boots. They carried enormous whips; which, however the brisk looking bays were not likely to need. The men bowed to each other, smiled, spoke Jasmin and La Fleur, caressed their horses, and mounted with a "ca, ca!" and a "hola!" So away we went.

I need not describe our visit to Sans Souci, the Haytian Balmoral. We were told of a strong fortress among the mountains filling the horizon in which the courtiers fabled that there was a royal treasure to the amount of sixty millions of pounds value, no more and no less. We wandered with black maids of honour over lawns smiling with the richest and softest beauty. We dined luxuriously from tables covered with the finest damask, and set out with a profusion of rich plate. We were served by footmen in the royal livery of blue and black, with thin shoes and silk stockings. When the cloth had been removed, though thirty years have passed since then, I still remember the grizzled head of Christophe as he rose to speak; and being overcome with some thought, passed his hand before his forehead, and sat down while the breeze was sighing audibly in the thick foliage outside an adjoining open window.

We left Hayti after the stay of a day or two, and were I believe at Jamaica, when a vessel from Monte Christo, a port on the northern shore of St. Domingo, brought important news. This was two months after our visit to the Black Prince. My captain coming over to the side of the deck, where I was and holding a letter in his hand. Old me of Hayti being in revolt, the government being upset, the king dethroned. Christophe had been seized with illness; poison had been hinted at. His English doctor prescribed for him in vain; and, while he lay thus prostrate, a revolution broke out. It began with the mutiny of one regiment, the ringleaders of which were immediately shot. The flame, however, spread. The Englishman was offered untold riches, could he but enable the King to sit his horse for one hour, half an hour, ten minutes: in vain. Christophe was able only to think, to plan, and to give orders from his couch, that never were obeyed. Partial risings took place amongst those who had constituted themselves hardly dealt with. Pillage began, massacre followed. The royal troops poured out of their barracks into the great square in front of the palace—Christophe's proposed ten minutes might have brought them to him; but they joined the movement. Obnoxious officers were sacrificed upon the spot, the Prussian adjutant being the first to die. The Prince Royal was forced into the ranks; his uniform having been first torn from his back, but he himself was only maltreated: for being popular they did not kill him. Christophe, lifted into his carriage from a back door fled at a gallop to his mountain fastness. The garrison of that still remained faithful.

The Queen and the Princesses escaped on board a merchantman, which carried them to England. Amongst the domestics of the palace, there were as ever some devoted people, who perilled gladly their lives to save their master and his family. The mountain hold proved to be no shelter for the king against a host. The country rose, the troops followed the flying monarch, and he was soon surrounded in the den to which he had escaped, by a mixed multitude. Christophe saw then that his hour was come: mercy was not to be expected from a rugged populace and a revolting Prætorian band. He was summoned to surrender, and replied by discharging a pistol into his own heart. So he died. The mob sacked his treasure tower, and if they carried away property worth sixty millions of pounds somebody's nest must have been very warmly feathered.

As a man and a king Christophe may have deserved his fate; but as a giver of good dinners, whose politeness and whose champagne I had appreciated, he is remembered by me to this day, as a man whom it was surely barbarous to crush. — Household Words.

The Religion of the Russians.

Public attention being very particularly directed towards the Russian nation at the present time, a few remarks regarding some peculiarities in their manner of worship, &c., which probably are not generally known, may be interesting.

Whenever a Russian passes a church, his custom is to cross himself, [some do so three times, accompanying it with bowings.] In every room in their houses an image or picture is placed in the east corner, before which they uncover their heads and cross themselves on entering.

The churches are filled with these their representatives of the deity, and it is very curious to observe a devout Russian kissing the toe of one, crossing himself before another, while to another, he will in addition prostrate himself, even with head to the ground; the latter is also very frequently done at intervals during the celebration of their services; but their churches are always open, so that if any one wants to pay devotion to a particular image or picture while no service is going on, he can do so.

The Russians also believe in relics, in their efficacy in healing diseases, working other miracles, &c. Notwithstanding this, a very short time ago, a new relic was found in the south of Russia, and a courier being immediately dispatched with it to the Emperor at St. Petersburgh; on his arrival, his Majesty [expected some important news regarding his operations in Turkey when told his errand,] exclaimed "away with the relic! it is time to put an end to such nonsense." Would that this were to be carried out. But their superstitions seem too deeply rooted to be done away with in a short time.

Morn, Noon and Night.

Morn calleth fondly to a fair boy straying,
Mid golden meadows, rich with clover dew;
She calls, but he still thinks of nought save playing,
And so she smiles and waves him an adieu!
While he, still merry with his flowery store,
Deems not that morn, sweet morn! returns no more!

Noon cometh—but the boy to manhood growing,
Heeds not the time—he sees but one sweet form,
One young, fair face, from bower of jasmine glowing,
And all his loving heart with bliss is warm;
So noon, unnoticed, seeks the western shore,
And man forgets that noon returns no more.

Night tappeth gently at a casement, gleaming
With the immortal light, flickering faint and low,
By which a grey-haired man is sadly dreaming
O'er pleasures gone as all these pleasures go;
Night calls him to bed, and he leaves his door,
Silent and dark—and he returns no more.

Nicholas, Emperor of Russia.

BY A RUSSIAN.

One will perhaps be astonished to find that a man who entertains very decidedly liberal opinions, should judge the Emperor of Russia in the way I am about to do. I have only one word to utter in reply. In the sharp and ardent struggle which the political events of 1830 brought on between the radical principles of which the French Press is the standard-bearer, and the purely monarchical principles of which Nicholas is the most sincere and enthusiastic representative, the Emperor of Russia, seen from a distance, has been not a little ill-treated by his adversary. He has appeared to the radicals of the West under a general aspect, and—in the theatrical attitudes which belong to his office. Consequently, persons have only viewed him in the light of the obstinate Chief of the Holy Alliance—the exterminator of Poland; and, with the aid of the French Constitutionnel's metaphors, they look upon him in imagination as a Russian Bear—an Ogre of the North. I grant all that to be very natural, and a perfectly allowable mode of attack. But for myself, if I am liberal as far as opinions are concerned, I pass my life with the other party. I do not believe in the same medium as others; I do not behold things from their point of view. And while, in Nicholas, some only appreciate the Emperor who is four hundred leagues away, I appreciate the man whom I have every day before my eye. They behold a myth; I see an individual. They pass judgment; I bear witness. Hence our differences. With this preface, I enter on my subject.

Under an absolute monarchy, and under a government so personal as that of Russia, in order to be well acquainted with what is called the politics of the country, it is an absolute necessity preliminary to be acquainted with the person and the character of the Monarch. I propose to sketch his personal characteristics: such a description will be the subject of this letter.

Nicholas is still a magnificent man, although he begins to lose the first slight attacks of age. He is intellectual; but his intellect is deficient in the extent of its range and scope. He has—what is tolerably common in Russia—the intellect of the Greeks of the Lower Empire.

He is affable, and exquisitely courteous. It may even be said that he has the coquettry of politeness and social tact. It is the matter of course, moreover, that the members of this family should be coquettish on some point or other. Alexander was coquettish about his person and dress. No exquisite could be more particular about his costume than the late Emperor was. He carried his nicety so far as frequently to leave the ball-room for a minute or two, to change his shoes, or retouch his hair if it happened to be a little disarranged. Nicholas also has the coquettry of the mind, and of frankly urbane manners. To this feeling must be attributed the improvements which he introduced into the police and the municipal arrangements of St. Petersburg, and particularly the favourable reception given to strangers who visit that capital. Nicholas delights to do the honours of his Empire; and, above all, he likes to receive the French, whom he dislikes in the mass, regarding them as a frivolous, unsteady and thoroughly republican people, but whom he esteems individually in respect to their intellect and character.

After the conversation, in which the Emperor would be sure to give proofs of dignity and good taste, he would be delighted beyond all expression if he could detect in the countenance of his visitor the least symptom of surprise and esteem. To be able to convince an adversary of his personal merits would be for the Emperor a triumph which would give him as much secret satisfaction as the occupation of Constantinople.

In private life, Nicholas is good-natured and simple; without, however, making a parade of those domestic virtues which are sometimes assumed as a speculation, in order to acquire popularity. He does not affect any burgess-like simplicity as a means of decoying fools and noodles. I have said Nicholas is frank, and that he abhors every kind of hypocrisy; he even has the opposite fault, especially when he has to do with people whom he hates or despises. He employs himself during his meals, and drinks tea frequently, which he sometimes makes himself. His family have very little influence over him, although he is not without affection for the Empress, who was once a handsome woman, but who, at the time of my writing this, has fallows—it was a deer going out to feed; a singular caprice—a passion for dancing. Most fortunately he came on toward me, With her it has become an incurable mania; owly feeding, until he approached to within and she cannot listen to the shortest strain but one hundred yards, and stopped. I played, even on a hurdy-gurdy or a flageolet, rew up my rifle; but he came still nearer, without immediately beginning to dance. everything and everywhere. But his real feats are performed away from home. An idea strikes him, and—presto! he jumps into his carriage. In three hours he has travelled fifteen leagues, and soon reaches the boundary of his empire, arriving at Berlin, Vienna, or Munich, at a moment when he was not in the least expected. I vastly like these journeys, which he performs with extraordinary rapidity; but if they are important in his opinion, in reality they are completely fruitless. Nicholas feels convinced that he has made a clever hit, when he drops like a thunderbolt on the capital of Bavaria; there are, nevertheless, a few shrewd lookers-on who know well enough that the flash is as harmless as summer lightning.

With many useful qualities, Nicholas is deficient in those which make the warrior. It is not that he is ignorant of military matters, —far from that; he is very fond of the army and perfectly understands its details. He is learned in regulations, equipments, and dress; he knows the names of the officers, and the history of the regiments; gives the word of command in admirable style, but has none of the genius of the great captain in him. There is nothing about him of Napoleon the Conqueror, but he would have made Napoleon an excellent minister-of-war.

It has happened to the Emperor of Russia to receive a broad hint as to his own military incompetence, on two great occasions; first at the Balkan, where he was not long in finding out that his presence was more embarrassing than useful; and secondly, during the campaigns of the Polish insurrection, when he was obliged to abdicate the command to Diebitch and Paskevitch. In short, if Nicholas is only a moderate warrior, which is common enough among princes, he has the good sense to be conscious of the fact, and not to pretend to the title of first captain of the age, which is a much rarer circumstance.

To the consciousness which Nicholas has of his slight vocation for the most important branches of military art, Europe is perhaps indebted for the peace which she has so long enjoyed. No one doubts that, if a decided aptitude had turned his activity in the direction of warfare, he would have commenced, in 1830, a struggle which would have soon become general, and fatal to himself; but, having been compelled to renounce the glories of battle for those of diplomacy, he prefers to maintain the contest against the principles of freedom in the Cabinet rather than in the field. Opportunity is the pride of Nicholas: his policy, therefore, will always be threatening, but will rarely venture beyond a threat.

Besides, he is equally at ease, both practically and theoretically, in the exercise of personal government. He is idolised by the people—idolised is the word, for the love they bear him is more nearly allied to fetishism than to real affection. He has enemies among the nobles, only as it would cost him but a single word to deprive them of fortune, liberty, and life, no one dares to stir, or evince the slightest sign of resistance. Such is the ordinary position of the Emperors of Russia. They have nothing to contradict them; and Jupiter Tonans is not so complete an emblem of power as they are. Even Jupiter Tonans was found one morning strangled in his bed. The past has always gone on in this way, and the future will probably continue the same. The Russian Government is absolute monarchy, kept in check by reciede. The bowstring is the Russain liberty of the Press; the other liberty of the Press is the better of

MIGHTY HUNTERS.

(Concluded from the last Week.)

On the same journey the hunter again fell short of meat; for one day he sought game in vain, without coming on a single track. On the second day he saw Wapiti deer, but was unable to get near them. That night, tired and hungry, he dreamed continually of delicious feasts and hospitable friends, and awaked all the more hungry and disappointed. On the third day, having had no solace but a pipe, he hunted hard without success, and suffered less from hunger than on the second day. He was upheld by the confidence that sooner or later he would fall in with game. At length he came upon the fresh tracks of deer, zig-zagging, as they do before lying down. He says: "I remained perfectly still, looking intently, with eyes sharpened by hunger, at the copse; something stirred in the wood, and soon a hundred yards, and stopped. I rew up my rifle; but he came still nearer, and he turned his flank towards me. I eard the bullet crack against his shoulder; rolled up, and rolled to the bottom of the slope; but we did not venture to approach until we had ascertained she was dead, by pelting her with sticks and stumps. After this Dauphin, with a stick and coil of rope, set out to catch the young suckling bears, but they fought so hard that he was obliged to kill one, and the other bit and scratched so that the old hunter was glad to let him go."

Mr. Palliser was not content until he had shot three more of these grisly monsters, of the largest of which he says, with his usual candour, "He rose up, displaying such gigantic proportions as almost made my heart fail me. I croaked again like a bull calf: he came cantering up slowly. I felt I was in for it, and that escape was impossible; so cocking both barrels of my firelock I remained kneeling until he approached very near, when I suddenly stood up; upon which the bear with an indolent roaring grunt, raised himself once more upon his hind legs. Just as he was balancing before springing on me, I fired, aiming close under his chin; the ball passing through his throat, broke the vertebræ of the neck, and down he tumbled floundering like a great fish out of water, until at length he reluctantly expired. I drew a long breath, and felt right glad at the successful issue of the combat."

And here we may as well end the hunting adventures, of which we have given only a few. Many amusing and pleasing traits of the character of the author are unconsciously scattered through the narrative. The self-possessed manner in which at New Orleans, having forgotten, the name and street of his hotel, and, having wandered into a house by mistake, he receives a candle through a narrowly-opened door from a white jewelled hand, and retires, to be awakened the next morning by an offer of ivory-backed hairbrushes from a lady who turns out to be the wife of a friend—such is the hospitality of New Orleans—is delightful. So is the ball at St. Louis, where he rushed into a kitchen, and made pretty Madame Zoller leave the cooking, and come up and dance the Sturm Marsch Gallop with a pair of shoes that kept continually coming off.

If he has the toothache and cannot eat venison, he goes down and kills a buffalo bull, and feasts off his marrow bones. Then he finally embarks for England with a menagerie of one black bear, two bison calves, a deer, and antelopes, after being indebted to the bear for defending his clum the antelope, against the attacks of a great mastiff in the streets of New Orleans.

And so we take leave of John Palliser—a good sportman; who does not gloat over his victims with half savage exultation.

THE GOSPEL TRIBUNE.

PROSPECTUS.

The first number of a monthly paper, to be known as above indicated, is proposed to be published in Toronto within a few months, and not later than the First day of July, 1854. The work in size and appearance to be at least equal to the Missionary Record or Christian Observer; and as much superior to either in style and execution as the subscription list will warrant.

DISTINCTIVE OBJECT:

To enlarge the limits of Communion and Church-Membership, among Christians, to the greatest possible extent; and to circumscribe those bounds to the exclusion, if possible, of all other characters, without otherwise disturbing the Membership of existing Churches; still acknowledged Christian Character shall constitute the only passport, at any time, and the perfect passport at all times, to every Communion and Church worthy of the Christian name; "that the world may believe" in Christ, even as he prayed.

GENERAL OBJECTS:

The promotion of Religious, Moral, Intellectual and Social Improvement, under the guidance of Divine Revelation, submitting every move and measure to the test of Gospel Principles.

SUPPORTERS:

The distinctive and general objects of the work are such, as to claim for it the patronage of all classes of men, excepting those wedded to other pre-requisites of Communion and Church-membership, than acknowledged Christian Character; and here it is recorded with great pleasure that the encouragements tendered, thus far, are in strict accordance with the above general claims.

ORIGIN AND PROGRESS:

This movement has long been contemplated. For twenty years the subscriber has made the distinctive object of the GOSPEL TRIBUNE his special study: examining carefully and personally the denominational aspect of Religious Societies,—their reciprocal bearings, their mutual relations, and the nature of their combined influence on the evangelization of the world. Latterly, his position as Publisher of the SCRIPTURE MANUAL, has probably afforded him the best possible facilities for personally testing the strength of his positions, and for the attainment of certain important information, but little of which he had previously been able to obtain. All may rest assured, however, that no undue advantage will ever be taken of the frankness and candor with which Christians of every name, as well as skepticism of every class, have freely expressed their convictions in the presence of the Travelling Colporteur; the capacity in which the Publisher is still extending his observations through Canada and the neighboring States.

CO-LABORERS:

Of distinguished worth and of well-known literary ability, are already secured in the several sections of Canada, and in the States of the American Union; and arrangements are now in progress, to obtain from living responsible writers in Britain, important assistance in the developement of the TRIBUNE'S Mission.

TERMS AND NOTICES:

The Terms are One Dollar per Annum in advance,—otherwise Two Dollars; it being found that one half of the Subscriptions, not paid in advance, are worse than lost. Editors—friendly—will render assistance by noticing this Prospectus. All parties willing to aid, may at once commence soliciting the names of Subscribers. Two books—the Scripture and Laconic Manuals—fully gilt, and the Paper one year, will be forwarded to the person who first sends the names of ten Subscribers; and one of either of the books, in substantial leather binding, or the Paper one year, to every one who sends ten names. Subscriptions and all other communications for the Paper to be sent, post-paid marked Money, (if inclosed) and addressed, ROBERT DICK, Box 411, TORONTO.

Sermons and Lectures, promotive of the TRIBUNE'S object, will be delivered by the Publisher, throughout the Province as frequently as shall be found compatible with his other duties.

CALL FOR A NATIONAL EMIGRATION CONVENTION OF COLORED MEN,

To be held in Cleveland, Ohio, on the 24th, 25th and 26th of August, 1854.

MEN AND BRETHERN:—The time has now fully come, when we, as an oppressed people, should do something effectively, and use those means adequate to the attainment of the great and long desired end—to do something to meet the actual demands of the present and prospective necessities of the rising generation of our people in this country. To do this, we must occupy a position of entire equality, of unrestricted rights, composing in fact, an acknowledged necessary part of the ruling element of society in which we live. The policy necessary to the preservation of this element must be in our favor, if ever we expect the enjoyment, freedom, sovereignty, and equality of rights anywhere. For this purpose, and to this end, then, all colored men in favor of emigration out of the United States, and opposed to the American Colonization scheme of leaving the Western Hemisphere, are requested to meet in CLEVELAND, OHIO, on TUESDAY, the 24th DAY of AUGUST, 1854, in a great NATIONAL CONVENTION, then and there to consider and decide upon the great and important subject of emigration from the United States.

No person will be admitted to a seat in the Convention, who would introduce the subject of migration to the Eastern Hemisphere—either to Asia, Africa, or Europe—as our object and determination is to consider our claims to the West Indies, Central and South America, and the Canadas. This restriction has no reference to personal preference, or individual enterprise; but to the great question of national claims to come before the Convention.

All persons coming to the Convention must bring credentials properly authenticated, or bring verbal assurance to the Committee on Credentials—appointed for the purpose—of their fidelity to the measures and objects set forth in this Call; as the Convention is specifically by and for the friends of emigration, and NONE OTHERS—and no opposition to them will be entertained.

The question is not whether our condition can be bettered by emigration, but whether it can be made worse. If not, then, there is no part of the wide-spread universe, where our social and political condition are not better than here in our native country, and nowhere in the world as here, proscribed on account of color.

We are friends, too, and ever will stand shoulder to shoulder by our brethren, and all our friends in all good measures adopted by them for the bettering of our condition in this country, and surrender no rights but with our last breath; but as the subject of emigration is of vital importance, and has ever been shunned by all delegated assemblages of our people as heretofore met, we cannot longer delay, and will not be further baffled; and deny the right of our most sanguine friend or dearest brother, to prevent an intelligent enquiry to, and the carrying out of these measures, when this can be done, to our entire advantage, as we propose to show in Convention—as the West Indies, Central and South America—the majority of which are peopled by our brethren, or those identified with us in race, and what is more, destiny, on this continent—all stand with open arms and yearning hearts, importuning us in the name of suffering humanity to come—to make common cause, and share one common fate on the continent.

The Convention will meet without fail, at the time fixed for assembling, as none but those favorable to emigration are admissable; therefore no other gathering may prevent it. The number of delegates will not be restricted—except in the town where the Convention may be held—and there the number will be decided by the Convention when assembled, that they may not too far exceed the other delegations.

The time and place fixed for holding the Convention are ample; affording sufficient time, and a leisure season generally—and as Cleveland is now the centre of all directions—a good and favorable opportunity to all who desire to attend.—Therefore, it may reasonably be the greatest gathering of the colored people ever before assembled in a Convention in the United States.

Colonizationists are advised, that no favors will be shown to them or their expatriating scheme, as we have no sympathy with the enemies of our race.

All colored men, East, West, North and South, favorable to the measures set forth in this Call will send in their names (post-paid) to M. R Delany, or Rev. Wm Webb, Pittsburgh, Pa., that there may be arranged and attached to the Call, five names from each State.

We must make an issue, create an event, and establish a position for ourselves. It is glorious to think of, but far more glorious to carry out.

The late Deputation from the Society of Friends to the Czar.

Darlington, March 18.—Last night the members of the Mechanic's Institute in this town were treated to a lecture by Mr. Henry Pease, one of the late Deputation to the Emperor of Russia, on their object and mission. The Central Hall, the largest room in the town, was crowded to excess in every part; and there could not have been less than 2,000 persons present. The Chief Bailiff occupied the chair.

Mr. Pease said, that he could not help feeling that that large audience had been brought together by the unusual degree of interest now manifested in regard to Russia. He proceeded to give some interesting details of what happened to the deputation on their journey, and their encounters with the officials at the several places through which they passed. He said he took no credit to himself, as having done some great thing by performing this journey of 2,000 miles. Arrived at the palace of the Czar, he described the magnificence of the palace and the gracious reception accorded them by the Emperor. The address which the Deputation presented and the reply of the Czar, had already been published. There was, he thought, nothing unreasonable, or anything to ridicule in a body of men who had been in existence for 200 years, and whose number had averaged 2,000—who had always believed that the disputes of nations could never be settled by appealing to the sword—sending three of their number to endeavour to bring about a pacific settlement of the dispute, without appealing to such an awful thing as war. While in St. Petersburg the terrible slaughter of Sinope was performed at the theatres every night. He had brought with him a tattered portion of an illustrated paper which had been mutilated in its passage through the post office, and all the articles which were not considered by the authorities to be respectable were cut away. He ascribed the little or no progress which Russia made in civilization to the fettering of the press in that country. The Emperor, he said, seemed to be fully aware of the state of public opinion in this country with reference to the Eastern question. Both the Czar himself and the other members of the Imperial family to whom the Deputation were introduced, carefully abstained from making any allusion to the articles which the newspaper press in England contained about the late aggression. Mr. Pease said, no one cherished more ardently than himself the love for the freedom of the press in England; but he was exceedingly grieved and humbled at the course which the press in England had pursued in reference to this Eastern question—in resorting to abuse and calumny against the Czar, instead of reasoning calmly and appealing to sound argument. He could not believe but that the impressions which were conveyed to the public through the press were entirely unfounded and erroneous as regarded the Emperor and Empress. The effect which these misrepresentations had on the minds of both was painfully apparent. He did not give this as his own opinion merely, but many of the most respectable British residents in St. Petersburg were of the same opinion, and expressed their sorrow to the Deputation at the course pursued by the press in this country. From what he saw of the Emperor and Empress he was convinced that the estimation in which the former was held here was incorrect. He believed that the Czar was kind and temperate. His own people were devoted to him, and he was very often out among them unguarded, when he was always received with the greatest enthusiasm. The speaker said the river commanding a view of St. Petersburg was very strongly fortified indeed. He characterized war as inhuman, unnatural and unreasonable, and expressed his conviction that after thousands of lives had been sacrificed, the question would remain precisely where it now was.—Londn. Patriot.

The Fugitive Slave Law and the Wisconsin Democrats.—Nearly the whole press (says the Pa. Freeman) of Wisconsin, Democratic, as well as Whig and Free-soil, while expressing regrets at a resort to mob violence, condemns the Fugitive Law, and declares the recent action of the U. S. Senate in repealing the Missouri Compromise to be the cause of this popular feeling in that State.

The Appleton Crescent (a Democratic paper) says:

"So ends an arrest of the first fugitive in Wisconsin. We do not believe that if the U. S. Senate had not interfered to break down the Missouri Compromise, this slave would have been rescued, and the laws trampled under foot."

The Burr Oak, which is edited by a prominent Democrat, who was a Cass Elector in 1848, remarks.

"It is not very surprising to us that this thing should be. The public of this region is indignant at the attempted repeal of the Missouri Compromise. Any attempt to enforce the Fugitive Slave Law at this time, would meet with but little co-operation. This open resistance may be laid to the charge of those engaged in the Nebraska affair."

The Ozaukee Co. Times, (Dem.) after stating that Glover has escaped to Canada, exclaims:

"Good! But just think of it, a man to have to flee from the land of the free, to the realms of Monarchical and Aristocratic Britain, to enjoy even personal freedom."

It adds:

"The spirit which incited and effected the rescue of Glover is the same which incited and effected our national liberties. The revolutionary fathers rose in arms against unjust and oppressive laws, which were authoritative; the citizens of Milwaukie arose in their might against a law which deprives human beings of personal liberty, and tore from its relentless grasp a victim. That spirit, wherever it manifests itself, we honor. We honor the revolutionary fathers, so do we honor the citizens of Milwaukie."

Letter from Ledru Rollin, Mazzini and Kossuth, to George N. Sanders,

ON HEARING OF HIS REJECTION BY THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

George N. Sanders, London—Dear Sir: We just learn from the public papers the astounding and unexpected news that the Senate of the United States declined to confirm your nomination to the United States consulate at London.

We are prompted to express this our regret not only from private feelings of affection, which we are owing in return of the friendship we and our fellow exiles at large have experienced from you, but we are likewise prompted to do so on weighty considerations of a public character.

Sir, while the European cabinets combine against the triumph of the republican principle, we consider it, as well from community of interest as also from consistency, not to say from a due remembrance of the assistance received in trying days, to be the political duty of republican America to countenance the democratic principle, and to lend, if not more, at least her moral aid to the republicans of Europe.

This expectation, sir, is so conformable to nature and so logical that it enters in the apprehensions of the monarchial cabinets and in the hopes of the oppressed nations equally.

However, though popular manifestations of public opinion in the United States, and presidential messages, and corresponding resolutions of your legislative government, may certainly justify the expectation, sir, yet it is not to be doubted that it is the diplomatic agents of the United States in Europe who are called upon to represent most efficiently the power and vitality of the republican principle in the very eyes of monarchical Europe, and to assert its competent juxtaposition as well in social as in political regards, provided they always act, publicly as well as privately, in accordance with that same republican principle upon which the very foundation of your country rests.

Unfortunately, sir, it was until now but by rare praiseworthy exceptions that public opinion in Europe was gladdened by the view of such a representation of republican America—a fact certainly neither advantageous to the interests of republicanism in general, nor adding to the consideration abroad of republican America.

But in you, sir, we had the high gratification to see a gentleman perfectly consistent in the representation of your country's democratic character—such, in a word, as European democracy wishes to see the representatives of republican America—true, not only in their official activity, but also in their social life, to the character of America.

Besides, sir, it is a duty on our part thankfully to acknowledge your prompt and hearty readiness to advance the cause of democracy in Europe with all the means consistent with the duties incumbent on your official position; and while we can but appland the discretion you never fail to use in paying due regard to the established relations of your Government, we in the same time beg leave to assure you of our grateful appreciation of all the valuable and important services you have rendered during your short stay amongst us, as well to the cause of democracy in general as also to many of its representatives in particular: services the more important and the more valuable as it is obvious that the political conjunctures of Europe have come to an essential turning point, when that concord and union which, amongst other particular services, you so happily succeeded to cement between the different fractions of European democracy, cannot prove, but vitally beneficial to the cause.

And it is at such a moment, sir, that the vote of the Senate of the United States reverses the leaf, and gives full scope to the misrepresentation that it is precisely on account of the marked sympathy you have shown to the democracy in Europe, that your confirmation has been withheld.

That is a hard and mischievous blow at the prospects of that democracy just at this moment, dear sir; we regret to say that it will cause great rejoicing in all despotic quarters but will also cause in democratic quarters a regret and a discouraging disappointment, such as ours is.

We cannot believe, dear sir, that such could have been the design of the Senate of the United States; but sure it is that is the lamentable effect, and we cannot forbear to hope that the knowledge of that lamentable bearing may yet induce a reconsideration, which we most fervently wish.

Yet, however that be, dear sir, we are on the eve of great events; some of those who now address you as exiles may probably soon be called upon to act with the authority of their triumphant respective nations; and in that event, sir, we beg you to be assured that there will be more than one amongst us who shall prove to you that the republics of Europe are not forgetful of received services, and know how to appreciate their true friends.

In the meantime, please to accept once more the expression of our profound regret, as also the assurance of our high appreciation and sincere thankfulness.

Public Opinion in the States.

In a late number of the Liberator we find the following encouraging paragraph in relation to the state of public sentiment on the slavery question. May the improvement here spoken of be permanent! So often, however, has the North in time past, succumbed to the demands of the slave power, that while we hope it may be so our fears and forebodings are even stronger than our hopes, and we find the idea ever present with us, that this new-found anti-slavery zeal on the part of the Northern ministers and politicians, may be after all, as the morning cloud and the early dew, which soon pass away.

"In what period of our great struggle has there been a crisis so momentous as the present—an occasion so imperatively demanding the thronging presence and serious deliberation of the tried and unfaltering friends of bound and bleeding humanity—or such an opportunity to strike an effective blow at the hellish power of slavery? The state of the Northern mind is now sympathetic and cathlic towards our hitherto unpopular movement; the current of public feeling has visibly changed its course, the defenders and apologists of the loathsome slave system no longer stand forth, as once they did, on Northern soil, but skulk for shame and confusion of face; it is now seen and felt to be a reflection upon the intelligence, and a stain upon the character, to be pro-slavery in spirit or position; the subject is universally discussed, and has swallowed up all other topics of national interest, as Aaron's rod did all the rods of Egyptian magicians, never has there been such a willingness to hear the advocates of impartial freedom or so ready an acquiescence in our views and sentiments, and it is apparent that at every public gathering, whether to protest against the Nebraska Bill, or to seek the entire abolition of slavery, the strongest utterances for freedom are responded to the most enthusiastically. These are indeed cheering signs of the times. 'Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed.' To strike while the iron is hot is as important in any great moral enterprise, as it is in fashioning any carnal weapon or instrument of husbandry. And what an enterprise is that in which we are embarked! So comprehensive, so immeasurable, so indissolubly connected with human redemption so regardful for the honour and supremacy of God, so imbued with the world-reconciling spirit of human brotherhood! And what a revolution to be accomplished! A Democratic nation, and every sixth person in the land the property of some other person! A civilized nation, and millions of its population doomed by law to ignorance and utter degradation. A christian nation, and the Bible a prohibited volume, the institution of marriage abolished, the souls and bodies of men daily in the market for sale and barter, and all parental and filial ties dishonored, among a population greater than that of all the New England States! And finally, the Slave Power omnipotent over the whole country, animated by the spirit of infernalism. Against all that is holy, just and true—uttering the foulest blasphemes against Heaven, and plotting for its extension wherever the American flag extends, or by conquest or annexation can be carried round the globe!

The States and the Emperor.

[From the Pennsylvania Freeman.]

There is a good deal of sympathy pretended in this country for the Turks in their present struggle with Russia. We believe that there are few, if any, presses that have openly taken the part of the Czar. But, still, the general feeling of the governing influences of the country are with him. It is of no consequence how the numbers are; but the influences that decide our public conduct must wish him success. Of course, our nobility and chivalry of the whip and branding-iron, disguised as demagogues, with their northern serfs of the press and the caucus, would rejoice in nothing so much as the humiliation of England and the consequent check of free discussion and free principles throughout the world. What a fine world it would be if Despotism in America could shake hands with Despotism in Russia, so that order should reign in Philadelphia as well as in Warsaw! Just imagine all Anti-Slavery papers suppressed, martial law proclaimed, treason against slavery punished summarily, and the institutions of the country settled on a broad and "National" foundation! For our own part, we do not see that Nicholas is a sinner above other men in this matter. He is only following in our footsteps. When we wanted some more territory we lied a little about it, and then went to war and helped ourselves. And this is just what he is doing. This method of proceeding made Presidents of General Taylor and of our present illustrious Chief Magistrate. Why, then should we be righteous overmuch, and tell him to stand farther off, for we are holier than he? We really think that the less the American people have to say against the Autocrat, the better for their character and their consistency. Our rebukes of him may rebound and knock ourselves over.

Letter from a Condemned Criminal.

The following letter from David Jewell, who was executed in Pittsburg, two weeks ago for the murder of Samuel Mitchell is worth reading. It shows that rum is the cause of crime and murder.

County Prison, Pittsburg, March, 1854.

Dear Will:—In a few more short days the existence and history of your friend will end on earth, and before I leave, dear Will, I have a few words of advice to leave with one whom I loved as a brother, and you appeared to be to me, and have acted as such, during my long and painful incarceration, for which I return to you, and your wife, my most profound thanks.

I trust what little I have to say to you will not be deemed wrong nor out of place, it may be a benefit to you in years to come, and you may profit by it, which I hope you will. Only look back to the morning of the 5th of July, and picture to yourself the happy man I was on that glorious, but unhappy day to me. I left my little home under the promise to be back again in the course of an hour to accompany them on a railroad excursion; from there I got in the company of some young friends, took a social drink together, and from that to another, and another, and yet another; I then forgot my promise to those I held most near and dear to me. And it is to this blighting curse and against its use, I wish to draw your attention. You are younger than I am, and I know you will bear with me in warning you for ever, ever touching it. I know you are not in the habit of it; but you are kind open, generous and free-hearted, and it is this that makes me write to you on this occasion; and you will admit that no one knows your generous disposition better than I do.

My first piece of advice to you is never drink liquor in any way—never do it from the time you read the last words of one who always was your firm friend, and, thank God, you have proved the same to me But, for me to say liquor-drinking is an evil is what every man, woman and child will readily admit, and to say that liquor drinking is the cause of intemperance, is also saying what no living man will deny; and intemperance produces, either directly or indirectly much the largest part of the misery and wretchedness in our happy country. Its baneful, withering curse is seen and felt in every grade of society. It makes the rich poor, and the poor destitute. It separates the tie that binds husband and wife. It destroys the natural affection existing between the parent and child. It brings husband and wife, parent and child, to an untimely, and even often to an ignominous death. But it is unnecessary for me to depict the evils attendant upon the use of intoxicating liquors, I wish from my most soul that I could have looked with the same calm reflection on this evil when I had my liberty, as I have since seen, and since studied. There are but few persons I am satisfied, but can call to mind, in their own recollection, some friend, some loved acquaintance, whose bright future has been hopelessly blasted by the use of drinking liquor. I will say no more to you on this subject, only remember this —

How many sorrows and how many tears,
Which darken life's rough pathway thou dost bring (intemperance.)
For closer than a brother thou dost cling
To these frail mortals once within thy power,
Who strive to banish thee all—save only some,
And keep the foremost accents that from me flow'r,
Which darker, gloomier grow with each succeeding hour.

I will say no more in regard to this, but my last word to you is, never, never drink liquor and you will be a happy man. Leave off running with fire engines, they are the means of bringing many a good young man to shame and disgrace. Let your evenings be spent in the society of your wife and child, and my word for it, you will be the happiest of the happy.

I can say no more, my heart is too full. Farewell, Billy, farewell. Ever and truly yours, &c.

Help for Russia.—We have been informed of a curious and extraordinary movement for the benefit of Russia, which contemplates nothing more nor less than the destruction of the allied fleets in the Baltic. It will be recollected that on the last outward trip of the steamship Baltic, ex-alderman Wesley Smith, Jr., accompanied a Russian officer, bound for St. Petersburg, ostensibly with the view of fulfilling a contract for supplying the imperial government with $300,000 worth of ship timber. We now learn that some ten or twelve other Americans went out with Mr. Smith, and that they are associated in a secret contract with Russia for the destruction of the British and French fleet in the Baltic, [under they approach sufficiently near any Russian port for the purpose,] by means of Taylor's submarine armour and Colt's submarine battery. The plan, we understand, is this:—A portable torpedo, of sufficient power to sink a man-of-war, is to be carried under the water by a man encased in submarine armor. He fastens the battery to the bottom of the ship, and returns to the shore, when by means of an electric wire, the battery is fired, and the ship is blown up. It is said this submarine armor and battery company are to receive one hundred thousand pounds sterling if successful in clearing out the allied squadron; and they are otherwise to receive a stipulated sum for every hostile vessel destroyed.

We give the report for what it is worth. There may be something in it. The modus operandi of the submarine armor and battery is calculated to be tremendously destructive, if the ships for whose benefit their terrible experiment is intended are only sufficiently accommodating to run near enough to the shore and wait long enough to give the man in the submarine armour a fair trial. This, we should think, for the sake of proving the efficiency of these submarine inventions as coast and harbor defences, the British and French fleets ought to allow. The Submarine Armor and Torpedo Company only ask a fair trial. Why not let them have it?—N. Y. Herald.

Fixed Facts in Agriculture.

Somebody has made up the following list of "fixed facts" in agriculture. Though calculated for the Eastern States, many of the facts are of general application:

1. All lands on which clover or the other grasses are sown, must either have lime in them naturally, or that mineral must be artificially supplied. It matters little whether it be supplied in the form of stone lime, oyster lime or marl.

2. All permanent improvement of lands must look to lime as its basis.

3. Lands which have been long in culture, will be benefitted by application of phosphate of lime, and it is unimportant whether the deficiency be supplied in the form of bone dust, guano, native phosphate of lime, composts of flesh, ashes, or that of oysters, shell lime—or marl—if the land needs it.

4. Mould is indispensable in every soil, and a healthy supply can alone be preserved through the cultivation of clover and the grasses are cultivated in the course of rotation.

5. Mould is indispensable in every soil, and a healthy supply can alone be preserved through the cultivatton of clover and the grasses, the turning in of green crops, or by the application of composts, rich in the elements of the best mould.

6. All highly concentrated animal manures are increased in value, and their benefits produced by admixture with plaster, salt or pulverized charcoal.

7. Deep ploughing improves the productive powers of every variety of soil that is not wet.

8. Subsoiling sound land, that is land that is not wet, is eminently conducive to increased production.

9. All wet lands should be drained.

10. All grain crops should be harvested before the grain is thoroughly ripe.

11. Clover, as well as the grasses intended for hay, should be mowed when in full bloom.

12. Sandy lands can be most effectually improved by clay. When such lands require liming or marling, the lime or marl is most beneficially applied when made into a compost with clay. In slacking lime salt brine is better than water.

13. The chopping or grinding of grain to be fed to stock, operates as a saving of at least twenty-five per cent.

14. Draining of wet lands and marshes, adds to their value, by making them produce more, and by improving the health of the neighborhood.

15. To manure or lime wet lands, is to throw manure, lime and labor away.

16. Shallow ploughing operates to impoverish the soil, while it decreases production.

17. By stabling and shedding stock during the winter, a saving of one-fourth of the food may be effected—that is, one-fourth less food will answer, than when stock is exposed to the inclemency of the weather.

18. A bushel of plaster per acre, sown broadcast over clover, will add one hundred per cent to its produce.

19. Periodical application of ashes tends to keep up the integrants of the soil, by supplying most, if not all of the organic substances.

20. Thorough preparation of land is absolutely necessary to the successful and luxuriant growth of the crops.

20. Abundant crops cannot be grown for a succession of years, unless care be taken to provide an equivalent for the substances carried off the land in the land products grown thereon.

22. To preserve meadows in their productiveness, it is necessary to harrow them every second autumn, apply top-dressing, and roll them up.

23. All stiff clays are benefitted by fall and winter ploughings, but should never be ploughed when wet. If at such ploughings the furrow be materially deepened, lime, marl or ashes should be applied.

24. Young stock should be moderately fed with grain in water, and receive generous supplies of long provender, it being essential to keep them in a fair condition, in order that the formation of muscles, bones, &c., may be encouraged and continuously carried on.

25. Milch cows, in winter, should be kept in dry, moderately warm, but well ventilated quarters, fed and watered three times a day, salted two or three times a week, have clean beds, be curried daily, and in addition to their long provender, should receive succulent food morning and night.

26. Full complement of tools and implements of husbandry, are intimately connected with the success of the husbandman.

27. Capital is not only necessary to agricultural success, but can be properly used in farming, as in any other occupation.

28. Punctuality in engagements is necessary to an agriculturalist, as it is to a merchant.

29. Every husbandman should carefully read and digest matters connected with his business; his success being as dependent upon a full knowledge of its principles and details, as is that of the lawyer, or physician with a knowledge of the science of law or physic.

30. Wheat, rye, oats and barley, should never follow each other in course of rotation; there should always be an intervening hoe-crop between them.

From the Anti Slavery Reporter.

SLAVERY IN CHINA.

A curious document has been kindly placed in our hands, of which we subjoin a translation. It is the original bill of sale, by which a Chinese lad, born free, was transferred, as a slave, by his own father, to a third party. We are informed, upon the very best authority, that such transactions are by no means uncommon. It is notorious that slavery is one of the domestic institutions of China.—We hope ere long to be able to lay before our readers some further particulars on this subject, and trust that the appointment of Dr. (now Sir) John Bowring, to the important office of governor of Hong Kong and chief superintendent of British trade, may be the means of introducing the question of emancipation in that ancient empire, the strong barriers of which modern civilization is rapidly breaking down. Sir John Bowring, has in past times rendered essential service to the cause, and his recent unsparing and vigorous exposures of the nefarious dealings of the Chinese Coolie-emigration agents at Amoy and elsewhere, prove that he is still on the alert in behalf of humanity. It is difficult, to foresee what the opening of the Chinese empire, under a new dynasty, is likely to do but we may hope that the introduction of even the spurious Christianity of the "rebel party," may prove the precursor of freedom to those who are in bonds. It would be a singular spectacle to see China renounce domestic slavery under the influence of a semi-christianity, whilst America, boasting of her freedom and her religious and political institutions, clings to the abomination.

A SON SOLD AS A SLAVE.

"I the executor of this deed of sale, Le Wan Foo being destitute of funds for the purchase of food, became desirous after consultation with my wife, of selling as a slave my own begotten, second son, named A Chaou, and aged fourteen years, having been born in the noon watch of the 15th day of the 5th month of the Woo Kea year, the 14th of Taou Wang. I therefore gave information of my intention to the chief of my clan, and first sought for a purchaser among my relatives without success. Since, by the instrumentality of the middleman Hwang Wei Pang, a purchaser has been found in Chang Pih Jin. It has been agreed by the two parties in the presence of the middleman that the price should be 40,000 copper cash; and I, Le Wan Foo, have this day taken my second son A Chaou, and delivered him over as a slave to Chang Pih Jin, by whom his name is to be altered at pleasure, and whom he is to serve to the end of his life. Shou'd his master hereafter give him a wife, and he should have born to him sons or daughters, they shall from generation to generation be attached to the house of Chang Pih Jin as slaves, and be in all things subject to the control of their master without interference on the part of my, Le Wan Foo's, family. I, Le Wan Foo, have already received in full with my own hands the sale price of the person. Should there in future be any quest on about his origin, the seller and middleman shall be themselves answerable, the purchaser having no concern therewith. This is a distinct sale and purchase, without objection from either side, not a transfer in redemption of debt, nor a case of constrained sale or of forcible seizure. As an oral agreement affords no proof, I have specially drawn up this deed of sale, attached to it the impression of my fore finger, and my signature, and handed it to the purchaser to be held by him in witness of the above. This is the truth.

"Truly paid over into the hand of Le Wan Foo by Chang Pih Jin in purchase of a slave, the price amounting to 40,000 copper cash.

"2 Truly negociated by the middleman Kwang Wei Pang, who witnessed the distinct sale of Le A Chaou as a slave, and the delivery of that person and of his price to the repective parties.

"[Signed the middleman, Hwang Wei Pang.

"Deed of sale of his own son executed on the 21st day of the third month of the 27th Taou kwang year, by Le Wan Foo.

"Signature and impression of the fore finger of the left hand of Le Wan Foo.

Tragical Scene.—Messrs. Editors:—As I have seen no published account of the following strange and heart rending scene, I take the liberty of sending you a brief sketch, as related to me by my brother-in-law [who resides in Waubacca Co, Wisconsin, and in the same neighbourhood,] a day or two previous to my leaving the state, which was about two weeks ago.

A farmer sold a yoke of oxen to an individual in the neighbourhood, and received his pay in paper money. The man who purchased the oxen being in a hurry to start off, requested the farmer to assist him in yoking them up: he accordingly went to the yard with the man—leaving the money lying on the table. On his return to the house, he found his little child had taken the money from the table and was in the act of kindling a fire in the stove with it. From the impulse of the moment, he hit the child a slap on the side of the head, so hard as to knock it over; and in the fall it struck its head against the corner of the stove, with such force as to break its skull. The mother was in the act of washing a small child in an adjoining room—on hearing the fracas, dropped the child and ran to the room whence the noise proceeded, and was so much terrified at what she there beheld, that she forgot the little child in the tub, for a time—and upon her return to the room found the little one drowned! The husband after a few moments reviewing the scene before him—seeing two of his children dead—without further reflection took, down his gun and blew his own brains out! —Exchange.

A Gigantic Railway Project.—General Intelligence.

. . . . . MONTREAL, Feb. 20.

I promised in my last week's communication to forward you a few particulars with reference to the Grand Trunk Railroad, its progress, and its prospects, feeling assured, from the English correspondence I have received on the subject, that this vast undertaking is watched in the British metropolis with much interest, and, if possible, more in a social than commercial point of view. It is at this moment totally impossible to predict the changes and consequent benefits to the colony, which the running of this line will accomplish, spanning as it does the whole length of the two provinces, besides providing an outlet to the Atlantic Ocean for the produce of the mammoth Western States, which now in a great measure finds its way through its southern neighbor's territories.

I know that in the midst of your present political difficulties, it is no easy task to discuss the question of social improvement, whether at home or in the colonies but I am equally alive to the fact, that when the war does break out,—which now appears inevitable, and which even threatens an immediate outburst,—there will be thousands of persons who will at once withdraw their Continental investments, to deposit them in some other and safer security. To what point of the globe, then, will they turn, to find so great a desideratum as a safe investment in these times of approaching war? Certainly not on the eastern side of the Atlantic. America, then, and that British North America, must be most naturally pointed at, as being the oasis of the desert. Here a thousand different works are now being pushed on with vigour, which, when completed, will yield to their supporters a far higher rate of premium than has been obtained for similar securities in the Old Country for many years past.

And amongst others, I would certainly place the Grand Trunk Railroad as the first on the list. To give an idea of the vastness of this work, I may mention that it engrosses the traffic of a region extending 800 miles in one direct line, from Portland to Lake Huron, containing a population of nearly three millions in Canada, Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine. And before proceeding further, it would be well to observe that it is, for the whole of its length, protected from the possibility of injurious competition, not only by legislative enactment, but by what is of far greater security against rival lines, viz., natural causes. To continue then, at Portland it connects with the system of railways reaching eastward towards the province of New Brunswick, and, hereafter to Halifax, in Nova Scotia, as well as south, by lines, already existing, to Boston and New York. At the frontier of Canada it again unites with other lines to Boston and the great manufacturing districts of New England. From Richmond it runs eastward to Quebec and Trois Pistoles, 253 miles, giving direct access to the great shipping port of Canada in summer; and hereafter by rail to the Atlantic at Halifax, by Trois Pistoles and Mrimichi, forming the only route to the great fisheries of the Gulph of St. Lawrence, and the eastern timber, coal, and mineral district of New Brunswick.

At Montreal it again meets three railways now in operation to Boston and New York. At Prescott the tributary line from Bytown, and the vast timber districts of the Ottawa, 60 miles, now in course of early completion; and on the opposite side of the St. Lawrence, the northern New York road to Ogdensburgh will pour its stream of passenger traffic upon the trunk line. At Kingston, the Rome and St. Vincent Railroad, also from New York, becomes its tributary. From thence to Toronto, it receives the entire produce of the rich country north of Lake Ontario, through the channels of Belleville and Peterborough branch, and several other new lines already in progress to constuction, and all tributary to the main trunk road. At Toronto the Ontario Simcoe, and Huron Railroad, 100 miles now nearly finished, pours on the traffic of the region around Lake Simcoe and Georgian Bay. At the same point is also met the Great Western Railway, by Hamilton to Detroit, 240 miles, now in a forward state for completion, by which communication is had with the southern part of Western Canada, as well as with the railways in operation from Detroit to the State of Michigan, Illinois, and Wisconsin. From Toronto, westward, the line passing through the heart of the western peninsula of Canada, ensures to the Grand Trunk the exclusive traffic of the finest part of the province; while at its terminus on Sarnia it debouches at the very outlet of Lake Huron avoiding the shallows of the Detroit and St. Clair river below—a point the most favourably situated for the navigation extending through Lakes Huron and Michigan, and hereafter through Lake Superior. At Sarnia, the American railroads now in course of construction, place the Grand Trunk Line in the most direct communication with the arterial lines to the Great West and the Mississippi, a region whose advance in population and wealth has been regarded as almost fabulous, and whose resources are still very partially developed; while the traffic of the copper and iron districts of Lake Superior, the most valuable and extensive in the world, with the coal of Michigan, will accumulate on the railroad at this point, reaching ocean navigation at Montreal in much less time, and by the same mileage, that it can now pass by boat to the waters of Lake Ontario, 350 miles above that city.

It will, therefore, be seen, that the road commencing at the debouchure of the three largest lakes in the world, pours the accumulating traffic in one unbroken line throughout the entire length of Canada, into the St. Lawrence, at Montreal and Quebec, on which it rests at the north, while on the south it reaches the magnificent harbours of Portland and St. John's on the open ocean. The whole future traffic between the western regions and the east, including Lower Canada, part of the States of Vermont and New Hampshire, the whole of the State of Maine, and the Provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward's Island, and Newfoundland, must, therefore, pass over the Grand Trunk Railway.

Another feature in connexion with the road, and which cannot fail to produce summer traffic, will be the Montreal Victoria Tubular Bridge, which, when erected, will be the greatest achievement of engineering skill yet accomplished on either side of the Atlantic. Thus far have I endeavoured to give a faint outline of the country this line is to be carried through.

Its contractors are Messrs. Peto, Brassey, Betts and Jackson; its directors some of the first men in Canada; in London, its directors are Messrs. Baring, Glyn, McCalmont, &c.; and its managers are Sir C. P. Roney, Mr. Alexander Ross, and Mr. S. P. Bidder, men who have engaged for the last twenty years either in the construction or management of railways. Having said thus much of the prospects of the unfinished portions of the road, I have now to draw your attention to the section which is at present open and working, and also to the sections which will be opened in the ensuing spring. The lines open extend from Montreal to Portland, a distance of nearly 300 miles; and in the course of a couple of months the line between Montreal and Quebec will be completely finished. It is right to remark, that had it not been for the disastrous shipwrecks of last autumn, this road would have been opened last year; but as four vessels, which were laden with iron for the bridges, &c., along the road, went to the bottom of the sea, the delay could not be avoided. I am given to understand that already contracts have been entered into for the conveyance of the enormous amount of two hundred thousand superficial feet of timber daily from one district alone.

THE ABOLITIONISTS AND FREE COLORED PEOPLE.—The assumed anti-slavery preferences of the present Legislature have emboldened the abolitionists, and they have petitioned for several laws for their exclusive interest. Some ten days since two or three New York lawyers sent in a request that the treasury of the State might be made to disgorge a large amount of fees, claimed by them as counsel in the celebrated Lemmon slave case. The Judiciary Committee of the Senate this morning reported against the application. On Friday, the abolitionists, through Mr. Crosby, asked the Legislature to extend the elective franchise to the colored, or negro population. Yesterday morning, the Judiciary committee also reported against it. Mr. Crosby hoped the report of the committee would not be agreed to; he called the ayes and nays. Several Senators then aroused, and inquired who the petitioners were. It is now the first time it was heard of here, and several were not prepared to vote. Mr. Crosby (whig) stated that he presented the petition on Friday. Mr. Hopkins, (whig,) who presented the report, stated that the subject had been thoroughly debated in the convention which formed the constitution of 1846; the question had since been submitted directly to the people, when it was decided against by a very large majority and he was not aware that since then, any change had taken place in public opinion.

Mr. Putnam (whig) said this subject was canvassed and debated for six weeks in the constitutional convention, and here we are asked to vote upon it in a moment, and take action upon it. It has occupied the attention of the greatest minds in the State, and for one, he was not prepared so hastily to vote upon it, and asked to be excused. It was not granted, and he voted to sustain the report.

Mr. Z. Clark, dem. soft shell, was unprepared to vote. The hunkers pressed him. He said he should not vote, unless compelled by the Senate. He was excused, 12 to 8. The question was taken, and the report against allowing negroes to vote adopted as follows:—

Ayes—Messrs. Barnard, Barr, Brooks, Danforth, Hitchcock, Hopkins, Lansing, Putnam, Spencer, Storing, Watkins, Whitney, Yost—13. Six whigs and seven democrats.

Nays—Messrs. Bishop, Bradford, Butts, M. H. Clark, W. Clark, Crosby, Dickinson, Dorrance, Field, Munroe, Richards, Williams—13. All whigs,—showing the Seward strength in the senate, which has never before been tested—three or four dodging.—Albany corr. of the New York Herald.

ESCAPE OF SLAVES.—The Norfolk Beacon of March 31st, notices the escape of a slave the property of Mr. Richard Doyle, of that city, and adds: "We are called upon to announce almost daily the escape of this species of property to the North. The community of Norfolk and vicinity have within the last twelve months sustained a loss of $30,000 of slave property by the aid of Abolitionists, and are now large stockolders in this kind of property north of Mason and Dixon's line. We would ask if New Bedford, Boston, or any other community of Abolitionists were losers in any kind of property, would they sit so quietly, and not call for redress from the powers that be? It is time that the South should take some action. Forbearance has ceased to be a virtue."

The forbearance here alluded to, as having ceased to be a virtue, is that of the slaveholder—not of the slave.—National Era.

PROFESSOR WAYLAND.

At an Anti-Nebraska meeting held at Providence, Rhode Island, on the 7th ult., Professor Wayland, of Brown University, made a speech of which the following is an extract.

After describing the effects of sending slavery over the vast territory of the West, the speaker says:

When this has been done, this country, at home, will present a singular spectacle. The slaveholders in the United States are said not to exceed 300,000—call them half a million. We have then half a million of men governing, in fact, thirty or forty millions. An institution unknown to the Constitution will be seen annulling and subverting the Constitution itself,—an institution by which labor is rendered degrading and despicable, legislating for men who respect themselves the more for earning their own bread. How long a Union of such a character can continue, may be easily foreseen. The question ceases to be whether black men are forever to be slaves, but whether the sons of the Puritans are to become slaves themselves.

Nor is this all. This change in the principle underlying the Constitution changes our relations to the civilized world. The great question which is henceforth to agitate the nation is the question of Human Rights. It has been the glory of this country, thus far, to stand forth everywhere in defence of human liberty. It is the position which we have taken on this question that has given us our influence among nations, and taught down-trodden humanity everywhere to look up to us for succor. But establish slavery, not as the exception, but the rule—make slavery the law of the land, the pivot on which legislation turns—and we must by necessity ally ourselves with despotism. We expose ourselves to contempt, even now, by swaggering about human liberty, while a pious and benevolent lady is at this moment immured in a dungeon in Norfolk for no other crime than that of teaching children to read. What will it be when such an act of oppression is sanctioned by the whole country?

I value the Union as much as any man. I would cheerfully sacrifice to it everything but truth and justice and liberty. When I must surrender these as the price of the Union, the Union becomes at once a thing which I abhor. To form a union for the sake of perpetuating oppression, is to make myself an oppressor. This I cannot be, for I love liberty as much for my neighbor as for myself. To sacrifice my liberty for the sake of the Union is impossible. God made me free, and I cannot be in bondage to any man. These I believe to be the sentiments of the free States, and therefore I protest against this bill.

But there is another feature in this bill which deserves to be considered. The consequence of its passage must be the destruction of the Indian tribes within the Territory which it proposes to establish. Those poor red men had already begun to cultivate land, and were advancing in civilization and Christianity, when, in defiance of a hundred treaties, they were savagely torn up by the roots and transplanted to their present location, and in their removal, one-third of their whole number perished. Every guarantee that could bind a moral agent was given them, that they should remain unmolested in their present residence forever. They have schools admirably conducted, churches of Christ under the care of almost every Protestant denomination; they are introducing manufactures; and, in fact, will lose nothing by comparison with the whites in their vicinity. Shall these Christian men and women be again driven away? Shall the most solemn treaties ever ratified by the Senate of the United States be again violated? Shall an act of cruelty unparalleled in the history of civilized man be perpetrated,—because the victims are weak and their skins are red? Has no man any rights unless his skin is white, or has a just God given permission to white men to defraud, enslave and murder their fellow-men with impunity?

SLAVERY AND THE CHURCH.

A New England correspondent of the Northern Christian Advocate, writes as follows on the subject of slavery and the recent action of the Baltimore Conference.

If slavery is ever got out of the Church, we have got to take it by hoofs and horns and put it out. It has no conscience, no humanity, no manners. It is not only the "sum of all villanies," but of all impudence. Our brethren of the Baltimore Conference used to tell us that they were anxious to be free from the great evil, and were not only doing all they could for its eradication, but were looking for the "good time coming" when the reproach would be taken away from our civilization and religion. We believed them until the General Conference of 1852. Since then, their anti-slavery professions have been received at heavy discount. Hereafter they will have no currency in the East. At their recent session the papers report that with entire unanimity the Conference voted down the proposition of the Troy Conference, to introduce a rule into the Discipline of the Church to prohibit the reception of such slaveholders as sustain that relation on selfish grounds. Verily our "border brethren" are hard to please. They, and the slavery they tolerate are quite like old deacon Tomkins, whose religion always led him to be in opposition to his brethren. The Church bore with the deacon's obstinacy for a good many years, but forbearance lost its virtue, and patience took the consumption. The Church called a prayer meeting for the special benefit of the sick old deacon. The meeting assembled, and the deacon came also. Prayers were offered up. They became earnest, importunate, decisive, until a good brother unburdened his heart on this wise: "Lord, bless brother Tomkins! cure him of his stubborn spirit; but if this cannot be done on earth, Lord, take him to heaven." "I won't go," roared out the stern old deacon; and so far as I know he did not go. So says slavery, even Baltimore slavery, the pink and model of the institution. It is as much attached to the Church as ever deacon Tomkins was. We have been trying for many long years to get it out of the Church, and send it to perdition, where it belongs; but it refuses so. Not a home; and if we should propose to send it to heaven, it would reply like the deacon, out of spite, "I won't go."

But it must go, will go, shall go, "the Lord being our helper." Baltimore and all "the border Conference" may hold back; it will do no good. The unguent of "Compromises" and "Nebraska bills" has operated charmingly on the eyes that look up to heaven from the Northern States, and they "see men as trees walking;" they begin to see slavery with its mockeries, lies, and unspeakable monstrosities. They begin to loathe its pollutions, and despise its meanness; and when once thoroughly roused, no power this side the Infinite can repress the withering curses and blasting indignation of insulted and outraged freeman. The bullying bravadoes of Southern politicians, and the devout hypocrisies of Southern Churchmen, have nearly reached their limit. We have dreaded the stilettoes of the one class, and trusted to the sincerity and honor of the other; but assassins can no longer intimidate, and Southern faith can no longer be trusted. We now appeal to the God of the oppressed,—to the Bible,—to the Declaration of Independence,—to the fathers of the Republic and of Methodism. Slavery in Church and State must be branded as the ugliest child of Darkness. It must die.

Avowing their Principles.

Now that France and England are engaged in war in the East, it is supposed that these powers could not afford much aid to Spain in the event of a conflict with the United States. Hence southern papers are urging the immediate adoption of vigorous measures for the acquisition of Cuba, as a means to reinforce Slavery in this country. We give below, as a specimen, an extract from the Richmond [Va.] Enquirer.

"Our view of the policy of this measure," it says, as of every other, is determined by the paramount and controlling consideration of Southern interests. It is because we regard the acquisition of Cuba as essential to the stability of slavery, and to the just ascendancy of the South, that we consent to forego our habitual repugnance to political change, and to advocate a measure of such vast, and, in some respects, uncertain consequences."

"The only possible way in which the South can indemnify itself for its concessions to the Anti-Slavery fanaticism, is by the acquisition of additional Slave territory. We must reinforce the powers of Slavery as an element of political control, and this can only be done by the annexation of Cuba. In no other direction is there a chance for the aggrandizement of Slavery."

"The intrigues of Great Britain, the abolition of Slavery in Texas, &c., &c., are pursued with a zeal and energy which cannot fail of success, unless the United States interfere to prevent the consummation. The only effectual mode by which this may be done is by the transfer of the Island to the dominion of the States."

The whole article is in the same tone. We wish the reader to consider the two positions in the above extract:—1st, That the doctrine of non-intervention, which is vehemently insisted on at home, for the sake of Slavery, is to be boldly repudiated in the affairs of foreign powers—to plunge the country in war with, and rob a nation of her possessions, to promote "the stability of slavery, and the ascendancy of the South" in this government; and 2nd, That the most distant design of a despotic government to abolish human bondage in her own provinces, is considered a just cause of war by the "model republic." There is not a particle of doubt that these considerations are discussed in the Cabinet at Washington, for it is a notorious fact that the belligerent, fire-eating, Jefferson Davis is the ruling spirit of that Regent in matters pertaining to Slavery. The Washington Union not long ago, which is always semi-official, expressed similar sentiments. Every opportunity is watched by the present administration to get a tolerable pretext to pounce upon Cuba. Can the liberties of a country be safe when the government makes the most determined efforts to repeal the laws of Freedom at home, and to plunder surrounding territories for the purpose of strengthening a gigantic system of bondage?—Olive Branch.

A PURITAN SUNDAY.

As every matter connected with the social life and customs of the first settlers of New England is of much interest to their descendants, we propose, in a few short articles, to give as correct a description of "Sunday in New England" two hundred years ago, as we can collate from our former annals. The Puritan Ssbbath commenced on Sunday afternoon. No labor was performed on the evening which preceded the Lord's Day. Early on Sunday morning, the blowing of a horn, in some villages, announced that the hour of worship was at hand; in other places, a flag was hung out at the rude building occupied by the church. In Cambridge, a drum was beat, in military style. In Salem, a bell indicated the opulence of the settlement. The religious services usually commenced at nine o'clock in the morning, and occupied from six to eight hours, divided by an intermission of one hour for dinner. The people collected quite punctually, as the law compelled their attendance, and there was a heavy fine for any one that rode too fast to meeting. The sexton called upon the minister, and escorted him to church, in the same fashion that the sheriff now conducts the judge into our State courts. The minister was clothed with mysterious awe and great sanctity by the people; and so intense was this sentiment that even the minister's family were regarded as demi-gods. The Puritan Meeting-House was an odd structure. The first ones erected by the colonists were built of logs, and had a cannon on the top. Those standing two centuries ago were built of brick, with clay plastered over the courses, and covered with clay-beards, now called clapboards. The roof was thatched as buildings are now seen in Canada East. Near the church edifice stood those ancient institutions—the stocks—the whipping-post—and a large wooden cage to confine offenders against the laws. Upon the outside of the church and fastened to the walls, were the heads of all the wolves killed during the season. In front of the church, in many towns armed sentries stood dressed in the habiliments of war. There were no pews in the church. The congregation had places assigned them upon the rude benches, at the annual town-meeting, according to their age and social position. "Seating the meeting house," as it was called, was delicate and difficult business, as pride, envy and jealousy were active passions in those days. A person was fined, if he occupied seats beneath the pulpit. The boys were ordered to sit upon the gallery stairs, and as boys always will be boys, three constables were employed to keep them in order. Prominent before the assembly some wretched male or female offender, sat with a scarlet letter—"A" or "D;" on the breast, to denote some crime against the stern code. We make a few extracts from the laws of the New England colonies respecting the Sabbath:

"No woman shall kiss her children on the Sabbath or fasting day."

"No one shall run on the Sabbath-day, or walk in his own garden or elsewhere, except reverently to and from meeting."

"No one to cross the river, but with an authorised ferry man."—Boston Transcript.

SPECIAL.

T. H. of London will please read the above attentively, but be not discouraged.

C. of Chatham, (we forbear to give the other initials) may do better at poetry next time.

H. is hardly up to our standard this time.

Ida, of this city, will also take a gentle hint. Never, despair but "try again" all of you.

W. S. shall appear in our next; also, S. of Brooklyn.

W. He has disappeared from that locality, and has not been heard of for about five months. Any information respecting the above will be thankfully received. Address WESLEY FURLONG, at this Office.

TO SUBSCRIBERS IN TORONTO.—As several of our subscribers in this city have not given their address, we will send their papers through the post office until further instructed.

REVIVAL MEETINGS.—A correspondent informs us that the revival meetings which are now being held in the 2nd Richmond street church (Rev. Mr. Hatfield's) have so far been attended with great success. Many converts have been made.

THE NEW MECHANICS HALL.—On Monday last, the ceremony of laying the foundation stone of the new Hall was performed, in the presence of a large concourse of interested spectators. The day was bright, and the procession of Masons, with their insignia, appeared to the best advantage. Addresses were delivered by the President, T. J. Robertson, Esq., Dr. McCaul, President of the Toronto University, and by Patrick Freeland, Esq., Vice-President of the Institute. The Hall will be a large and hand some edifice, equally ornamental as useful.

THE PHILADELPHIA REPUBLICAN.—We are indebted to some one of our friends in the Quaker City, for daily copies of this independent, outspeaking paper. Thanks! It is to us as the smiling face of an old acquaintance. Long may it flourish!

D.

CHANGE OF NAME.—The citizens of London, C. W., propose changing the name of their city to Westminster, alleging as the reason, that their correspoddence largely finds its way to the London, England That is inconvenient.

DAVIS, the fugitive, surnamed the "Salt Water Fugitive," has been remanded to the man who claims him as a slave. This is about the most outrageous case of iniquity that has ever been perpetrated by the Northern tools of slavery.

The receipts on the great Western railroad, last week, amounted to $21,100.

About Canada.

We give in another column, a letter from a correspondent in Montreal, to the London Advertiser. Our readers in the States will peruse it with attention, as it contains some facts in relation to these Provinces such as we presume some of them are desirous of becoming acquainted with. We might enlarge upon the subject of Canadian progress and Canadian prosperity, in agriculture, commerce, population, education, &c.; we might talk of the free and cheap government of Canada; we might even adopt the words used in a cotemporary, and say, that "Canada is the freest country in the world. The oppressed of all nations even those of the United States can come to us, for as soon as their feet touch Canadian Soil, that moment they are free. In the eyes of justice both white and black, slave and free-born, rich, and poor, learned and unlearned are the same."

The truth of this statement is apparent, and the proof easy; but, as we do not wish to give our readers too much on one subject at a time, we forbear. We will often, however, have occasion to return to this matter, as we intend to redeem our promise, and furnish our readers with facts respecting the condition and prospects of Colored Canadians. In the meantime, we may state generally, that we find colored men here following successfully every description of mechanical trade, without let, difficulty, or hindrance. In the more western parts of the Province, many are prosperous as farmers, millowners, &c.; and their prospects for usefulness, comfort, and elevation, are in every way superior to what we have witnessed in any portion of the States. The reasons for this are obvious. First, and chiefly, in the Free States, generally, the law does not recognize the colored man as an equal with the white—the disastrous consequences of which partiality are every where patent to the most superficial observer; secondly, public feeling, in the States, is opposed to the colored man; in the church, he is colonised; at the theatre he is colonised; from the large majority of places of public amusement and instruction he is entirely excluded, and if admitted at all to the public schools, as he is in some of the Free States, it is with a grudge and against much opposition. Not so in Canada. Here he is recognized by the law, as a man—there is no such phrase as black man, in contradistinction to white, in the civil code of the Provinces. The churches are alike open to all, without any distinction of color. The schools (by law) are open to all. The sympathies of the public are with and not against the colored man, as in the States; and when prejudice, in its worst forms does exhibit itself—as it does occasionally—it is invariably found to be from persons of American origin, or under American influence. If the colored man does not make his way here, his failure cannot be attributed to the institutions of the country.

D.

WINDSOR, C. W.

DEAR FREEMAN:

The agony is over. You are up and out and we are all pleased to see you. Our faith in your final appearance was at one time very small indeed, but now that we must admit your presence, we naturally begin to make large or small calculations as to your success according to our faith in the class most likely to rally around you at first. Is that you invite subscriptions from all classes, how is that? Do you want the patronage of persons opposed to our interests? When I say our, I mean the Colored people. Do not you think that we had better avoid such aid? Our friends might stand aloof—and you know we want their help any how. But I merely hint and leave the matter to your better judgment. You see I have been thinking about getting subscribers, that is if you pay something, and as my pair is not the hardest I would ask to be excused from putting your claims to persons who might show me the door for my temerity. As I told you in my first the people are coming—63 last week, 23 fugitives and 40 free emigrants

Ten of the fugitives came in one company. The free people [illegible] from Pennsylvania and Indiana principally. From what I can learn they are but the advance guard of a "crowd," most of whom have pockets well lined.

The Spring is fairly open with us—boats running—the Great Western, the pride of the West is doing fine business in the silver line; if she could only lift her freight without lessening her receipts I would be as well satisfied. Ben travels as well as his neighbors, and when on the road a day or two since, making a voyage from this place to Chatham, my neighbors in the car were "three Yankees and an American citizen of the progressive school." Taking full satisfaction of his disgust at my presence, by such an impudent stare as can only be given by "citizen kings on the other side," Yankee remarked to the other, "there are a great many niggers in Canada." "There are a great many fugitive slaves here and I wish they were all here," was the response. Young America left at once with his grist for another mill.

BENJAMIN.

REMARKS.

Our friend Benjamin is more verdant than we had supposed, if he imagines for a moment that the subscription list of the Freeman should be confined to "friends." The more subscribers from enemies the better—they are only enemies because they do not understand us, and how will they unless we become acquainted? Get them to take the paper and that will be introduction enough. Benjamin talks about "help." We are not beggars; we furnish a paper such as readily commands 10s. per annum, for 7s. 6d. If he will offer the paper, the subscribers will get an equivalent for their outlay at least.

"Our friends" can hardly stand further off than they do, so we think his "calculations" on that score premature. Fortify yourself with the confidence the propriety of the enterprise warrants—and straightway solicit friend and foe to take the Freeman—the Provincial Freeman—mind. We want our subscription list to be 3000, and the cash for all, in no time. Work to that end, and as you like "pay" take 20 per cent.

"The American Jubilee."

We have received the first number of a new handsomely printed monthly, bearing the above title, edited by WM. GOODELL, the well-known author of several treatises against slavery, and for many years a prominent and distinguished advocate of the mode of interpretation which makes the Constitution of the U. S. an anti-slavery document. The Jubilee unfurls to the breeze, the following, as "THE NEW BANNER:"

No more compromises with slavery.
No more recognition of past compromises, whether imaginary or real.
No more constructions of the Constitution on the assumption of compromises.
No more delay in repealing all acts of the government that favor or recognize slavery.
No more rendition of fugitive slaves.
No more slave-hunting among freemen.
No more recognition of slave property.
No more voting for candidates acceptable to slaveholders.

No more admissions that the Constitution, or that any administration under it, can, at the same time, tolerate slavery and protect freedom.

No more attempts to maintain American liberty without suppressing American slavery.

No more admissions that there can be slavery in the nation that is not national slavery.

No more pleas that the American government and the American people are not responsible for American Slavery, and bound to suppress it.

If the American people can be educated to adopt this as a national banner, it is very clear that slavery will soon cease throughout the States, and the year of Jubilee will indeed dawn upon the three millions of bondmen. We hope the paper will have, as it deserves, a very extensive circulation. It cannot fail to do good service to the cause of the oppressed.

D.

Publications.

We have received a copy of a Sermon preached by the Rev. Justin Perkins, Missionary of the A. B. F. M., "before the members and families of the Nestorian Mission, at Ooromiah," Persia on "Our Country's Sin," from John 7: 48. The four main points of the discourse are:

1. That American Slavery is the crowning abomination of the land.
2. That American Slavery is the greatest human obstacle to the spread and triumph of Christianity, that exists at the present period.
3. That Northern influence—and primarily, the influence of Northern Christians, is the strongest and the most responsible support of American Slavery, at this time.
4. That the U. S. is in most eminent peril from the fearful system of American Slavery, of falling into deep national disgrace, &c.

The preacher sustains his position "as well as can be expected," from a divine under control of the A. B. F. M., and the modicum of anti-slavery fervor it contains, will do the good it will, and no more, in the U. S. It was evidently intended for dainty palates in America, and its long sea voyage will take little away from its harmlessness.

Ooromiah, Persia, is a convenient distance from slavery, for the A. B. F. M.; and the Rev. Justin Perkins, no doubt realized the security of his position, away among the heathen, when called to preach against "our country's sin."

The Phrenological and Scientific Journal by Fowler & Wells, has been received. This journal is certainly one of the best, if not the best, in the U. S. The present number contains articles on Architecture, Agriculture, &c.

The Little Pilgrim. Grace Greenwood & L. K. Lippincott, Editors. Three copies of this excellent little monthly are before us. Grace entertains her little readers in a manner altogether new to that class. Her beautifully written Biographies and charming poetry, L.'s elegant chat with the little people, and last, but not least, the poetry and correspondence from Tupper, Miss Spreat, the Howitt's and other great writers, make the Pilgrim just the paper intended. Hope 100,000 girls and boys may make its acquaintance, instead of of 50,000, only. Price 50c a year.

The Real Issue.

Slaveholding is either a natural right, to be protected by civil government, a right which legislation cannot take away; or else it is a criminal act, to be suppressed by civil government, and which legislation cannot legalize.

No middle ground between the two propositions can be tenable, as will appear from the following:

Saveholding either is or it is not a natural right. If it is not a natural right, then it is an unnatural wrong; a violation of natural law, a crime. But if it is a natural right, then it is not morally wrong; it is an innocent and lawful act, entitled to the same protection with all other innocent and lawful acts.

Civil government is charged with the duty of protecting what is innocent and lawful, of suppressing that which is inherently unlawful and criminal. It has no lawful authority either to punish what is innocent, or to forbear to punish what is criminal.

It cannot make innocent acts criminal and others lawful. Its province is not to make certain acts criminal and others lawful. It can only declare what is criminal and suppress what is into one and protect. And the validity of its declarations and acts depends wholly upon their truthfulness and equity. This is only a repetition of the well-known and time-honored axioms of common law, of the foundation principles of democracy, of the plain teachings of the Bible.

We are thus shut up to the necessity of either declaring that slavery cannot be legalized, or that it cannot be legally forbidden. Which ground shall we take?

The slave party are already beginning to take the latter position. The party of freedom, if they would meet the true issue, must take the former. On no other issue can the question ever be permanently settled.

We quote the above from Mr. Goodell's new paper, (The American Jubilee,) though we feel constrained to confess, that it sounds to our ears, to say the least, somewhat mystical. We can produce in Canada thirty thousand living evidences to the fact that slaveholding is considered not only a lawful, but an innocent act, in the United States. More than thirty thousand victims of the slave system are now in these provinces, for the very reason, and no other, that it is lawful to hold them as slaves in the States, and the the whole weight and power of the civil government stand ready to enforce that law. True, it may be a sinful act, but is it not, nevertheless, lawful? What the ruling authorities of any people, in their legislative capacity, enact, that, and that only seems to us, without any controversy, to be the law of the land. Those ruling authorities may in one case be an Emperor, in another a Parliament, and in a third a Senate and House of Representatives; but in each case their enactment is law. It is lawful among the Fejee Islanders, to eat human flesh, at the present day; it was according to law, a few years since, to hang a man for sheep stealing in Great Britain. Of course we consider both of these things wrong, and even contrary to natural law. So, in respect to slavery in the States. When we see it receiving the sanction of law in fifteen of the States, and see that sanction covered by the broad shield of the Federal Government, in the Fugitive law of '93, and the Fugitive law of 1850, to say nothing of other matters of doubtful interpretation, we are forced to the conviction that slavery is lawful in the States. It will certainly not be denied that slaveholding is honorable, and slaveholders esteemed, inasmuch as a large proportion of the Presidents have followed that business. We should, therefore, feel disposed to adopt the proposition, that slavery can be legalized, and can be legally forbidden; in precisely the same way as rum-selling is legalized, and has been legally forbidden; provided, however, that both are placed on the same footing as regards their relations to the Federal government—namely, that when a man leaves a State which sanctions slaveholding, he shall not be compelled, by the strong arm of the law, to return thither to slavery, any more than he now is compelled to return to intemperance in a state that sanctions rum-selling. More light!

DEAR FREEMAN:—

With great pleasure we congratulate you on your reappearance amongst us. A year ago you proposed to enter the great Moral Field, to battle for the cause of Anti-Slavery, Temperance and Kindred Subjects; and be assured that we have been somewhat acquainted with the perplexing difficulties attending so arduous, though important an undertaking; which must have required the most invincible energy and perseverance to successfully overcome. What an invaluable lesson you thus read to us whose cause you so nobly design to advocate, from which it is to be hoped we may be very greatly profited. I am really pleased—no that is not the right word—delighted with the size, appearance, price, &c., &c., of the paper The price is well adapted to the pockets and purses of the poorest of us, while in other respects it cannot fail to please the most fastidious. I am equally pleased with the motto you have adopted—Self-reliance is the True Road to Independence—it is so significant of your glorious object, and to us Afric-Americans, it is particularly suggestive, and we of Albion have taken the timely hint. As forming our part, I have long held and advocated the sentiment that our elevation depends upon our own individual and collective efforts and energies. Every man if he would be elevated, must determine to use every means that God and nature have, or may place within his reach, to elevate himself. Then, and not until then, will they succeed; it is downright folly to expect it in any other way. Help those who help themselves, is a maxim as old as the hills. In this country we can help ourselves, enjoying as we do, opportunities and advantages equal to others of similar circumstances. It is to be hoped that we will avail ourselves of these great advantages, and by our enterprise and industry, advance with this rapidly growing country, comparably with other classes. But in order to do this, we must branch off more into the common business of life. All labor is respectable, yet we must not be content to be a class of common laborers; we have a fair proportion of these already. What we want, and what we must have, is a fair proportion of other classes among us. Some fitted for School Teachers, Lawyers, Doctors, Merchants, &c. We must educate ourselves and educate our children. Let the young men (and the young women too) form Literary and Debating Societies, and those who have no talent for public speaking, let them learn and practice writing, &c. Don't let us feel, Dear Freemen, because you have come so opportunely to our help, that our work is finished, and, therefore, settle ourselves down into a state of masterly inactivity. No, no, I see so much more the necessity for increased effort and diligence on our part. You only propose doing that for us which we are not in a position to do for ourselves, and now you ask us if we will sustain you in doing that for us which we are not capable of doing for ourselves. What say you, young men and young women? What say you, fathers and mothers? shall the Freeman live? We say yes; and in proof of our sincerity, I send 10 subscribers who will send 10 more immediately. As for our part this is only a beginning.

MOSES.

MR. EDITOR:—

The past winter has been long and severe, and must have been more severely felt by many than seen by others—many whose scanty means of subsistence did not allow them to prepare for such ordinary emergencies as long and cold winters. Being rejected access to workshops and all lucrative pursuits they are mainly devoted to drudging and menial occupations. And even these, a class still more dependent are rapidly taking from them. Our men enfeebled by these pursuits and unaccustomed to hazard an undertaking, are not much inclined to use the only means of relieving themselves from their deplorable condition; I mean going into the country and thereby get rid of the excessive rents, as well as the corrupt influences that forbid the raising of a hardy persevering class of men, such a class as is required for the work at hand. However I think I am justified in saying the general opinion is that we can only alleviate our condition by emigration. Thousands are looking Canada-ward. But such has been the hostility to the very idea of removal anywhere that men are afraid to express their convictions. Leading men say nothing and do nothing. Most of them are comfortably situated with churches or schools, or professions, and care to do nothing.

They are truly "contented and happy." I hope that the Council of your Province will show itself more active and efficient than the Councils of the States have done. With us nearly a year has rolled round and nothing has been done; it cannot be because the case did not require; nor was it because the people were not interested, for I know the interest and anxiety were universal.

I don't see why the Canadians threw up the North American League, established some years ago, with the identical object of the National Council, to annex themselves to the latter. My impression always has been that the Council grew out of the idea of the League; and therefore the States should have annexed to Canada and the League have been made contributory to the government, and would ultimately been received as, and considered one of the Institutions of the Province, which it cannot now, having its origin here, where its chief movements will be watched, and if need be, crushed. But I look for but little or nothing from our present leaders, from the causes I have assigned above. They are but little inclined to disturb the present the order of things. I look for more to be done for us by you Canadian fugitives and refugees, in the event of the successful establishment of your paper, than from any other present available means. The desire for society drives us to the cities to find it, and young men and women come annually by thousands, whose ruin may be dated from the day of their arrival. Ministers will not admonish men to go to the country and take their families because they might thereby lose a member. The missionary labours of some would not appear so much needed, if crime, degradation and misery were not to be seen at every corner, and sought for in cellars, alleys and garrets. Our leading men are afraid to admonish the people to go to the country for fear they say, it would be an evidence of our dissatisfaction and willingness to move, that the Colonizationist would take advantage of and urge us to go to Africa. Besides these there is the bleaching party, quite a respectable class too, who think that we are quite well enough off, and that the result of our proximity to the whites will soon obliterate all lines of distinction For this purpose they are willing to sacrifice their own manhood and yield up their claims on the basis of these, and sacrifice their daughters, if not voluntarily, by placing them in a position where their chastity is neither appreciated by others nor enabled to protect it themselves. But we must have a new set of men in the field with new measures.

For the Provincial Freeman.

MR. EDITOR:

I have seen and read several numbers of your very valuable paper, and I must confess that I am very glad to know that you have embarked in such a noble, and such a praiseworthy enterprise.

I hope you will pardon this seeming boldness in me in sending you this communication; although I have not seen any intimation in your columns to justify this step on my part, yet I have ventured to address you, with the view of ascertaining whether you will receive communications coming from one of my sex. Belonging as I do, to that class styled the "weaker sex," you will not be surprised when I tell you that I have taken up my pen with a trembling hand and a fearful heart, not knowing whether my communication will be received in a favorable or an unfavorable light. As this is my first communication for the press, you may very readily imagine that I feel no small degree of anxiety as respects its fate; however, from your well known intelligence, and your long tried generosity, together with your principles of staunch integrity, I feel satisfied to commit my cause to your hands.

There is a beginning point with us all, and I am induced to believe from the very liberal tone of the leading editorials of your excellent paper that you will not regard me in the light of an aspirant, or as one seeking to make innovations, upon the long and time honored customs of society. Indeed, were I ever so well qualified for such an important task, it would seem like presumption in me to make such an attempt; I say presumption, because I know of no better term to use in this connection; for what would be thought of an humble individual like me, and belonging to the opposite sex, and who has been deprived of the advantages of even a common school education, to attempt to do that which some of the most giant intellects of the present century have failed to accomplish? Certainly, my position would not be a very enviable one; so far then, from cherishing a disposition or a desire to operate in a sphere for which I have neither the talent nor the ability, I am content to operate in the sphere to which my humble circumstances have assigned me, trusting that by so doing I may be successful in accomplishing a greater amount of good.

I have just seen the 4th number of the Freeman, which is equal if not a little ahead of its predecessors. I read with pleasure and delight, the communication from your New York and Brooklyn correspondent. He says some things of which I highly approve. After speaking of the performance of certain important duties, immediately connected with our elevation, he says, "Our papers must be surrounded by the ability of a number of efficient men and women too, each devoted to some specific field of investigation." Now sir, this is precisely my impression; for in this great work we have our share of it to perform. I hope Mr. Editor, that you will not for a moment suppose that I regard myself as one of those persons of ability, of whom your correspondent speaks; indeed, I am sure you will not, when you observe that in the foregoing part of this communication I stated what my acquirements are.

Hitherto, we have met with stern opposition from almost every quarter—the class of teachers under whom it has been our misfortune to be placed have been just a little better than none at all—but thank heaven a brighter and better day is beginning to dawn—the clouds of ignorance, and mists of error, are disappering before the bright and effulgent light of truth and reason. As a class, we make no unreasonable demands of those who style themselves our superiors; all we ask is to receive that encouragement to which our merit entitles us.

But I fear I am making this communication too lengthy, it being as I said before my first for the press, I must therefore conclude with the wish that your paper may succeed beyond your most sanguine expectations.

Yours, &c.,

HENRIETTA W——S.

The Provincial Council.

The following letter previously sent to th Voice of the Fugitive has been forwarded to us by the author for publication.

LONDON, 18th April, 1854

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman.

DEAR SIR:—

Will you give these few remarks a place in your paper. I have reviewed with care and attention the constitution of the Provincial Council, and have came to a firm conclusion that under the disadvantages which it now labors, it cannot do any good among the colored people in Canada. The people do not acknowledge the Council, and it is a matter of course, if they do not acknowledge it they will not acknowledge its doings; and being convinced that I cannot do any good in that newly organized body, I have came to the conclusion to withdraw my name from the same.

I am, dear sir,

Yours respectfully,

A. B. JONES.

Summary of News.

As stated in our last, war has been formally declared by the Allied Powers, against Russia The London Times of the 27th ult., gives an interesting account of the ceremonial. The avenues of Westminster Hall, and of the Peers' entrance to the House of Lords, were occupied by a large assemblage, anxious to see her Majesty's Ministers come down to Parliament with the declaration of war against Russia. The House was filled by an unusually large attendance. The space below the bar being crowded with members of the House of Commons and others having the privilege of admittance.

The Earl of Aberdeen, (whose rising was followed by a loud cry of "Order, order,") advanced to the table and said, a message from the Queen my lords.

The noble Earl having handed her Majesty's Message to the Clerk's assistant, Mr. Lefevre, it was by him taken to the Lord Chancellor.

The Lord Chancellor, rising, read the message, amid breathless silence of the House as follows

Vivat Regina'—

Her Majesty thinks it proper to acquaint the House of Lords that the negotiations in which her Majesty, in concert with her allies, has for some time past been engaged with his Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, have terminated, and that her Majesty feels bound to afford active assistance to her ally, the Sultan, against unprovoked aggression.

Her Majesty has given direction for laying before the House of Lords copies of such papers, in addition to those already communicated to Parliament, as will afford the fullest information with regard to the subject of their negotiations. It is a consolation to her Majesty to reflect that endeavors have not been wanting on her part to preserve to her subjects the blessings of peace.

Her Majesty's just expectations have been disappointed, and her Majesty relies with confidence on the zeal and devotion of the House of Lords, and on the exertions of her brave and loyal subjects to support her in her determination to employ the power and resources of the nation for protecting the dominions of the Sultan against the encroachments of Russia.

The Earl of Clarendon then moved that her Majesty's most gracious message be taken into consideration, on Friday next. The Earl of Derby and Earl Grey, followed; and the discussion upon the great event of the evening closed.

In the House of Commons, shortly before five o'clock, there was an unusually large attendance of members, engaged in loud and animated discussion. As Lord John Russell entered, and took his seat on the ministerial bench, the murmur of voices was hushed in a moment.

Lord J. Russell, having been called upon by the Speaker, announced that he had to communicate to the House a message from the crown.

This statement was followed by a general cry of "hats off," and the demand was complied with by the great majority of hon. members. Mr. Hume, and several gentlemen sitting near him, did not uncover, and the call of "hats off" was continued for some moments without producing the desired effect upon those members, who, however, removed their hats when the Speaker commenced reading the Royal message.

The Speaker requested Lord J. Russel, in his usual form, to bring up the message, and accordingly the noble lord placed the document in the hands of the right hon. gentleman, who proceeded to read to the House amidst the most profound silence. The Royal message was then read, after which.

Lord J. Russell rose and said—I beg to move sir, that her Majesty's most gracious message be taken into consideration on Friday next.

The motion was agreed to.

DECLARATION.

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, having been compelled to take up arms in support of an ally, is desirous of rendering the war as little onerous as possible to the Powers with whom she remains at peace.

To preserve the commerce of neutrals from all unnecessary obstruction, her Majesty is willing, for the present, to waive a part of the belligerent rights appertaining to her by the law of nations.

It is impossible for her Majesty to forego the exercises of her right of seizing articles contraband of war, and of preventing neutrals from bearing the enemy's despatches; and she must maintain the right of a belligerent to, prevent neutrals from breaking any effective blockade which may be established with an adequate force against the enemy's forts, harbours, or coasts.

But her Majesty will waive the right of seizing enemy's property laden on board a neutral vessel, unless it be contraband of war.

It is not her Majesty's intention to claim the confiscation of neutral property, not being contraband of war, found on enemy's ships; and her Majesty further declares, that being anxious to lessen as much as possible the evils of war, and to restrict its operations to the regularly organized forces of the country, it is not her present intention to issue letters of marque for the commissioning of privateers.

On the 5th March, a French frigate, brig and steamer anchored off the harbor of Port au Prince, under the command of Admiral Duquesne, who at 10 o'clock that night demanded an audience with the Emperor, which was, of course refused, when a most threatening letter was delivered, threatening that if certain demands there was not accorded within 48 hours, that the French would resort to the most severe measures.

On the morning of the 7th, at 6 o'clock, all the foreign consuls were requested to meet immediately at the house of the Minister of War, who told them what had taken place, and that is, the French Admiral resorted to the measures that his letter said he would, the Haytien Government could not be responsible for any damages the citizens of their respective countries might sustain, but that the Government would never submit to the exorbitant demands of the French.

On the night of the 9th, at 9 o'clock, the Emperor gave his final answer, which was, that rather than submit to the French Admiral's demands, the Haytien government should cease to exist. Which declaration seemed to have a salutary effect for, at 10 o'clock the next morning the French frigate hoisted the Haytien flag and saluted it, which was answered from the forts on shore

During this critical time his Majesty acted with great judgment, prudence, and determination. The forts and fleet were got immediately in good condition as to guns, ammunition and men, and were severally visited by the Emperor in person.

The excitement on shore was very great, among the foreigners as well as the natives.

The Trouble in Hayti.

THE FRENCH VERSION OF THE AFFAIR

[Translated from the Courier des Etats Unis]

Kingston, March 28, 1854.

We learn from Hayti, that it required but little to produce war between France and this great empire. The Emperor Nicholas would have rejoiced in the acquisition of an ally such as his cousin, the Emperor Soulouque, and would, no doubt, have permitted his subjects to wear the decoration of St. Faustin.

The following are the facts

On the 6th of March, Rear Admiral Duquesne, Commander-in-Chief of the Atlantic station, left Port au Prince in the frigate L'Auguste, accompanied by the brig Marne and the steamer L'Alecton. Immediately on the arrival of the Admiral a difference arose, relative to the national debt. But the difficulties, which had at first assumed a warlike character, were soon surmounted, and a session of 3 days was held down by the house of Lloyd & Co., which established the most perfect harmony between the representatives of France and the Haytien government

On the 11th, Admiral Duquesne and M. Reybaud, Consul-General of France, were received in private audience by the Emperor and Empress M. Duquesne, after having been announced and presented by the Duc de Tiburon, Minister of Foreign Affairs, pronounced the following address —

SIR.—The clouds that had arisen between the government of your Majesty and that of the Emperor of the French are happily dissipated. Your Majesty can count on the sincere desire of my sovereign to see consolidated the good understanding that subsist between the two governments.

To which his Majesty replied —

I thank the General and Duke Gr. to witness how much I desire such friendship reign between us.

In the evening the band of the Iphigenie was sent to the Imperial Palace, and executed several pieces of music in presence of their Majesties the princesses, the ladies of the court and the grand dignitaries. On the following day the Emperor inspected the troops of the guard, and assisted immediately after at a grand mass, at the end of which the Abbe Mousa, cure of Port-au-Prince, sang a Te Deum, and gave the benediction.

WASHINGTON, April 6th, 1851

Mr. Douglass.—Among the most pleasant and prompt speakers in the House of Representatives is Mr. Gratz Brown, of Philadelphia. As a scholar and as a classical and beautiful writer, he probably has no superior in that body.

Mr. Chandler and Gerrit Smith have become mutually interested in each other, and are often seen conversing together. In the speech which Mr. Chandler made yesterday on the Nebraska Bill, are the following lines: I send them to you, that you may know Mr. Chandler's appreciation of Mr. Smith.

"A brief experience in this house has taught me that a man who is a professed Abolitionist may, nevertheless, be a hospitable gentleman, a ripe scholar, and a powerful orator, capable of masterly efforts, even on subjects not connected with his speciality.—Frederick Douglass's Paper.

Cronstadt.

The Tribune, in an article on the European war, thus describes Cronstadt, which is probably to be the grand point of attack by the British fleet in the Baltic —

"Cronstadt has the form of an irregular triangle. It is strongly fortified. It has three harbors lying on the South side of the town. The outer or military harbor, is entirely fortified by a mole, a rectangle stretching out into the sea and capable of holding, besides smaller vessels, thirty five ships of the line. It is so shallow at low water that many of the ships are obliged to anchor in the middle harbor, which is properly intended for the fitting out and of repairing vessels. It has a powder magazine, a manufactury of pitch, tar and so forth. The third west or innermost harbor admits only merchantmen, for which there is besides an excellent road-stead immediately outside the port, defended also by the citadel; constructed on a rock in the middle of the sea of Cronstadt. The permanent population is not considerable, during the summer it amounts, government functionaries, strangers and sailors to 10 000. After the Russians, the English are the most numerous. It is very lively in the warm seasons, but the reverse in cold. Peter the Great founded it in 1710. Such is the place the English fleet must operate against, either by cutting off its trade, or measure balls, shells, bombs and infernal ingenuity generally with it. If the war continue in good earnest it may take precedence of the Danube even for the stirring horrors of which it will be the theatre."

THE CAUSE OF TEMPERANCE IN ENGLAND.—Mr. J. B. Gough, has been spending the past month in the enlightened city of Edinburgh, where he has been received by all classes with unbounded enthusiasm. He has addressed 13 meetings in the city, many of which have been attended by audiences of 2,000 persons. As the result of his labors the Edinburgh Total Abstinence Society has added 1,150 members to its roll during the month; the University Abstinence Society about 60, and the Free Church Abstinence Society has also made large additions to its roll

Perhaps the most interesting meeting was the one held at the requisition of 300 students attending the University of Edinburgh. The place of meeting was the Brighton Street Church, the chairman was the far-famed Dr. Guthrie, the minister of St. John's Free Church, and the audience numbered, at the lowest calculation 2 000 nearly all young men, and fully one-half of them students of the University and New College The Rev. Dr. Cunningham, Principal of the New College, opened the meeting with prayer. Dr. Guthrie, in a few felicitous remarks introducing the lecturer, and then followed the oration of Mr. Gough. It is described by those who heard it as characterized by all that fervid eloquence and marvellous power of illustration, that enlarged human sympathy, and deep-toned piety, which have gained for him such a wide-spread and honorable reputation. A goodly number of these promising young men pressed forward at the close of the eloquent address to enroll their names on the side of total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors.

A CASE FOR SYMPATHY.

We noticed the fact on Saturday, [says the Old Countryman,] that the frequent instances of property moving north of Mason's and Dixon's line, are leading to sad complaints in the south. Southern papers urge that the south must take some action, as forbearance has ceased to be a virtue. The following paragraph affords "a new case for sympathy;" and the commentary on it, from the pen of the Rev. H. W. Beecher, will be read with interest:

ANOTHER FUGITIVE.—A negro man, belonging to Mr. Richard Doyle, made his escape to the north a few days ago. He had been a corn-measurer for some time. We are called upon to announce almost daily the loss of this species of property.—Norfolk Beacon, 31st ult.

COMMENTARY.

1. This is a case which shows the want of religious instruction among slaves. Have they read their Bibles? A copy of Dr. Spring's "First Things" might be abridged, for circulation South—a plantation edition. The Tract Society, and the Sunday School Union, issue plantation editions of other works—why not this? At any rate, as soon as the Nebraska matter has been settled by that sober second thought of the North which the Journal of Commerce was confident would soon reverse the apparent indignation of the North, ought not the Southern Aid Society to send a missionary to Norfolk and neighbourhood?

2. Southern families, in their summer residence at the North, delectate us with assurances of the fondness of their slaves. Why, they would scorn liberty if offered to them! The abstraction is only fit for white folks. Are the slaves about Norfolk of a different breed?

3. As a remedy for this peripatetic tendency of their contented slaves, we would suggest to our noble brothers of the South, disunion. That would cure everything. They could then keep their slaves so much better, or get them so much easier.—Independent.

New and Destructive Engines of War.

The Paris correspondent of the Cincinnat Gazette gives the following account of new engines of destruction, which will be brought into requisition by the present European war. He says—

The new invention for the more rapid destruction of human beings, which the war is bringing to light, especially in England, will surpass all expectation. The arsenals of England have for a long time been closed to visisors, even to members of Parliament, while these new and terrible machines were being constructed and experimented upon, and no knowledge of their existence even was permitted until now called forth by actual service. Many years ago the English government had a proposition before them to adopt Wagner's floating gun, and hesitated. A member of Parliament exclaimed: 'He demands but £300 000, and yet you hesitate! Hasten to buy this machine, declare war against France, and you will destroy her marine in a few days' time!' No attention was paid to this apostrophe at the time in France, and apparently none in England. But this terrible invention, of which the public has ceased to talk, and which was even ridiculed at the time, has been maturing in concealment in the arsenals of Woolwich, and is now ready to go out on its work of destruction.

The Count Lavalette, captain of military marine in France, who knows the construction of this gun, it is said, made endeavours to have it adopted by the minister of marine under Louis Philippe. It is simply a long Congreve gun which glides along on the water in a straight line till it strikes the vessel at which it is directed, when it thrusts into its sides its iron head, containing two pounds of fulminating powder of mercury. When the fire attains this reservoir, it explodes, blowing a hole in the vessel ten or twelve feet in diameter, which it is impossible for them to close up as they do the round holes made by cannon-balls.

In admitting that the Russian fleets shall retire under the inapproachable fortresses of Cronstadt and Sebastopool, they cannot be in safety from this terrible Congreve gun, which carries to almost any distance within reach of the aim, and far beyond the reach of any other gun. It cannot be prevented from passing through the most contracted straits where ships pass.

The submarine boats are so perfected at this moment, that they can reach and attach a burner to an enemy's ship, without running the least danger. Experiments are also being made with an asphyxiating ball, which does not kill, but which paralyzes an entire crew for several hours, or until they are made prisoners. They are embarking also a large number of burning explosive balls, which explode invariably when they strike, even in the body of a horse, for they inflame at the moment of explosion, when they may apply fire to the ammunition chests and other inflammable material, as easily and as surely as if they were to fall in a stubble-field.

They are furnishing also two small steamboats of a singular appearance, which will carry only two enormous Paixhan guns placed on the forepart of the vessel. The walls of these little vessels have a thickness of six feet made of oak, standing upright, and this covered with a mattress of cotton substance, a foot and a half thick, is impenetrable to a bullet, and this again covered with a sheeting of iron and lead. Its prow has the angular form of a cuirass, intended to turn bullets; the roof or deck is covered in the same way, so as to allow the bombs to glide into the sea, without doing damage.

The fire-ship, very heavy, and a bad sailer, will be towed and let loose at the proper moment, to approach near the enemy's vessels, either when at anchor or lying to, which it will attack fore and aft with bombs thrown between wind and water, and sprinkling the ship with a shower of Grecian fire. One of these burners, taking by surprise, a fleet of vessels in a calm, could with ease destroy the whole fleet, and yet it only requires the labor of ten determined men to operate it.

The peace society have agitated the question in England of how far a nation is justified in employing other and more destructive methods in war than those employed by the enemy. Admiral Napier has replied to these propositions with irony: "If you fear to hurt the enemy, put into your guns balls of cotton, and into your cannon cakes of rice?"

The English fleet is largely provided with balloons, intended to carry inflammable materials to scatter over towns, villages, and fleets, when the wind favors such operations.

Another invention, still more terrible than all the rest, but of which the construction has not yet been made known, except to a very small number of persons, is about to be sent out to destroy the Russians. All these inventions are highly curious and interesting in the history of war, but rather affecting for humanity.

A VICTIM OF THE "SCALPERS."—A poor, half clad, Irish girl, stood shivering at the Depot last evening, awaitnig the cars for Charlotte to take her to the Toronto steamer. So freezing was the blast, that the tears almost congealed upon her cheeks as she briefly recited the tale of her suffering since she left her home in the Green Isle.—Eleven weeks she occupied the steerage of a ship in crossing the ocean; but a stormy passage against wind and wave was nothing to the hardships reserved for her on landing in the commercial metropolis of America. Alone, friendless and unprotected, she fell into the clutches of those merciless wretches, the "scalpers," who dignify themselves with the appellation of "passenger agents." They robbed her of what little means she had, and gave her passage tickets to Rochester, and left her to get food and lodging on her way here as best she might. She had a sister residing at Toronto, to meet whom she has braved all danger so far, and is doubtless ere this, at her destination, as she left in the steamer last night. This is only one, and one of the most aggravated, of the ten thousand instances that occur yearly, in which the unfortunate emigrant is plundered by the hounds that scent them on the ocean, and strike their trail as soon as they set foot upon our shores. Thus far legislative action has done little towards protecting the emigrant against fraud, and nothing short of a total abolition of the whole passenger agency business will ever effect the desired object. The only security to the traveler is to pay on board the conveyance he takes, and this will be found the cheapest in the end.—Rock. Un.

NEW DISCOVERY OF ARTIFICIAL LIGHT.—Another remarkable discovery now occupies the attention of the scientific world in Paris.—The gentleman who made this discovery, says the Paris correspondent of the London Globe, exhibited his light two evenings to a private party:—

Into a glass which had been prepared to resist the action of heat he poured water to the extent of about two-thirds of the capacity of the vessel. He then added a small quantity of powder, and stirred up the mixture. He then added a few drops of liquid, and in a few seconds 'combustion took place. The flame, which was perfectly white, and 5 or 6 inches in height, illuminated the room, and continued so for four hours. The author of this discovery stated that the cost of the mixture was less than one sou, but that he considered the thing as yet in its infancy, and that, with a little time every objection that can be made to this new light for practical use would be removed.

Fugitive Slaves in Canada

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon race, or any other of the great human family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. WARD, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony.—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B GRIBBLE, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. THOMAS JAMES, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number.

TEMPERANCE AND FREEDOM.

A SONG FOR THE TIMES.

BY ISAAC H. JULIAN.

Up! up with our banner, all spotless and white
Its folds whisper peace and its waves rippling light!
And we thrill to its motto, cast free on the wind
"No bonds for the body—no chains for the mind!"

Away! your vile jargon of "master" and "slave,"
In the land of the free and the home of the brave!"
To give all the liberty Heaven designed—
No bonds for the body—no chains for the mind

Away! your foul traffic in man's blood and bones!
Your commerce in hopeless sorrow and groans—
"The sum of all villainies" known to mankind!—
"No bonds for the body—no chains for the mind!

Great God! shall this curse all our country invest?
Must the sun of Man's Hope darken thus in the West?
"NO!" thunder the voices of freemen combined—
"No bonds for the body—no chains for the mind!"

And away with the rumseller's mansion of sin,
Where hell's fiery poisons are circling within!
Away! all the miseries and crimes there confined—
No bands for the body—no chains for the mind!

Away! every license which causes this woe!
Away! with the fountain from whence it doth flow!
Down with them! spare not—casting Satan behind!
No bonds for the body—no chains for the mind!

Then up with our banner, all spotless and white!
Its folds whisper peace, and its waves ripple light!
And we thrill to its motto, cast free on the wind—
"No bonds for the body—no chains for the mind!"

The late Mr. Justice Talfourd.

BY CHARLES DICKENS.

The readers of these pages will have known many days before the present number can come into their hands, that on Monday the thirteenth of March, this upright judge and good man died suddenly at Stafford in the discharge of his duties. Mercifully spared protracted pain and mental decay he passed away in a moment, with words of Christian eloquence, of brotherly tenderness and kindness toward all men, yet unfinished on his lips.

As he died, he had always lived. So amiable a man, so gentle, so sweet-tempered, of such a noble simplicity, so perfectly unspoiled by his labours and their rewards, is very rare indeed upon this earth. These lines are traced by the faltering hand of a friend; but none can so fully know how true they are, as those who knew him under all circumstances, and found him ever the same.

In his public aspects; in his poems, in his speeches, on the bench, at the bar, in Parliament; he was widely appreciated, honoured, and beloved. Inseparable as his great and varied abilities were from himself in life, it is yet to himself and not to them, that affection in its first grief naturally turns. They remain, but he is lost.

The chief delight of his life was to give delight to others. His nature was so exquisitely kind, that to be kind was its highest happiness. Those who had the privilege of seeing him in his own home when his public successes were greatest—so modest, so contented with little things, so interested in humble persons and humble efforts, so surrounded by children and young people, so adored in remembrance of a domestic generosity and greatness of heart too scarce to be swelled here, can never forget the pleasure of that sight.

If ever there were a house, in England, justly celebrated for the reverse of the picture, where every art was honored for its own sake, and where every visitor was received for his own claims and merits, that house was his. It was in this respect a great example, as sorely needed as it will be sorely missed. Rendering all legitimate deference to rank and riches, there never was a man more composedly, unaffectedly, quietly, immovable by such considerations than the subject of this sorrowing remembrance. On the other hand, nothing would have astonished him so much as the suggestion that he was any body's patron or protector. His dignity was ever of that highest and purest sort which has no occasion to proclaim itself, and which is not in the least afraid of losing itself.

In the first joy of his appointment to the judicial bench, he made a summer visit to the sea-shore "to share his exultation in the gratification of his long-cherished ambition, with the friend"—now among the many friends who mourn his death and lovingly recall his virtues. Lingering in the bright moonlight at the close of a happy day, he spoke of his new functions, of his sense of the great responsibility he undertook, and of his placid belief that the habits of his professional life rendered him equal to their efficient discharge; but, above all, he spoke, with an earnestness never more to be separated in his friend's mind from the murmur of the sea upon a moonlight night, of his reliance on the strength of his desire to do right before God and man. He spoke with his own singleness of heart, and his solitary hearer knew how deep and true his purpose was. They passed, before parting for the night, into a playful dispute at what age he should retire, and what he would do at three score years and ten. And ah! within five short years, it is all ended like a dream! But, by the strength of his desire to do right, he was animated to the last moment of his existence. Who, knowing England at this time, would wish to utter with his last breath a more righteous warning than that its curse is ignorance, or a miscalled education which is as bad or worse, and a want of the exchange of innumerable graces and sympathies among the various orders of society, each hardened unto each and holding itself aloof? Well will it be for us and for our children, if those dying words be never henceforth forgotten on the Judgment Seat.

An example in his social intercourse to those who are born to station, an example equally to those who win it for themselves; teaching the one class to abate its stupid pride: the other to stand upon its eminence, not forgetting the road by which it got there, and fawning upon no one; the conscientious judge, the charming writer, and accomplished speaker, the gentle-hearted, guileless affectionate man, has entered on a brighter world. Very, very many have lost a friend; nothing in Creation has lost an enemy.

The hand that lays this poor flower on his grave, was a mere boy when he first espoused it—newly come from the work in which he had been [illegible] enough, with much to correct and learn. Each of its successive tasks through many interesting years has been cheered by his warmest interest, and the friendship then begun has ripened to maturity, in the passage of time; but there was no more self-assertion or condescension in his winning goodness at first, than at last. The success of other men made as little change in him as his own.

BOOKS AS A MEDICINE.

I say, then, that books, taken indiscriminately, are no cure to the diseases and afflictions of the mind. There is a world of science necessary in the taking them. I have known some people in great sorrow fly to a novel, or the last light book in fashion. One might as well take a rose-draught for the plague! Light reading does not do when the heart is really heavy. I am told that Goethe, when he lost his son, took to study a science that was new to him. Ah! Goethe was a physician who knew what he was about. In a great grief like that, you cannot tickle and divert the mind; you must wrench it away, absorb, bury it in an abyss hurry it into a labyrinth. Therefore, for the irremediable sorrows of middle life and old age, I recommend a strict chronic course of science and hard reasoning—counter-irritation. Bring the brain to act upon the heart! If science is too much again the grain—for we have not all got mathematical heads—something in the reach of the humblest understanding, but sufficiently searching to the highest, a new language—Greek, Arabic, Scandinavian, Chinese or Welsh! For the loss of fortune, the dose should be applied less directly to the understanding. I would administer something elegant and cordial. For as the heart is crushed and lacerated by a loss in the affections, so it is rather the head that aches and suffers by the loss of money. There we find the higher class of poets a very valuable remedy. For observe, that poets of the grander and more comprehensive kind of genius have in them two separate men, quite distinct from each other—the imaginative man, and the practical, circumstantial man; and it is the happy mixture of these that suits diseases of the mind half imaginative and half practical. There is Shakspeare, who, above all poets, is the mysterious dual of hard sense and empyreal fancy; and a great many more, whom I need not mention; but who, if you take to them gently and quietly, will not like your mere philosopher, your unreasonable stoic, tell you that you have lost nothing; but who will insensibly steal you out of this world where you are just so welcome, though you carry no more earth with you than covers the sole of your shoe. Then for hypochondria and satiety, what is better than a brisk, alternative course of travels, especially early, out-of-the-way, not overdone journeys! How they take you out of the hum-drum, yawning state that you are in. And for that vice of the mind which I call sectarianism—not in the religious sense of the word, but little, narrow prejudice—that make your neighbor, because he has his eggs roasted when you have yours boiled; and gossiping and prying into people's affairs, and backbiting, and thinking that heaven and earth are coming together, if some broom touch a cobweb that you have let grow over the window-sill of your brains—what like a large and generous mildly aperient course of history! How it clears away all the fumes of the head! better than the hellebore with which the old leeches of the middle ages purged [illegible] bellum.

But, when some one sorrow that is not reparable, gets hold of your mind like a monomania; when you think, because Heaven has denied you this or that, on which you had set your heart, that all your life must be a blank—oh! then diet yourself well on biography, the biography of good and great men. See how little a space your sorrow really makes in life. See some page, perhaps, given to some grief similar to your own; and how triumphantly the life sails on beyond it. You thought the wing was broken! Tut, tut, it was only a bruised feather! See what life leaves behind it, when all is done! a summary of positive facts out of the region of sorrow and satisfaction, making themselves worthy of the world. Yes, long ago is the medicine here!—Bulwer.

ADAMS' EXPRESS.—On a certain day in the year 1839, a man with a carpet bag might have been seen (as James would relate the story) embarking on board the Norwich steamboat for Boston. The man was a Boston Yankee, Alvin Adams by name; the carpet bag contained a few parcels which individuals had entrusted him, to be delivered promptly in the city of his destination; his capital was in his business; his reputation was his personal aquaintance; he was nothing in short but a man with a carpet bag or is what is now called Express Messenger on the smallest scale. Faithfulness, integrity, promptness, and enterprise, brought wonderful things out of that carpet bag; a richer treasury than Fortunatus' purse, and a more magical agency than Aladdin's lamp. The possessor is now, after the lapse of fifteen years, the head of a house which carries to and fro in its "carpet bags," for the accommodation of the public, an amount of treasure, in the shape of merchandize, gold and silver, notes and valuables, not less than one million of dollars every day, or $365,000,000 per annum. Their offices are in every city or commercial depot from New York to San Francisco and Australia—not to mention the Japan office, for which Commodore Perry has gone to pave the way. Their agents and assistants number about three hundred. Their capital is, of course immense, and the circumstances of the Gold market of California, their connection with it as forwaders, and the extraordinary share of public confidence earned by their honorable career, have lately constrained them to act in San Francisco as Bankers, on a large scale, where they have just sustained a "run" (occasioned by an accidental rumor) to the amount of $500,000, in a manner which has added largely to the confidence and popularity which they before enjoyed. Such is one of the features of the wonderful age in which we live.—New York Courier and Enquirer.

A NEW PROJECTILE.—In Constantinople a manufactory has been established for those fatal explosive balls of which so large a quantity has been of late imported into the East. They were discovered by an apothecary and are said to be filled with some species of gas, or chloroform, and explode on falling upon or striking against any object. An experiment is said to have been made at Cherbourg with an old vessel, in the hold of which some thirty dogs were shut up, all of which were found dead within a few minutes after the ball had entered.

Jews in New York.

The Jews are a peculiar people, though their exercises at the 'inauguration dinner,' last evening, were not so peculiar but that Christians present thought it a very excellent and Christian like entertainment. There are said to be some 17,000 of the Jewish faith in the United States. Their churches number 31, and their church accomodations perhaps may be justly taken as an index to their strength. Probably 6000 Jews are to be found in the City of New York. Their children attend the same schools with our children, and until we reach their religious peculiarities, there is little to distinguish them from others of our citizens. And yet they have some peculiarities. We seldom find one of them in prison or penitentiaries. When one is sent to prison, it is there for some petty offence, the charges being seldom of a more serious nature, pretences or of receiving stolen goods. Some years ago, we remember one was sent to the State for a year, but yet it is true, that, to a remarkable extent, Israelites are seldom offenders against society. They are not unfrequently found in our hospitals, and never in our poorhouses. At Ward's Island where, so many hundreds of the poor destitute across from the old world are continually gathering, we find all classes of Christians—Quakers perhaps, excepted—and all shades of infidels represented, but never a Jew. When the Jewish emigrant arrives, he does not commit himself, though poverty has chased him from his old home, and met him on our wharf, to the Commissioners of Emigration for the receipt of the assistance to which his commutation fee entitles him, but he queries first, 'where is there a Jew.' His brother found, leads him to the man who by appointment of the synagogue or otherwise, assumes the special task of caring for such. And for the stranger is solicited from his own people [illegible] immediate wants are relieved, that is put in the way of obtaining a livelihood for himself. From the extraordinary amount of Jewish emigration to and through this city, we judge that there must be large disbursements made by some of them in charity.

Three hundred tons of coal, we are told, have been given to the poor by one society of Israelites in New York during the past winter. This early and unfailing attention, of those who [illegible] to the wants of the poor, must go [illegible] to prevent the commission of crime. [illegible] stalks in nowhere so surely, as when hunger and nakedness open the door, and want perpetually beckons on.

Here is a fact from which Christians may profitably accept a hint. Meet poverty while it is innocent, relieve it, and you remove the temptations to vice; for hunger has a sharp tooth, and cannot but soon gnaw through the restraints of virtue, when but which must remove it is only on the other side. Christians, too, might learn from the Israelites some noble lessons as to the policy of supplying the wants of those who hold the same [illegible]

[illegible] objected to in the Jewish character seems to have been imparted to it by the hard lot in which its lines have [illegible] Persecuted for centuries, driven [illegible] and points of their character, [illegible] brought out. We have often thought that their faith must be stronger than that of most men. Their strict observance of the Jewish Sabbath, none the legal strict where stringent legal enactments, and their duties as good citizens, restrain them from business avocations upon the Christian Sabbath, has peculiarly impressed us. [illegible] too, that with five only of the [illegible] they should prove successful business men.—Inquirer.

The room is a Babel of tongues, and quite democratic in the constitution of its inmates; Turkish Colonels and Turkish privates, Europeans craving after the fleshpots of Europe talking all known tongues. The cafe seems to be doing a thriving business; beakers of mahogany-colored spirits and water emitted a fine perfume, which gives the chief odor distinguishable within; but added to that of blanket-coats of the soldiers thawing, and a coat or two made of fresh dressed sheepskin undergoing the same process, tobacco smoke, &c., rendered the atmosphere more adulterated than pleasant.

About the town several signboards are to be seen painted in Greek characters tombstones surmounted by crosses, while the houses have porches. Altogether the impression of being in Europe can be imagined, if not realized.

MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE AND RETURN.—An incident is related to us having occurred in this city some weeks ago, portions of which are still enveloped in inexplicable mystery.

Last spring the wife of a wealthy and respectable farmer in the vicinity of Bloomington, Ill., accompanied by her daughter—a young lady of seventeen or eighteen years old—made a pleasure tour to the East. After visiting the principal places, and stopping now and then with their friends, they arrived here on their return home on the 17th of June last. The wife failed to meet her husband here, as had been arranged, and hoping to hear from him sent her daughter to the post office to enquire for letters. Here begin the knotty points of the case. The daughter did not return to the boat. The mother, alarmed for her safety, left the boat, called on her friends here, and remained some time making inquiries for the missing child. All her efforts having failed, she went on to Meredosia and the father who had in the meanwhile been written to, arrived in St. Louis, to institute a more thorough search for the daughter. He advised with Marshal Molaire, offered a reward of $500 for her return, and availed himself of every other imaginable means for her recovery, but to no purpose. MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE AND RETURN.—An incident is related to us having occurred in this city some weeks ago, portions of which are still enveloped in inexplicable mystery.

Last spring the wife of a wealthy and respectable farmer in the vicinity of Bloomington, Ill., accompanied by her daughter—a young lady of seventeen or eighteen years old—made a pleasure tour to the East. After visiting the principal places, and stopping now and then with their friends, they arrived here on their return home on the 17th of June last. The wife failed to meet her husband here, as had been arranged, and hoping to hear from him sent her daughter to the post office to enquire for letters. Here begin the knotty points of the case. The daughter did not return to the boat. The mother, alarmed for her safety, left the boat, called on her friends here, and remained some time making inquiries for the missing child. All her efforts having failed, she went on to Meredosia and the father who had in the meanwhile been written to, arrived in St. Louis, to institute a more thorough search for the daughter. Exploration of the Amazon and Designs of the Slave Power.

In a work on the "Exploration of the Valley of the Amazon," published by order of the U. S. Congress, Lieut. Herndon says, when speaking of the great "divide" of the Cordillera, which separates the Pacific from the Atlantic Ocean:

"Though the waters where I stood were bound on their way to meet the streams of our Northern Hemisphere, and to bring, for all the practical purposes of commerce and navigation, the mouth of the Amazon and the mouth of the Mississippi into one, and place it before our doors, yet from the head of navigation on one stream to the head of navigation on the other, the distance to be sailed could not be less than ten thousand miles. Vast, many, and great, doubtless, are the varieties of climates, soils, and productions within such a range. The importance to the world of settlement, cultivation and commerce in the Valley of the Amazon, cannot be over-estimated. With the climates of India, and of all the habitable portions of the earth piled one above the other in quick succession, tillage and good husbandry here would transfer the productions of the east to this magnificent river basin, and place them within a few days' easy sail of Europe and the United States.

Only a few miles back we had entered the mining district of Peru. A large portion of the silver which constitutes the circulation of the world was dug from the range of mountains upon which we are standing; and most of it came from that slope of them which is drained into the Amazon. Is it possible for commerce and navigation up and down this magnificent water-course and its beautiful tributaries to turn the flow of this silver stream from its western course to the Pacific, and enable it with steamers down the Amazon to be United States, there to balance the stream of gold which we are likely to be flooded from California and Australia.'

'I can imagine the waking-up of the people on the event of the establishment of steamboat navigation on the Amazon. I fancy I can hear the crash of the forest falling to make room for the cultivation of cotton, cocoa, rice and sugar, and the sharp shriek of the saw, cutting into boards the beautiful and valuable wood of the country.' We, more than any other people are interested in the opening of its navigation. As has been before stated, the trade of this region must pass by our doors, and mingle and exchange with the products of our Mississippi valley.'

Descending towards the plain, and only for a few miles the eye of the traveller from the temperate zone is fed with wonder and delight by the beautiful and strange productions of the torrid. He sees for the first time the 'symmetrical coffee-bush, rich with its dark green leaves, in pure white blossoms, and its grey redruit. The prolific plantain, with its great waving fan-like leaf, and immense pendant ranches of golden-looking fruit exchains his attention. The sugar-cane waves in rank luxuriance before him, and if he be familiar with Southern plantations, his heart swells with emotion as the gay yellow blossom and white boll of the cotton sets before his mind's eye the familiar scenes of home.

Fruits, too, of the finest quality and most luscious flavor, grow here oranges, lemons, bananas, pine-apples, melons, chirimoyas, granadillas, and many others which, unpleasant to the taste at first, become with use exceedingly grateful to the accustomed palate. The Indian rubber is here his indispensable cocoa, and the forests at certain seasons are redolent with the perfume of the vanilla."

Again:

"The citizens of the Uted States are, of all foreign people interest in the free navigation of the Amazon. We, as in comparison with other foreigns would reap the lion's share of the advantages to be derived from it. We would fear no competition. Our geographical posits, the winds of heaven, the currents of the ocean, are our potential auxiliaries. Thks to Maury's investigation of the windsand currents, we know that a chip flung into the sea at the mouth of the Amazon will float close by Cape Hatteras. We know that ships sailing from the mouth of the Amazon, for whatever port in the wid, are forced to float to our very doors by the SE. trade winds; that New York is the half-way house between Para and Europ."

Finally, he says, with gat significance:

"I am under the impression that, were Brazil to throw off a causess jealousy, and a puerile fear of our pede, and invite settlers to the Valley of the Amazon, there might be found among our Southern planters, men, who looking with apprehension [if not for themselves, at least for their children] to the state of affairs as regards slavery at home, would under sufficient guarantees, remove their slaves to that country, cultivate its lands, draw out its resources, and prodigiously augment the power and wealth of Brazil.

'The negro slave seems very happy in Brazil. The is remarked by all foreigners, and many times in Para was a group of merry chattering, happy-looking black women, bringing their baskets of washed clothes from the spring, pointed out to me, that I might notice the evils of slavery.'

(From the London Morning Chronicle.)

Last night a sumptuous banquet was given at the London Tavern, in honour to the Right Hon. the Earl of Elgin and Kincardine, K.T., Governor-General of Canada, and to celebrate the success of his lordship's administration of the government of that colony. The Right Hon. Lord John Russell presided on the occasion, Lord Elgin, the guest of the evening, occupying a seat on the chairman's right. A very distinguished and numerous company attended on the occasion, and after the dinner the galleries were occupied by a party of ladies.

Lord John Russell said: Gentlemen, I cannot but feel it a great honour that I should now be called on to propose to you, in the presence of so many gentlemen who have been connected with the official administration of the colonies of this country, and in the presence of so many merchants of the city of London connected with the trade of Canada, the health of the noble lord who has presided with such distinguished merit over the government of our Canadian Colonies. [Cheers.] I rejoice also to have the opportunity of speaking in the presence of the representative of that great Republic of the West, whose sons are derived from the same stock as ourselves, who speak the same language, and own the authority of the same ancient laws as ourselves. [Cheers.] Gentlemen, although it may perhaps take up some portion of your time, I may perhaps be allowed to allude to those periods which have marked the term of our colonial government. There was a period when the colonies of this country—the colonies to which our people had emigrated—were like children allowed to stray where they listed without protection or shelter, taking their chance of falling down the neighbouring crag, or being lost in the surrounding wilderness. That period has passed away, but it did not pass without imparting to many of our young colonies that vigor which enabled them afterwards to grow up into great and free communities. But it did pass away, and we arrived at a period when, by petty commercial restrictions, and by undue exercise of imperial prerogative, we endeavoured to derive those advantages from our colonies which we only ought to have expected from the most perfect freedom of intercourse. It was once said by a statesman, who was a wit as well, that the American war was caused by a Secretary of state, who bethought himself after many years of opening his despatches. What was meant to be conveyed by that was, that directions were sent out from this country cramping the commerce of the colony, imposing taxes upon its community, and tending only to its alienation, which would never have been proposed had the Secretary of state carefully read the despatches which he had for years been receiving from America. Even the fatal reverses of the American war—reverses which we incurred by our delays—did not open the eyes of Government; and the same system was for many years continued. No greater instance of the folly of such a course of proceeding could be offered than the case of Canada, respecting which we endeavoured by parliamentary litigation to prosecute rules and laws for people who had separate religion, separate language, and separate customs. Such a system tended to produce only bickerings and disputes, and to make our governors themselves only the tools of a mischievous and injurious system. [Hear.] But that time has, I trust, likewise passed away. [Cheers.] With regard to Canada, at all events, we have tried, and are now trying, the system of allowing a people as capable as ourselves of discerning their true interests, to promote the e interests without our continued and vexatious interference. [Loud cheers.] Able men have pointed out the way in which we should go, and have also pointed out to Canada the wisdom and policy of uniting that which had been unwisely separated; but still the system itself was so new—the system of paying attention to the colony, of aiding its prosperity, and yet not endeavouring to mar that prosperity by restrictions, that it required no ordinary ability and temper to carry the system into effectual operation. Such, then, was the proper field for the development of such abilities as are possessed by my Lord Elgin. [Loud cheers.] It has been his duty to act the part of a constitutional king over a province which has been continually prospering and increasing under his care, which has risen from little more than a million to two millions of revenue, which has increased in a short time from 600,000 to 1,200,000 population, and the imports and exports of which have shown year by year the symptoms of increasing trade and improving industry. I am not going to weary the assembly with details, or even to allude to the great events which occasion the difficulties of the noble lord's administration. We have had our times of difference in this country, and they have had differences in Canada, but through all these difficulties the noble lord was assisted by an excellent prime minister, who, I am glad to see is present on this occasion, [cheers,] and with his aid the noble lord has successfully coped with the difficulties of his position. The results have been that we have now secure in loyalty a province inhabited by as excellent and as intelligent a people as any in the British empire. [Hear, hear.] Well, gentlemen that it may be a matter of national pride to us if we have at last succeeded, after the two periods of ignorance and neglect, and of narrow-minded interference, in establishing a new system which will prescribe interference, except where the people themselves would admit that imperial interests were concerned; and which, on the other hand, allows with the utmost liberality free scope to public opinion as regards legislation, as regards religious establishments, and as regards institutions which may differ from our own, but of which the inhabitants of the colony are, I should say, the best and only judges. [Hear, hear, hear.] But, again I say, admitting all this, that it requires no small portion of judgment and forbearance to know how to administer government in such a country, and even beyond these qualities of judgment and forbearance it requires high and rare gifts to enable a man wisely to rule over a people divided by many different religions, and by different parties, and to preserve an even mean, between his duty to the sovereign on the one hand and the wishes of the people over whom he presides on the other. [Hear, hear.] This is a sufficient reason why we now behold in this room so many persons assembled to do honour to the Earl of Elgin. [Loud cheers.] I have already said that I did not wish to trench upon any great political question; but still I may be permitted to say, with regard to myself that I am one of those who have continually agreed with the Governor General in the policy he has pursued. I am not afraid nor ashamed of avowing that conformity of opinion; and I only hope that in future times, whatever may be the fate of that magnificent province, whether it shall remain connected with us in loyalty to the same sovereign, or whether other views may actuate the majority of the people, that friendly feelings that have hitherto subsisted between the people of the United Kingdom and the people of Canada may be continued to be maintained, and that men like the Earl of Elgin may always be found ready to govern with such temper and such skill as have hitherto distinguished that noble Earl's administration. I trust that whatever may be the turn of events, the people of Canada may be either the most attached of our fellow subjects or at least the firmest of our friends. [Cheers.] Gentlemen, I shall not detain you any longer than by proposing "The health of the Earl of Elgin." [Loud cheers.]

The Earl of Elgin was received with loud cheering. He said: My lords and gentlemen, it is really very difficult for me—I am sure I speak very unaffectedly when I say —to find words to express what I feel on this occasion. [Hear, hear.] The noble lord [Lord John Russell] commenced his speech by saying that he felt it to be an honour to be called up in the presence of so many persons connected with official life, so many distinguished persons of the city of city of London and so many individuals connected with Canada, to address such a company as is now here assembled. Then what must be my feeling when I recollect that all these persons have met together to do honour to so humble an individual as myself. * * * I must say for myself that what is chiefly gratifying to men in connection with this re-union and far more gratifying than any hearing which this assembly may have on my personal interests and prospects, is that my humble services, if you will, should have furnished an occasion for bringing together so many influential persons in the centre of this busy metropolis, and induced them to bestow upon Canada a few hours snatched from their ordinary cares and other occupations. [Cheers.] For I cannot but think that it is greatly to be regretted that little attention is apparently at least, in the usual course of things bestowed upon this class of subjects. This seeming indifference has not only a tendency to chill the feelings of the colonists, by producing a corresponding feeling in them, but it induces the people of this country to set a lower value than they ought to do upon colonial interests. [Hear, hear.] I have had the good fortune within the last two or three months to be present twice at great banquets held in honour of Governors of East India Presidencies, and attended by many distinguished persons in this country. I confess that when I listened to the glowing pictures of the prospects of India submitted to those audiences, and duly spread over the country through the instrumentality of the press. I could not help feeling something of jealousy and regret that no similar opportunity was given for calling the attention of the people of this country to that great western dependency which, though it is no doubt inferior in wealth and importance to India, and though its condition in many respects even contrasts strikingly with the condition of India, is not inhabited by native tribes, but by a population drawn from the most energetic and active races, English-men, Frenchmen, Irishmen, and Scotchmen, and is bordered not by effete and decayed empires, but by a youthful and vigorous republic, whose distinguished representative has honoured us with his company this evening, and between whose country and the people of Canada generally, give me leave to say that nothing but feelings and mutual respect and gratitude are entertained [Hear, hear.]

Well, gentlemen your great kindness to me personally has provided just such an opportunity, and I believe that there are very few persons in this country without the walls of this room who form any adequate conception of the magnitude of the question with which we are dealing, when we talk of the interests and the future [illegible]. This Canada, of which we speak so lightly, is the great heart of British America, and the greater part of the northern continent of America is still British. True, a large portion of that region is barren and inhospitable, but as to Canada—and I may join with it the sister provinces—it is notorious that it contains a territory capable of sustaining many millions of inhabitants, and is inferior in its salubrity, fertility, and everything that can make residence desirable to persons of our race to no part of the American continent (cheers.) And as to its being the more northern part of the continent, I am obliged to say to our Canadian fellow-subjects, when with that modesty and diffidence which distinguish them, they vaunt of the great qualities of their southern neighbors, that in England, when we say that a man is too far north for another we do not mean to say that he is not likely to be his match (laughter;) and that if the Canadian people only make the most of their great resources and advantages, this proverb will become quite as significant in America as it is in Europe. [cheers.] This magnificent country, the noble inheritance of the British people, and which is now brought by the power of steam within a week's distance of our shores, is at this moment in a condition of prosperity altogether unexampled, and in a manner to an extent which to its previous history furnishes no parallel—a profitable field for the investment of English capital and a congenial home for the subjects of her Majesty of all ranks of life [cheers.] I can add also in confirmation of what the noble lord said, that a spirit of loyalty and attachment to the Queen pervades all classes of the [illegible] whose institutions, as far as I can see, are, who perhaps are [illegible] tion of those of the mother country [hear, hear.] The people of Canada, divided as they are into different [illegible] interests which unite them [illegible] the causes of division [illegible]. There is no doubt a very different picture of the condition of Canada from what used to be exhibited by those who formerly were well acquainted with it in the contrasts they drew between the wretched state of our provinces and the adjoining republic, and, therefore, I may be asked what are the causes which have produced the results that have recently been witnessed in Canada? Now, nothing could be more absurd than to ascribe the prosperity of those provinces to any one single cause. Canada has largely participated in the prosperity which has prevailed all over the commercial world. I believe that she suffered severely in the first instance from the removal of protection; yet, though the consequence of the collapse in the artificial trade of the St. Lawrence was serious, I have no doubt, but by energy and self-reliance Canada will be able to repair the loss which [illegible] lation occasioned. [Hear, hear.] But above all these causes, there were causes, I think, in the old system of colonial government which were very unfavorable to progress; and something has been done of late years to remove those obstacles. [dear.] Formerly there were always two parties in the country, one of which was self-styled the imperial and the other the colonial party. They took opposite sides on all disputed questions—the one look for support to the authority of the Home Government, and the other called for Colonial Independence; the strife was interminable. It has been said that the new system of responsible self-government which has happily taken the place of the old system, gives a triumph to new opinions; but my belief is just the contrary of this; if the new system is made permanent, I think a more temperate tone will prevail amongst colonial politicians than has hitherto existed, and will by and bye take possession of the colonial press likewise. (Hear, hear, hear.) I have often warned my Canadian friends against doing anything to lead the people of this country to suspect that they were capable of abusing the powers confided to them, and pointed out to them that if they do not pay the same scrupulous regard to the rights of property as the people of England, they will bring a blight upon the land, and cause the fair flower to wither to its root (cheers;) and what is more, that they will bring a scandal to one of the best causes entrusted to a people, because I believe that on the success of our Canadian experiment not only the liberties of many other colonies depend, but to a far greater extent than many suppose, the future greatness and happiness of the mother country—(Hear, hear.) I will only add a word or two with regard to the sympathy of the United States of America for Canada. The sympathy of the United States was the sympathy of a noble and high-minded people too great to entertain unworthy suspicions and jealousies—a sympathy towards a youthful and kindred people who are endeavoring with steps not so unequal as many persons imagine, to march side by side with them in the career of moral and material improvement. (Loud cheers.)

Earl Grey proposed "the health of the Hon. Mr. Hincks, the Prime Minister of Canada." They were met to do honour to his Excellency the Governor General of Canada, and it was impossible for him to see so large a company gathered for such a purpose without feeling gratified that the difficulties which he (Earl Grey) had to encounter alone with Mr. Hincks and the Governer General in 1849, had been successfully removed. The success to the Earl of Elgin's administration was greatly owing to the judgement and ability of Mr. Hincks. Canada now enjoyed internal peace and prosperity, with party spirit mitigated, and all classes uniting for the common good (cheers.) All that remained to hope for was, that as she had shown patience in adversity, she would now exhibit moderation suitable to her present good fortune.

Mr. Hincks (who was received with loud applause) said: My Lord John Russel, my lords and gentlemen—Believe me, I feel deeply sensible of the high honour which you have conferred upon me. It is a source of much personal gratification that this toast should have been proposed in such complimentary terms by a noble earl with whom I have had the honor of holding official intercourse and who from his first entrance into public life, has devoted so much of his attention to colonial subjects. I feel at the same time that the compliment is not so much paid to the individual, or to any measure of colonial policy of which I am the advocate, as the position which I have the honour to hold as an adviser of the Crown of Canada. But, my lords and gentlemen, much as I feel the honor which has been paid me personally, I feel, in common with every Canadian in this room, sentiments of the highest gratification at the success of a demonstration the importance of which it is scarcely possible to over estimate. It is not in Canada that I look for results, though if time permitted I might dwell on the compliment paid to your noble guest; but it is in this country, it is in this great metropolis, in every part of the United Kingdom, that the success of the great demonstration will be felt. When I look around this table, and see the distinguished statesmen who surround it, and including those who during the last quarter of a century directed the colonial policy of the empire—when I see the eminent capitalists, and the representatives of the great commercial interests connected with Canada—I feel how important is the sanction which you have given to those principles of government [illegible] which, without the slightest abatement of devoted loyalty to our Queen, [illegible] attached to our mother country, we [illegible] enabled to enjoy all the privileges of an [illegible]. As your [illegible], the people of this country [illegible] to think about colonial affairs, and the fact is that the great changes which have been made during the last ten or twelve years have hardly been noticed by those not actively engaged in public life. (Hear, hear.) Nothing has grieved me more during my occasional visits to this country than to find how lightly the severance of the connection between the [illegible] colonies has been spoken of. There is not, my lords and gentlemen, I venture to say, an individual in this room who does not share in the feelings of indignation which pervaded the country when the news was disseminated that a great northern potentrate had,—under the plea that his neighbor and ally was sick, and in imminent danger—been compassing in his mind how the territory of that neighbor could be parcelled out to his own advantage. And yet we have had too many among ourselves who joined in the cry that the colonies were sick even unto death, and who were ready to abandon these immense territories to whatever fate might happen to befal them. Most fortunately such sentiments prevailed but to a limited extent in Parliament, and I entertain a strong hope that the demonstration of this evening will entirely dissipate them. The principle of governing your great dependencies on those same constitutional principles on which this country has been governed since the revolution of 1688, is no longer an experiment, for our meeting this evening is a recognition of its entire success, and the happy consequence must be, that instead of being looked on as in a state of transition, we must be, considered by the world large as having political institutions as stable and as permanent as any independent power either in Europe or America. The doubts which have prevailed regarding the stability of our institutions have done us incalculable injury. Like our neighbors in the United States we have had extensive public works to construct, and we have been, and must continue to be borrowers of money. I believe that nothing has tended so much to damage our credit as the prevalence of the opinion that there no stability in our institutions. The meeting this evening will be of great importance in removing such distrust. There is, however, another circumstance to which, in the opinion of some of those round this table even more importance may attach. Last Sunday was the day on which the first loan ever contracted for Canada fell due. I recollect well the prediction made a few years ago that our bonds could not be paid without obtaining a free loan. On that day, however, I am happy to say these bonds were paid out of a surplus revenue, and in another year a similar amount will be paid from the same source. This money was expended in the construction of ship canals, which are the admiration of all who visit them. They are now paying a considerable revenue; but they have long since, by reduction of freights and the increased value of property, paid for themselves tenfold. We are now engaged in constructing railroads. Within a few weeks one great line—the Grest Western of Canada—has been opened and already its traffic returns have exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the promoters. In a few weeks about 390 miles of the Grand Trunk in Canada will be in complete operation, and we shall then have direct communication with the Atlantic from the great commercial cities of Quebec and Montreal. It is idle to talk of the present returns from the roads, for, highly remunerative as they may be, such is the increase of population and of the products of the soil, that what is remunerative today will in five years be immensely profitable. I trust my lord and gentlemen, you will excuse me for seizing this opportunity of referring to our great internal improvements, and to endeavoring to show how important it is to our provincial credit that full confidence should be placed in the stability of our institutions. If such confidence has been established I believe that to your distinguished guest we are indebted for it; and I have no hesitation in affirming that the success of his lordship's government has been caused by his strict impartiality (hear, hear.) His lordship had only been a few days in the province when, in answer to the first congratulatory address presented to him, he announced the principles on which he would administer the government, and from these principles he has never swerved in a single instance. During his lordship's government our province has had to pass through many trials. We had severe commercial distress; we suffered fearfully from the disastrous immigration of 1847; we have not been without our political excitement; but throughout all these trying times, as well as during our period of prosperity the Earl of Elgin and his amiable countess have been to Her Majesty's Canadian subjects all that Her Majesty has been to the United Kingdom (loud cheers.) I would here say that though I shall not occupy your time by repeating what has been already so much better said, I entirely concur in all the sentiments expressed regarding the United States by your noble guest, and by the noble earl (Earl of Ellesmere,) and his Grace the Duke of Newcastle. The Canadians entertain toward their brethern in the neighboring republic the most friendly feelings, and I know well that those feelings are reciprocated. My lords and gentlemen a high honor has been conferred on me in giving me permission to propose the health of the distinguished chairman, the noble lord who is one of the representatives in Parliament of this great metropolis. It would be wholly out of place on such an occasion as this to the public services rendered to his country by the noble lord, and, even were it otherwise, it would be most presumptuous in me to attempt to enlarge on them. But, as a Canadian, I may in connection with the cause of our meeting, remind you that it was during the period when the noble lord held the seals of the Colonial department, that the great measure of the union of the Canadas was determined on and carried, and that it was in his lordship's despatch of 1840 that the first intimation was given of the new system of colonial government that was to be carried out [cheers.] If his lordship entertained any doubts as to the success of the great experiment which he had determined on trying—and as a wise statesman he must have had some doubts—how gratifying to him must be the proceedings of this evening, and the complete success of the policy which he was instrumental in carrying out. I am sure that his lordship would think me guilty of ingratitude if I did not on this occasion refer to the services of a deceased statesman who co-operated with him, and whose loss we must ever deplore. The honourable gentleman concluded by proposing "The Health of the Noble Chairman" [drank amidst loud cheers.]

The Chairman rose and responded to the toast.

Steam Plough.

We (Montreal Herald.) have had the pleasure of inspecting the model of this invention—Canadian invention as we may call it—since its author is Mr. Romain, formerly of the Canada Gazette office. Plough is not a word that makes the character of the machine very well understood. It should rather be called a digger, since that part of it which is intended to turn the soil consists of a number of prongs fixed on a sort of barrel, by the revolution of which they are made to enter and to turn up the earth. The hollow barrel on which these are fixed is made to revolve by a steam engine of peculiar construction, which may perhaps be well enough named the perpendicular. The steam boxes and valves being all fixed to the side of a boiler, which is set up on end over the fire in a cart attached to the plough. Thus instead of the alternate rising and falling of the diverse ends of a beam hung from the centre, as we see in steam-boats, the first motion created by the issuing of steam from the boiler is that of a bar which rises and falls perpindicularly. It will be easily understood that this form of engine is exceedingly compact, requiring in fact, hardly any more room than is necessary for the boiler itself. In rising and falling it communicates a circular motion to the cranks, which turn the toothed barrel. The locomotive power is given by horses, which are attached by shafts to the cart in which the steam engine is to be carried, and which, as we have said, is attached to but does not form part of the plough. There is, therefore, no gearing from the steam engine to the locomotive wheels of the machine; all the power generated by the boiler is employed in turning the digger. There is a large screw going up through the centre of the plough, by which the tethered barrel may be raised or lowered so as to make a mere scratch, or to dig well below the surface. To the plough a sowing machine may be attached, which will sow the seeds in perfectly regular rows, and at the same time roll them in. Thus, by a pair of horses, it is supposed that ten acres of land may be ploughed, seeded and rolled in one day.

Mr Mechi, the eminent English agriculturist, has, we understand, a large share in the patent rights, which have already been secured in Europe and the colonies, and who Mr Romain is now engaged in securing in the United States. It is said that Major Campbell is likely to make a trial of the plough, so soon as its qualities have been tested in England. We heartily wish success to our former and fellow craftsman in the important industrial revolution, which he seems so likely to bring about.

THE DECLARATION OF WAR.

(From the Supplement to the London Gazette March 28th.)

DECLARATION.

It is with deep regret that her majesty announces the failure of her anxious and protracted endeavours to preserve for her people and for Europe the blessings of peace.

The unprovoked aggression of the Emperor of Russia against the sublime Porte has been persisted in with such disregard of consequences, that after the rejection by the Emperor of Russia of terms which the Emperor of Austria, the Emperor of the French, and the King of Prussia, as well as her Majesty, considered just and equitable, her Majesty is compelled by a sense of what is due to the honor of her crown, to the interests of her people, and to the independence of the States of Europe, to come forward in defence of an ally whose territory is invaded, and whose dignity and independence are assailed.

Her majesty, in justification of the course she is about to pursue, refers to the transaction in which her Majesty has been engaged.

The Emperor of Russia had some cause of complaint against the Sultan with reference to the settlement, which his Highness had sanctioned, of the conflicting claims of the Greek and Latin Churches to a portion of the Holy Places of Jerusalem and its neighborhood. To the complaint of the Emperor of Russia on this head justice was done; and her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople had the satisfaction of promoting an arrangement to which no exception was taken by the Russian government. But, while the Russian Government repeatedly assured the government of her Majesty that the mission of Prince Menschikoff to Constantinople was exclusively directed to the settlement of the question of the Holy Places at Jerusalem, Prince Menschikoff himself pressed upon the Porte other demands of a far more serious and important character, the object of which he, in the first instance endeavored, as far as possible, to conceal from her Majesty's Ambassador. And these demands, thus studiously concealed, affected not the privileges of the Greek Church at Jerusalem, but the privilges of the millions of Turkish subjects in their relations to their sovereign the Sultan.

Two assurances have been given to her Majesty—one, that the mission of Prince Menschikoff only regarded the Holy Places; the other, that his mission would be of a conciliatory character.

In both respects her Majesty's just expectations were disappointed.

Demands were made which, in the opinion of his majesty the Sultan, extended to the substitution of the Emperor of Russia's authority for his own over a large portion of his dominions. And those demands were enforced by a threat; and when her Majesty learned that, on announcing the termination of his mission, Prince Menschikoff declared that the refusal of his demands would impose upon the Imperial government the necessity of seeking guarantee by its own power. Her Majesty then, in proper time, her fleet should leave Malta, and, in co-operation with that of her ally the Emperor of the French, take up its station in the neighborhood of the Dardanelles.

So long as the negociations bore an amicable character her Majesty refrained from any demonstration of force. But when, in addition to the assemblage of large military forces on the frontier of Turkey, the Ambassador of Russia intimated that serious consequences would ensue from the refusal of the Sultan to comply with unwarrantable demands, her Majesty deemed it right, in conjunction with the Emperor of the French, to give an unquestionable proof of her determination to support the sovereign rights of the Sultan.

The Russian government has maintained that the determination of the Emperor to occupy the Principalities was taken in consequence of the advance of the fleets of England and France. But the menace of invasion of the Turkish territory was conveyed in Count Nesselrode's note to Reschid Pacha, of the 19th (31st) May, and restated in his despatch to Baron Brunow, of the 20th May (1st June) which announced the determination of the Emperor of Russia to order his troops to occupy the Principalities, if the Porte did not within a week comply with the demands of Russia.

The despatch to her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople authorizing him, in certain specified contingencies, to send for the British fleet, was dated the 31st May, and the order sent direct from England to her Majesty's admiral to proceed to the neighborhood of the Dardanelles was dated the 2nd of June.

The determination to occupy the Principalities was, therefore, taken before the orders for the advance of the combined squadrons were given.

The Sultan's Minister was informed that unless he signed within a week, and without the change of a word, the note proposed to the Porte by Prince Menschikoff on the eve of his departure from Constantinople, the Principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia would be occupied by Russian troops. The Sultan could not accede to so insulting a demand; but when the actual occupation of the Principalities took place, the Sultan did not, as he might have done in the exercise of his undoubted right, declare war, but addressed a protest to his allies.

Her Majesty, in conjunction with the sovereigns of Austria, France and Prussia, has made various attempts to meet any just demands of the Emperor of Russia without affecting the dignity and independence of the Sultan; and had it been the sole object of Russia to obtain security for the enjoyment by the Christian subjects of the Porte of their privileges and immunities, she would have found it in the offers that have been made by the Sultan. But as that security was not offered in the shape of a special and separate stipulation with Russia, it was rejected. Twice has this offer been made by the Sultan, and recommended by the four Powers, once by a note originally prepared at Vienna, and subsequently modified by the Porte, once by the proposal of bases of negotiation agreed upon at Constantinople on the 31st of December, and approved at Vienna, on the 31st of January, as offering to the two parties the means of arriving at an understanding in a becoming and honorable manner.

It is thus manifest that a right for Russia to interfere in the ordinary relations of Turkish subjects to their sovereign, and not the happiness of Christian communities in Turkey, was the object sought for by the Russian government; to such a demand he will not submit, and his Highness, in self-defence, declared war upon Russia; but her Majesty, nevertheless, in conjunction with her allies, has not ceased her endeavors to restore peace between the contending parties.

The time has, however, now arrived when the advice and remonstrances of the four Powers having proved wholly ineffectual, and the military preparations of Russia becoming daily more extended, it is but too obvious that the Emperor of Russia has entered upon a course of policy which, if unchecked must lead to the destruction of the Ottoman Empire.

In this conjuncture her Majesty feels called upon by regard for an ally, the integrity and independence of whose empire have been recognized as essential to the peace of Europe, by the sympathies of her with right against wrong, by a desire to avert from her dominions most injurious consequences, and to save Europe from the preponderance of a Power which has violated the faith of treaties, and defies the opinion of the civilized world, to take up arms, in conjunction with the Emperor of the French, for the defence of the Sultan.

Her Majesty is persuaded that in so acting she will have the cordial consent of her people; and that pretext of zeal for the Christian relegion will be used in vain to cover an aggression undertaken in disregard of its holy precpts, and of its pure and beneficent spirit.

Her Majesty humbly trusts that her efforts may be successful, and that, by the blessing of Providence, peace may be re-established on a safe and solid foundation.

WESTMINSTER, March 28, 1854.

War is declared. A peace which had lasted the unexampled period of thirty-nine years, which many fondly hoped was to last as many more, is at an end; and the three most powerful States of Europe are once more engaged in a struggle, the duration, the end, and the results of which no man can tell; but which is too likely to produce disasters and sufferings, of which we are mercifully spared the foreknowledge. It is not for us to attempt to lift up the veil of futurity which must be sad in many respects; nor is there any need. No alternative is left us; the decision had been taken out of our hands; and, unless we would submit, with our allies, to crouch under the insolent dictation of a barbaric Power, and see the liberties of Europe disappear under the tramp of the Cossack, we find no other course than to do what has now been done in sad and solemn form. The sight of the document we publish to-day will call many to their senses who have speculated on the chances of war as a still remote contingency, or have looked at it only in its holiday aspects. If the mere sight of a manifesto to which we are happily so little used might sober the most thoughtless, the perusal of it will remove every scruple from those who do not think all war unjustifiable. The document does justice to the long and anxious efforts of France and England to heal the rupture which the Czar had all along determined never should be healed, except by the subjugation of a neighbor against whom he had no longer a quarrel. With a simple collation of dates it convicts the daring attempts of the Emperor to falsify the chronology of the negotiation, and throw on us the odium of provoking the war. It meets with a just rebuke the impudent hypocrisy with which Russia has claimed to be the friend of religion and truth, when it was spurning the pure precepts of one and outraging the laws of the other. There is not an Englishman whose thoughts are still free, and whose hand is not tied by some fanatical theory, who will not respond heart and soul to this solemn appeal. The greater part of us will only be called on to endure sacrifices, and thankful we should be that our part in the noble struggle is not more severe. But those sacrifices all will make cheerfully and ungrudgingly, from the conviction that Heaven has put them upon us, and that the only way to save ourselves, and fulfil our part in the terrible drama, is to strike with all our might, and let the great culprit see at once the strong determination and the tremendous power he has presumed to set at nought.—We have been slow to take the decisive step. The Russian has evidently concluded that we preferred negotiation to action; the very population of St. Petersburg has been taught that we are too commercial to be real warriors, and to fond of profit too be keenly sensitive to wrong. Now that we have thrown away the scabbard, and stand face to face with our insolent antagonist, it only remains to disabuse him thoroughly of this imaginary estimate of our temper and power. That we have no doubt will be done, but it will be done all the more readily by our gallant fleet and army if it be known that all England follows her sons to battle, and will prosecute their cause and avenge their death, till soon or late the rights of nations and the liberties of Europe receive a fresh sanction in the signal punishmeat of the gigantic offender.—London Times.

CHINESE SOCIAL WORSHIP IN SAN FRANCISCO.—Rev. Mr. Spear writes to the Presbyterian board of Foreign missions of the evening prayer meetings conducted in the Chinese language, and of the regular family worship in the morning.

On these occasions, the prayers made by the Chinese church-members are often spiritual and edifying, indicating a clear comprehension of the Scripture system of redemption, and a careful and minute study of the word of God. Our habit is to read an appropriate chapter, and call on some of those present to lead in prayer, accompanying our exercises with singing also, in which two or three are quite proficient, and which they have some taste. It is doubtful whether the shril, artificial screeching of the Chinese ever can be adapted to Christian hymns. Our music consists wholly of the well-known tunes of our American churches. To hear sounds so foreign and strange coming from lips so long idolatrous, and embodying the worship of the living God, often brings tears of thankfulness into the eyes of Christians; and some have expressed great satisfaction from attending services of which they understood only the spirit and object.

TOUCHING IT OFF SOFTLY.

Two Irishmen were going to fire off a cannon, just for fun: but, being of an economical turn of mind, they did not wish to lose the ball. So one of them took an iron kettle in his hands to catch it in; and stationing himself in front of the loaded piece, he exclaimed to the other, who stood behind it, holding a torch, "Touch it off softly, Jemmy."

We were never very forcibly impressed with the wisdom displayed by the Irishmen; but he has imitators in high quarters. Senator Everett, of Massachusetts, would really prefer that this Nebraska cannon should not be fired at all; he has not so much relish for the fun of the thing as the Irishman had; but he fully credits the assurance given by the Honorable Mr. Jones, and his friend, (if he may be permitted to call him so,) the Honorable Mr. Dixon, of Kentucky that it shall be touched off softly; and he seems to entertain no further doubt that the ball can be safely caught in a cast-iron kettle.

Mr. Everett has not the slightest idea that slavery can exist in Kansas and Nebraska. To be sure, household slaves will be taken there. That his honorable Southern friends admit; but then he, Mr. Everett—benevolent, innocent gentlemen that he is—really can not believe that slavery will exist there long. He has been told that there is no great practical question at issue, and he believes it.—He is credulously holding the cast-iron kettle, and when the cannon shall have been fired off he will be very much surprised if he does not catch the ball.

Senator Badger is quite positive that the question is of no practical importance. But he becomes as plaintive as a mourning dove while discussing the subject, and asks if, in God's name, he should be debarred from taking his servants, whom, next to his immediate kindred, he loves as well as he does anybody on earth—should he be debarred from taking them with him to this new territory? And should a gentleman be deprived of carrying with him the old colored woman at whose breast he was nursed, and whom he called "mammy" until he left home for college, and, perhaps, after his return? All this the pathetic gentleman regards as extremely cruel.

Put we should like to have the distinguished gentlemen from North Carolina—the pathetic Senator—or the the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts—the credulous Senator—we should like to have either of them inform us what is to become of one of these dear old "mammies," or of these precious household servants, in case their owner should happen, from any cause, to become insolvent, and an execution shall be levied on his human chattels by the sheriff? These dear creatures, in that case, are stripped and inspected by the heartless speculators, and knocked off to the highest bidder. Such things are of common if not of every day occurrence at Richmond. Where is the slave auction block that a "mammy's" foot never mounted?

Not many years have elapsed since a gentleman, who has had the honor to fill a much higher office than has ever been held by the North Carolina Senator—a gentlemen, too, distinguished for his amiability—was constrained by pecuniary embarrassments, voluntarily to dispose of a mulatto "household servant," on whose features his own image was stamped as plainly and indelibly as the eagle and the "E pluribus Unum," were ever stamped upon an American coin. Will slaves be held only, and never sold, in Kansas and Nebraska?

Again, the blacks are a most prolific race. What is to become of the offspring and descendants of these household servants and dear mammies.

No; such propositions are almost too weak to require serious refutation. Wherever slavery goes, the whole brood of evils which naturally appertain to the accursed institution, will follow in its train.—N. Y. Evening Post.

SIGNING THE PLEDGE.

Rev. John Abbott, the sailor preacher, relates the following good story of one of his converts to Temperance:

Mr. Johnston, at the close of a cold water lecture, intimated that he must sign the pledge in his own way, which he did in these words:

"I William Johnston, pledge myself to drink no more intoxicating liquor for one year."

Some thought he would'nt stick three days, others allowed him a week, and a few gave him two weeks; but the landlord knew him best, and said he was good stuff, but at the end of the year Bill would be a real soaker. Before the year was quite gone, Mr. Johnston was asked by Mr. Abbott, "Bill, ain't you going to renew the pledge?"

"Well, I don't know, Jack, but what I will; I have done pretty well so far, will you let me sign again my own way?"

"O yes, any way, so that you won't drink rum."

He writes: "I, William Johnson, sign this pledge for nine hundred and ninety-nine years; and if living at the end of that time, I intend to take out a lease for life."

A day or two after, Johnston went to see his old landlord, who eyed him as a hawk does a chicken. "Oh, landlord," whined Bill, accompanied with sundry contortions of the body, as if enduring most excrutiating torment, "I have such a lump on my side."

"That's because you have stopped drinking, you won't live two years longer at this rate."

"If I commence drinking will the lump go away?"

"Yes. If you don't you will have another just such a lump on the other side."

"Do you think so, landlord?"

"I know it; you will have them on your back, breast and head; you will be covered all over with them."

"Well, may be I will," said Bill,

"Come, Bill, said the landlord, "let's drink together," at the same time pouring the red stuff from a decanter into his glass—gug, gug, gug.

"No," said Johnston, "I can't for I have signed the pledge again."

"You hain't though! You're a fool."

"Yes that old sailor coaxed so hard I could'nt get off."

"I wish the devil had the old rascal—Well, how long do you go this time?"

"For nine hundred and ninety-nine years," whispered Bill.

"You won't live a year."

"Well, if I drink, you are sure the lump on my side will go away?"

"Yes."

"Well, I guess I won't drink; here's the lump," continued Bill, holding up something with a hundred dollars in it; "and you say I'll have more such lumps—that's what I want!"

South rn Convention.

CHARLESTON, Wednesday, April 12, 1854.

THIRD DAY.

Wednesday's proceedings in the Charleston Convention, as detailed by the papers, showed that nothing definite was done. The whole day was consumed in discussing the Pacific Railroad question.

A ball took place at night and was a grand affair.

The reporters of the New York Tribune, Herald, and Express had been elected honorary members of the Convention, which has caused some excitement and was denounced in the News and Standard.

FOURTH DAY.

CHARLESTON, Thursday, April 13, 1854.

In the convention to day a spicy debate took place relative to the Reporter for the Tribune. A motion was made to exclude him in consequence of the Abolition tendencies of the paper; it was, however, eventually withdrawn.

Resolutions were adopted advocating the employment of capital in manufactures and mining; a Committee of three from each State represented, to obtain statistical information to show the present condition and extent of the manufacturing interests, and furnish a report at the next meeting. Also, to address the people of the state represented, urging the importance of action by the Legislatures thereof in favor of manufacturing, ship building, direct trade, mining, education, &c.

A committee of three from each state was adopted to memoralize Congress, urging a reduction of duties on railroad iron; the passage of an act for the improvement of the merchant service by encouraging boys to go to sea, and for preventing desertion; to send one or two small naval steamers up the Amazon river for the purpose of exploring its tributaries, which the States owning them have declared free to the commerce and navigation of the whol world; and that the government of Brazil be requested to permit these vessels to make explorations and surveys of the shores of the Amazon belonging to that nation, to encourage the establishment of a line of mail steamers between some southern port or ports, and the mouth of the Amazon, or some other port in Brazil; also to encourage the establishment of a direct mail by steamers between some southern port and Europe.

After discussing the question of the improvement of harbors and navigable rivers, the convention adjourned.

FIFTH DAY.

CHARLESTON, Friday, April, 14, 1854.

The committee to-day reported the Pacific Railroad project. First it is recommended as a vital necessity to the prosperity of the Southern States. Second—That the route be commenced on the Mississippi, between St. Louis and New Orleans, through Texas connecting with all the northern and southern roads. Third—That the Gadsden Treaty, so far as securing the right of way through Mexico, ought to be adopted. Fourth—Recommending a combination of the Southern States for the construction of the road independent of the national government. Fifth—Recommending the incorporation of the Legislature of Virginia, and subsequently by all the Legislatures of the Southern States Sixth—Provides for the appointment of a committee to prepare a charter and procure its passage by the Virginia and other Southern Legislatures.

They were adopted, except the treaty resolution.

Gen Gadsden addressed the convention, indirectly intimating that the treaty was prepared to secure a route for the south through Mexico. He had heard that northern seamtors had combined to defeat that part. He deprecated the passage of the resolution by the convention. The resolution was subsequently withdrawn by the Committee.

Resolutions were adopted providing for the encouragement of direct trade with Europe from southern ports by legislative assistance. For treaties to secure the reduction of the duties imposed on tobacco and hemp, by foreign countries. Adjourned till to-morrow.

THE MISSOURI COMPROMISE NOT REPEALED.—It is said that the measures of 1850 superceded this compromise of 1820. If so, why treat it now as still existing and therefore to be repealed by an exception in order to get rid of it? If it was repealed in 1850, why do it over again in 1854? Why kill the dead? But it was not superseded, but acknowledged and confirmed by every speaker in 1850 that referred to the subject. and by every act that mentioned it. This being a matter of fact, and proven by all sorts of testimony, parole, written and record had to be given up, though a test of political orthodoxy as long as it stood, and something else put in its place. Thereupon suppression was itself superceded by inconsistent—"out of the frying pan into the fire." (Laughter.) Inconsistant signifies inability to stand together; two things which cannot stand together, from cat and sists. Now what is the fact with respect to the compromises of 1820 and 1850? Can they not stand together? And if not, why knock the one down that is already down? It is now four years since this inability to stand together took effect, and how do the two sets of measures make out together at the end of this time? Perfectly well They are both on their feet standing bolt upright, and will stand so forever, unless Congress knocks one or the other of them down.

This is a fact known to every body, and admitted by the bill itself, for if the first is inconsistent with the second, and unable to stand, why all this trouble to put it down? Why trip up the heels of the man already flat on his back on the ground? Then comes another reason that this Compromise of 1820 is inoperate and void. If so, those who are against its operation should be content. It is in the very condition they wish it—useless, powerless, inactive, dead and no bar to the progress of slavery to the North. Void is vacant empty, nothing of it.

Now, if the line of 36 degrees 30 seconds is inoperative and void, it is in the condition of a fence pulled down and the rails carried away, and the field left open for the stock to enter But the fence is not pulled down yet. The line is not yet inoperative and void. It is an existing, substantive line, alive and operating effectually to bar the progress of slavery in the North, and will so continue to operate until Congress shall stop its operation. Then comes the final reason—that there never was any such line in the world; that it was unconstitutional and void; that it had no existence from the beginning, and that it must now be repealed by a direct vote. I object to this shilly-shally, wishy-washy, donty-canty style of legislation. [Excessive laughter.] It is not legislative. It is not parliamentary. It is not manly.—It is not womanly. No woman would talk that way. No shilly-shally in a woman.—Nothing of the female gender was ever born young enough or ever lived long enough to get befogged in such a quandary as this. (Renewed laughter.] It is one thing or the other with them, and what they say they stick to. No breaking bargains with them. But the end of this stump speech is the best of the whole. Diderent from good milk in which the cream rises to the top, it here settles to the bottom and is in these words:—"Leave it to the people thereof"—that is to say, of the States and of territories to regulate slavery for themselves as they please, only subject to the Constitution of the United States!!—Col. Benton's Speech.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Complaints are made that papers are not received regularly either by city subscribers or persons at a distance. We can only say that carriers are employed who tell us that they serve the citizens regularly. We invariably see to it that the country papers are sent to the Post Office.

We will endeavour to prevent complaints in future.

For the Provincial Freeman.

Rev S. R. Ward, at Home and Abroad.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—Will you allow me a small space in your valuable journal, to say a few things possessing as he does, in an eminent degree all the qualifications necessary to make him acceptable in the pulpit or on the platform. His labors are not exclusively confined to the advocacy of the cause of his mission, for it must be observed, that he shows a readiness, as well as a willingness, in not saying anything about an ability, to address his audiences on various topics; and to this may his success and popularity as a speaker and an orator be attributed.

His career in the United States was rather an eventful one—engaged as he was for considerable length of time in politics—he labored assidously and faithfully, to accomplish an object which he at length despaired of realizing; all the while laboring as one "hoping against hope." In Oct., 1851, he came to Canada, and was greeted as he declared he never had been before—he was taken by the hand and treated as a man and a brother; he was not here long before he discovered this fact, that a great deal of what he had learned in the United States he must now unlearn. However, his extreme quickness of perception soon enabled him to place himself aright before a Canadian public, and, although he showed himself perfectly familiar with the politics of the United States, yet he at once perceived and readily admitted his want of information on Canadian politics. His extensive experience in the political field combined with his well known sagacity, enabled him to grapple with some of the most difficult as well as the most perplexing questions connected with Canadian legislation; one of which, I will mention that of the Clergy Reserves—a question which has been a source of great controversy in Canada for a quarter of a century or more—his arguments on this question were both able and powerful; and indeed, so overwhelming were the arguments, which he adduced on this subject, that many frankly confessed that they never had it presented to them in such a vivid light before. Such talent and ability, as he displayed in the various subjects, soon won for him the confidence and esteem of a host of admiring friends. His fame soon spread throughout the length and breadth of Canada, so that invitations from various quarters were extended to him, inviting him to visit them. During this time, the great number of refugees, not from Russian despotism, nor from Austrian oppression, but from Democratic American freedom, (?) had increased to an extent hitherto unprecedented in annals of American tyranny—driven hither by that wicked and infamous enactment, now so generally known as the Compromise measure of 1850, or perhaps better termed as Millard Fillmore's man-catching bill. The sympathies of those connected with the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, being enlisted in behalf of those unfortunates, they secured the valuable services of S R. Ward, to travel as their agent, which he undertook, and discharged the duties thereof with credit to himself, and we learn to the pleasure and satisfaction of those at whose instigation he went forth.

The press, in various sections of the Province were warm and enthusiastic in their praise of his talent as a speaker and an orator of no ordinary ability.

Having travelled the western portion of the Province for several months in the prosecution of the duties connected with his mission, such as procuring and ascertaining as near as possible, the respecting this distinguished individual. It cannot be otherwise than gratifying to the friends of oppressed humanity, to witness the triumphant success which has attended the labors of this able and indefatigable advocate of the rights of man, at present on a mission in the Old World, on behalf of his exiled fellow-countrymen in Canada.—The selection of him by the "Toronto Anti-Slavery Society." under whose auspices he went thither, was both wise and judicious. A person more suitable, and better adapted for such an important work, would have been difficult to find condition of the refugees from Republican freedom, (?) it was resolved by the friends of freedom that a visit to England by Mr. Ward would greatly tend to advance the cause of the enslaved, as well as to promote the benevolent object so cheerfully undertaken and faithfully carried out by a few philanthropic individuals.

The proposition to visit Great Britain was submitted to him, and after giving the matter due consideration—feeling satisfied that such a mission would be of incalculable benefit to the cause upon which he had bestowed such unremitted labor, Mr Ward consented to go. His reception in Britain was in every respect highly enthusiastic; and such as Britons know how to give.—Whenever he has appeared before a British audience for the purpose of presenting the claims of his important mission, it is highly gratifying to learn that the nobility of England have given indubitable evidence of their deep interest in his mission, both by their presence at his meetings, and by their liberal contributions. It certainly has not escaped the notice of those who are in the habit of reading English papers, the extreme popularity enjoyed by Mr. Ward, during his sojourn thus far. In the different parts of England and Scotland which he has been visited by him he has received the most flattering notices from the press; and not a few have readily admitted that his familiarity with the various subjects on which he has spoken, justly entitles him to rank a leetle ahead of any black man who has visited England from the western hemisphere.

The able and distinguished London correspondent of the Toronto Globe, has alluded on several occasions, to the ability displayed by Mr. Ward when appearing before a British audience. The same correspondent, in one of his communications, says, that of the large number of black men who have visited Great Britain, none have acquired as great a degree of celebrity as Rev. S. R. Ward.—This tour will be of incalculable benefit to him, for it will furnish him with a vast amount of information which will enable him greatly to enrich the columns of the Provincial Freeman; to the editorial department of which, he has gratuitously given his services for one year.

Yours, &c,
"CANNUCK."

Reform Meeting in Middlesex.

A Meeting has been held in Wardsville, in the above County, for the purpose of nominating a Reform Candidate for Parliament. James Ferguson, Esq., was then chosen over Dr. Dugald McKellar. We happen to know something of this little Wardsville, which is making an ado just now about Reform Candidates, and for the benefit of those of our readers who may not have made its acquaintance, we would say it is just as contemptible a little place in the bush, as disgraces Canada anywhere.

Made up of prejudiced Yankees, with their rummeries and other catch-penny concerns, and a very uncertain sort of Canadians.—a class often found in the West, whose greatest glory is to stand still and learn from Yankee adventurers lessons in colorphobia,—poor doless creatures without energy or education—it wants reforming. But what sort of reform is to come from Wardsville, we would like to know? Hope it will be some thing more than the name, for if ever a people were low down in the scale of decency, they are the people. We have read of Arabs who respect the presence of an enemy when in their power; even of Indians, miserable, bedaubed savages who will not take undue advantage of a foe; but these Wardsville Canadians will grin to catch coppers, and will deliberately lie you out of existence. What notions can they entertain about whiskey and roguery?—they would turn their grandmothers out to feed on snow. We do not know what this reform means any longer; we were trying to get hold of the idea, but this Wardsville demonstration has increased the confusion

Emigrants of every class, would do well to look for other villages than this Wardsville, if they wish to maintain their respectability. *

A correspondent of the Colonist writing from St. Johns, N B., says:

To those who are acquainted with every locality in this province, it must be amusing to notice that a grant has recently been asked from the House toward the erection of a Mechanic's Institute at Loch Lomond. This place in the county of St. John—contains a population of about 100 persons mostly of the black tribe, and is generally known as the 'Nigger settlement.' Its chief article of manufacture is spruce gum birch brooms and shingles. What the idea may be that has taken hold of the minds of those who advocate this grant it is hard to say or for what object the institute is intended is also a puzzler The inhabitants of Loch Lomond are proverbial for laziness—the land was given them by government to keep them from starving; nevertheless loads of provisions have to be taken out to them to preserve their existence. How mortals so utterly lost to their own sustenance would appreciate an institution of the kind contemplated is no matter of conjecture. If they would not strive for food to nourish the body, it would be hard to expect them to seek mental food. The fact is some of our wise-acres in the Assembly are wholly ignorant of the mode of expending the public money. In a little while we expect to hear of Mechanic's Institutes in every section of the Province which may contain from 25 to 30 persons.

It is evident from the above, that the individual writing, is not capable of judging as to the wants of the few whites and many blacks of Loch Lomond. Where did his sapience get his information as to the starvation and laziness of these settlers, who as he admits are industrious enough to manufacture brooms and shingles from almost the only material the place affords? From those who called the place a "nigger settlement"? If so, no wonder he cannot get the light he seeks. Who ever heard of lazy people asking for a Mechanics Institute? "The fact is" not that the Assembly men need enlightenment from St. John's but himself might not lose by a little more "gumption," Potatoes they grow small over there. *

The Southern Convention.

The slave-mongering fraternity of the United States, have recently held what they denominated "a Commercial Convention," at Charleston, South Carolina. In another column will be found an account of two days' proceedings. We cannot, at present afford room for more; and if we could, we probably would not. Men of their character an. calling, certainly deserve no courtesy at our hands—neither is the fact of our copying a portion of their proceedings, to be regarded as such. We have nothing in common with the slave-holding oligarchy of the Southern States, and desire to have nothing. Their aim is to debase and imbrute their fellow-men; ours is to elevate and dignify. They seek to enslave and to oppress; our endeavor is, and will be, to break every yoke, and to strike off the manacles from the limbs of the bondsman. They get fat and kick upon the proceeds of unrequited toil; we hope to live peaceably by the sweat of honest industry and assiduous perseverance.

What we wished to do, was simply to lay before our readers a sample, by which they may form an estimate of the bulk, of the doings at this notable Convention.

Whether the commercial men of the South see trouble ahead, in the shape of a dismemberment of the American Union, and hope to prepare themselves for such a contingency, by fostering commercial enterprise, it would at present be premature to conjecture, but certain it is, that the fact itself that such a Convention should be called at such a time, and in such a place as Charleston, the capital city of the fire-eating speech-makers of South Carolina, would indicate at least that some of them are looking in that direction. That a dismemberment will take place, and that at no very remote period, there seems to us to be good grounds to believe. It cannot for a moment be doubted that the Southern States will persevere—as they have hitherto persevered—in their aggressive and absorbing policy. Slavery will overrun the whole American continent, and pierce with its iron-shod heels the bleeding form of the prostrate negro; eating, at the same time, the life and manhood out of the entire free white population of the North; or it must be checked, in its onward course by the roused determination and energy of the spirit of Liberty. There can be no more Compromises. Their day has gone by. They have served the purpose of their promoters to the full. Nothing now remains but to look the stern reality in the face, that Liberty and Slavery cannot co-mingle—that one or the other must perish, throughout the entire confederacy; or that the States should part company for ever. The Free North having withdrawn, the blighting and destructive effects of the slave system would, even more speedily than now, make themselves manifest.

As to the great undertakings "resolved," at this Convention, to be undertaken for the advantage of the South, they cannot but fail. The population is too sparse and unproductive to render railways profitable. It is only in largely commercial districts that such undertakings prosper. The breeding of human beings for the slave mart, is not a kind of business to give much encouragement to railways; the "resolves," so far, are therefore more than likely to end in smoke.—The Convention, however, has furnished an excellent opportunity for gasconade, and has thus, doubtless, served one of the purposes for which it was assembled. "Cannuck's" Letter.

It is with great pleasure that we give place this week to the very interesting communication from Cannuck," relating to the Editor of this paper, Mr. Ward.

This impartial writer expresses the opinion entertained of our Editor, by thousands of colored people in Canada and the United States, and by a respectable body of the whites also. In fact, they are the sentiments of those whose opinions we value.

However, objections may be made by some, to giving such prominence in our columns, to one so immediately interested in the success of this paper. Mr. Ward, too, may possibly be as much hocked as any one, at the endorsement of his ability and usefulness so directly made by us; it so, we do not see how the matter is to be remedied, as we readily accept whatever reflections can be made against its publication on the score of good taste. *

☞ Mr. Burleigh of the Pennsylvania Freeman, in a notice of this paper, says, that communications for the same are to be addressed to Windsor Canada West. How the Editor should have fallen into such an error, is left for himself to explain, should he do our enterprise the justice.—What absurdity to send communications to Windsor, should parties be editing, publishing, printing &c., in Toronto! By reference to the first page, it will be seen that communications should be sent to Toronto, not to Windsor. We wish that our friends would do by us as they would be done by. We know it is a hard task for some of them to understand that we can walk without being led, or leaning on others but we did not think that even they would attribute to us such bungling stupidity. *

THOMAS F. MEAGHER, ESQ.—A gentleman in New Orleans having undertaken to catechise Mr. Meagher, respecting his opinions on human slavery, at gentleman addressed him the following note in reply:

ST. CHARLES'S HOTEL, NEW ORLEANS
Wednesday, March 24, 1854.

Mr. Meagher presents his compliments to Mr. Haughton and begs to state he does not recognise in Mr. Haughton, or any other person, or the public generally, any right or title whatsoever to require from him an expression of opinion respecting the question of African slavery in America.

Mr. Meagher holds himself, upon all such questions, wholly irresponsible for his opinions, his silence or his action, to Mr. Haughton, or to any other gentleman, or to the public at large or any portion thereof.

Mr. Meagher begs leave to add, that he has taken the preparatory oath of allegiance to the Constitution, laws and sovereignty of the Republic of the United States; that he is not yet a citizen; that three years have yet to elapse before he is one, that he postpones till then his declaration of opinion regarding African Slavery in America, and every other question affecting the joint compact and Constitution of the several States.

Father Gavazzi has been lecturing at Sheffield where he defended American slavery as better than English servitude, and denounced "Uncle Tom's Cabin" as a mere romance.

Curious customers these foreign liberty-mongers! Meagher will keep his lips sealed for three years on the greatest question in America because he is not a citizen. What right has a public character to pour complaints against England into Americans? On the same principle, it is none of their business. And Gavazzi, too, he has taken up the cudgel, for slavery in England.

These martyrs to liberty in Europe are clearly

United States Items.

In the United States Senate, on the 25th inst. Col. Benton, of Missouri, made a strong speech against the Nebraska Bill, in which he is very severe against the Administration, and styles the measure an amphibological bill, stuffed with monstrosities, hobbled with contradictions and badgered with a proviso.

—The Gadsden treaty has been ratified.

—The Supreme Court of the U.S., has reversed the decree of the Circuit Court of Ohio, which recently declared against giving the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a part of the assets of the Cincinnati book publishing concern, held exclusively by the Methodist Episcopal Church since the separation of that denomination in 1840; and has remanded the cause for further proceedings.

—The steamer Northern Light, from San Francisco brings unfavourable intelligence from the mining regions. An unusual number of murders and assassinations had occurred throughout the state.

—Two factions of Chinese numbering several hundred each, had a pitched battle at the mines in Eldorado County, California. Some were killed and many wounded.

—The Spanish Government has made reparation for the injury sustained in the Black Warrior case.

—An important resolution has been presented by Mr. Dean, relative to the policy of the U. S. Government, respecting the European war. The resolution affirms it to be the duty of the government to maintain strict neutrality between all the belligerents, and demands the maintenance of the principle that he ships make for goods except as to articles clearly known as contraband of war; and that goods on board a neutral vessel should not be subject to confiscation. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

—Mr. Cullen, of Tennessee, made a speech against the Nebraska bill, denouncing it as a nefarious project, the work of certain politicians to struggle legislation for their own personal agrandizement.

—Miss Delia Webster has been again imprisoned in Ky., on a chage of aiding in the escape of slaves.

—Governor Seymur, of New York, has vetoed the prohibitory law because he is opposed to "unreasonable searches ad seizures."

—Opposition to the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, is coming to be very general in Missouri. Anti-Slavry is rapidly on the increase in that state, and present appearances would indicate that emancipation will ensue at no distant period.

—The Anti-Slavery Convention recently held in Cincinnati was spirited gathering. Among the speakers were Rev. Samuel J. May, Lucy Stone, Frederick Dglass and E. Emigrants from the States will bear in mind, that if they leave the cars at Windsor to take the boat for Chatham, they leave a certainty for an uncertainty. *

Summary of News.

A new proposal for negociations has been forwarded from the Czar, through Prince George of Mecklenburg, Strelitz; but unconditionally rejected by the Allied Powers.

The fleet has sailed from Kioge Bay.

On the reception of the news that war had been formally declared against Russia, Sir Charles Napier issued the following address:

"Lads—war is declared. We are to meet a bold and numerous enemy. Should they offer us battle you know how to dispose of them. Should they remain in port we must try to get at them. Success depends upon the quickness and precision of your fire. Lads, sharpen your cutlasses and the day is your own."

The negociations with Austria and Prussia are not yet closed. Austria appears to be acting more in unison with the Western Powers. Prussia leans more to the Czar.

Hanover sides with the Powers, as also all the minor German states, except Bavaria.

From the seat of war there is much confusion in the reports. It appears, however, that on the 20th of March a sanguinary encounter took place at Kalafat, which lasted for four hours, in which the Russians were routed; also at Hirsova a large body of Russian troops having been allowed a free passage, were attacked in the rear, and after a hard struggle, half of them were cut to pieces. The remainder retreated across the Danube.

It is also stated, that 30000 Russians had crossed the Danube, at Galatz, without opposition

The English and French vessels on the coast of Thessaly, have orders to search all suspected vessels, and to seize those in which munitions of war were found.

Three thousand French troops arrived at Constantinople on the 3rd inst.

The Declaration of war of France and England had cause great rejoicing in Constantinople.

The allied fleets were in the Black Sea near Varna. Sir Charles Napiers fleet had suddenly put to sea in consequence of the ice having broken up in the Baltic. The London Post, of the 14th, says, that Admiral Napier having received intelligence that sixteen Russian ships of war were anchored at Helsingfors, on the Northern side of the Gulf of Finland, expecting to sail for the Port of Revel, on the south side, had started off in pursuit of them.

It was reported that three American ships were somewhere in the Baltic, with stores for the Russians, and an English steamer was dispatched to search for them.

There is still no intelligence of the missing steamship City of Glasgow

In consequence of the Easter holidays, matters were dull throughout England, and Parliament was not in session.

Two marine engines built for the Russian Government have been seized at the Napier works on the Clyde.

The Duke of Cambridge, Lord Raglan and his staff, arrived at Paris on the 11th, and Napoleon held a grand review upon the occasion, when 25, 000 troops were assembled.

The Duke of Cambridge was the bearer of an autograph letter from Queen Victoria to the Emperor Napoleon.

SPAIN.—Forty thousand artisans filled the streets of Barcelona on the 13th. They were unarmed, and when summoned to disperse they refused. They then turned their steps towards the Garcia suburb, in order to join their comrades outside the walls. The gates were then barred by the troops, who, when pelted with stones by the mob, had recourse to their arms. The result was that several of the mob were killed and wounded, after which they dispersed

The Liverpool Trade Circulars report the market for breadstuffs firm, with an upward tendency, and prices considerably higher—advance quoted at 1s., with a speculative demand.

The demand for Provisions is fair and holders are firm, with moderate sales to the trade. Messrs. Gardner's Circular reports Beef unchanged in price with a moderate demand at previous rates. Bacon is considerably lower; prices have declined 1s; Hams and Shoulders are quiet

Local Items.

The County of York Agricultural Exhibition was held on the 28th. A fine lot of horses, including some of recent importations were shown. But two cattle were exhibited.

—A fight was permitted on Church St. on the evening of the show. The parties were drunk but no arrests made.

—Many of the yards in this city are in a very bad condition just now. Wonder whose duty it is to see that one part of the citizens does not poison the rest, by suffering matters of filth to accumulate on their premises. If cholera is in the lower province may we not expect a visit? Is there a City Inspector?

—One hundred and five pounds was realized by the managers of the late soiree for the sisters of St. Joseph.

For the Provincial Freman.

MR. EDITOR, Dear friend: I don't know what I can say any thing that will be of interest to yourself or readers; but since you have had the kindness to forward me a copy of your valuable paper, I will take the liberty to inform you of some of the reflections it has made on my mind, in relation to it, and similar enterprises.

I have often thought of how your Press is to be sustained. If those who have succeeded in placing it in its present position, will promptly receive from those who profess to be friendly, in Cash Subscriptions, and from other sources, that amount of pecuniary aid and encouragement necessary to guarantee its necessary triumph!

As needful as Presses are among us and as greatly as they would tend, I believe, if properly conducted, to elevate the oppressed classes in this Country and such as have sought refuge in Canada—yet I confess to a little misgiving, whenever I hear it rumored, that one is to be started, however worthy the Proprietor may be.

When casting my eyes over the county, in localities where our people are the most intelligent, most comfortably to do in the world, and professedly most earnestly contending for their rights, I should be more hopeful, if a considerable number could reasonably be counted upon, who would as soon lay hold of the enterprise, as nine out of ten are accustomed to excuse themselves, for reasons like the following:. "I am not quite prepared now—may take it after a while"—"I think about it and let you know"—"must the subscription be paid in advance?" I subscribed once, but the Paper stopped before my time was out, and I fear this will do so too." "I wouldn't mind taking it if I did not have to pay till the year is up," of course rents and other numerous debts are spoken of, making in the whole a catalogue of excuses quite to lengthy too detail.

Of "Agents," it may be said, also, that as a general thing, they do nothing in the way of procuring subscribers, &c. Indeed in many instances where they do receive subscriptions they either forget that the Publisher is in want of it, and that they are bound to forward it promptly; or they take the liberty to appropriate it to their own use for a month or two—probably, entirely—thereby throwing another obstacle in the way of the paper's success.

To my mind it seems passing strange that it does not occur to those who are everlastingly making trifling excuses in order to get shut of foregoing their little dollar, when solicited to support a paper—that the sad failures about which they harp so much—and which all regret—are in fact, mainly attributed to themselves, notwithstanding the allowance to be made on account of mismanagement and a want of discretion on the part of some who have been foolish enough to suppose, as leaders, they could command the respect and patronage of the public. Yet were it not for this general prevalence—"a little more sleep, a little more slumber," &c., on the part of so many in our ranks, doubtless the fact that the colored people of this country have never liberally supported a single paper advocating their rights, would no longer be allowed to confront us, so much to our shame and detriment. And it may not be amiss to remark here, that Anti-Slavery Journals, conducted by our white friends have suffered in a similar manner, by this "folding of hands," &c.

Now it can't be said that it is on account of our poverty that we are not more willing and active in supporting Anti-Slavery Papers; for it is too obvious to all that the Pro. Slavery Presses of the land, are liberally patronised by us—nor do we fear expenses if we want to adorn ourselves to be seen in a parade of some sort; or to go on an excursion; to a picknick; fancy Ball, sumptuous supper, &c. &c. Probably not an individual who indulges in these pleasures—and many there are—who fails, on any one occasion alluded to, to spend double the amount of the subscription price of Anti-Slavery Paper, in the Country. At any rate, to take all things into consideration, the estimate must be within bounds of the truth.

Again, only think, this great waste of money, this foolishly impowering ourselves, adds largely to the capital of our oppressors—the whites. The very steam boats, omnibuses, &c., which ordinarily treats us with disdain, and exclude us from their common comforts, are frequently chartered by us, the next day, at enormous outlay, that we may gratify our fancy. I hesitate not to say, that could the money in this city alone, spent foolishly, in the manner I have alluded to—be appropriated to establish a Press, the object now would be permanently effected.

But lest you may think that I have been looking on the dark side of the picture too much, and have been thereby caused to throw discouragement in your way, I will add—far be it from me to despair, or to feel that there is no improvement going on among us, or that your enterprise has been unnecessarily commenced. Indeed the reverse is my position, precisely, in relation to objects just alluded to.

And I hope you will, daily have some tangible evidence from many friends strengthening your hands and encouraging your heart, in your present undertaking. It cannot be denied but that the interest felt in behalf of the Fugitives in Canada, as well as in relation to Canada in general, is [illegible] of the friends of the cause, throughout this entire country. In consideration of these facts, alone, therefore, it seems reasonable to suppose that very many, may be found to subscribe to the "Provincial Freeman"—especially if its claims could be fairly laid before the people, by those who would actively interest themselves in getting subscribers.

It is to be hoped also that the Editor's very successful tower in England, &c. will add not a little to the prosperity of the paper. I have had the gratification from time to time, of reading the highly creditable notices, from the British Press, of his course abroad, from the time he first went till he accomplished his labours.

Yours truly,

W. S.

Philadelphia, April 17th, 1854.

For the Provincial Freeman

MR. FREEMAN:—In looking over the columns of your paper this morning, I was agreeably surprised at seeing a communication from a lady.—I was surprised because, among your numerous communications, I have not before seen one from a female. I belong to "that class styled the weaker sex," and with your correspondent, this is my first communication for the press. I can sympathise with her in her state of anxiety in reference to the probable fate of her first attempt; and yet such a writer need never fear of bringing down anything like ridicule upon herself, for trying to make a leap beyond her ability; the only danger would be in her extreme modesty, which might lead her from very fearfulness, to beg as a favor that which is hers by right. Now, Mr. Editor, I wish to give you a few crude thoughts which occurred to me when reading the communication above referred to.

In the first place, your correspondent addresses you for the purpose of ascertaining whether you will receive communications coming from one of her sex. I cannot describe to you my feelings on reading that passage. The idea that now, "in the afternoon of the nineteenth century," a woman should have to ask that question, seems ridiculous. Not that it is not getting to be quite a common circumstance for women to write for papers, and that therefore your correspondent should have known it, and not have asked such a question, but the fact that such a question has been asked by a woman, shows that here there may be a vast amount of latent talent which might be used with advantage, if woman was only taught that her mental faculties are God-given, and are therefore to be used,—that no one has a right to hinder her from doing that which God has as manifestly commanded her to do, as if it had been written with his finger on tables of stone, by having given her the power to do, and the will to put that power into execution. In the second place, she does not wish to be regarded as one seeking to make innovations upon time-honored customs, but tain't that it would seem like presumption in her were she ever so well qualified, for that would be attempting that which some of the most giant intellects of the present century have failed to accomplish. Now, in truth, I cannot see why there should be any semblance of presumption, supposing her to be qualified, though all the "giant intellects" combined had failed to accomplish it, though she had never been to a common school; for the necessary qualifications, of course pre-suppose the ability obtained by some means, no matter what, and having the ability to lop off some old dead branch that has been hanging on the social tree, it may be for centuries—though the lopping off may be considered an innovation—my firm conviction is that it is her right, nay her duty, to press boldly forward to her appointed task, otherwise she is guilty of burying her talent. Who then dare charge her with presumption?

In the third and last place, she says: "As a class, we make no unreasonable demands of those who style themselves our superiors; all we ask is to receive that encouragement to which our merit entitles us." Now the fact of saying, "we make no unreasonable demands," warrants the inference that we feel under the necessity of making reasonable demands, of those who style themselves our superiors, an inference from which I feel bound to dissent, for, if as it has been above shown, we have the right to the free exercise of our mental faculties, direct from God himself, would it not be preposterous to ask of man that which he has not the power to give?—he like woman, is but a creature dependant upon his Creator for his own rights, not a dispenser to others of what he has not the power of obtaining by his own strength. It is not in the economy of the Infinite to dispense such blessings second handed, they emanate direct ly from him; when he creates he confers the gift.

Should "Henrietta" fear that I am inclined to deal harshly with her, she has but to reflect that timid adventurers should never take such exposed positions as the columns of a newspaper; and Mr. Freeman, as I fear that I am encroaching upon your patience as well as space, I shall close, hoping that your columns may continue to be as they now are, a medium through which the rights of all may be discussed.

DOLLY BANGS.

THE COMPLIMENTARY BANQUET to the Earl of Elgin, in London, seems, from reports given by those who were present, to have been a most magnificent affair. We give, in another column, copious extracts from the principal speeches delivered on the occasion. Lord John Russell's speech, is as liberal in tone as could be desired. He has entirely discarded the opinion, once expressed, that to establish local self-government in Canada, was equivalent to a separation from the mother country; he concedes to Canada the right to adopt such political institutions as she may choose; and considers the experiment made thus far, as eminently satisfactory.

Canada is rising rapidly in popularity in England; and we hope after a while to be able to convince some of our friends in the States, that the Canadians are not so destitute of enterprise as they imagine; albeit, that the Province produces something besides ice, snow and bear-skins. D.

ORIGIN OF THE CHINESE REBELLION.

The Rev. Mr. Tyson Yates, an American Baptist missionary at Shanghai, has sent home the following account of what he believes to be the true origin of the present movement in China. We copy from the Independent:

SHANGHAI, Sept 23. '53.

There are at present stopping in our mission, two lads whose identity is not known except to our mission. One a boy of fifteen, is the son of a "Southern King;" the other, a lad of eighteen or twenty, who was on last Sabbath received in our church by baptism, is the nephew and adopted son of the "Southern King." one of the four great leaders of the rebellion in China. From these young men, the elder of whom is well acquainted with all the circumstances that led to the first hostile demonstrations we have been able to get correct information touching the origin of the rebellion.

From these young men we learn that Hung-Su-Chuen, at present known as Taiping-wong, having embraced the Christian religion, destroyed every sign of idolatry about his house and school-room, for he was a teacher of a high school, and gave much attention to publishing the Gospel. Disciples to the new doctrine multiplied rapidly. Soon this innovation upon the ancient customs attracted the attention of the authorities of Quang See—for it was in this interior province, far removed from foreign influence, that this new sect was daily and rapidly increasing, they, the civil and military authorities, beheaded two of the disciples, thinking that this rigid measure would suppress this disorderly body. But so far from having this effect they, the Christians, who had increased by this time to quite a considerable number, took arms in defence of their religion, and called upon God to aid and defend them.

The Imperialists, in an engagement with them, were routed with great loss. The Christian army increased rapidly, till they were able to withstand any force that might be brought against them. The Christian army was now fairly committed. They well knew that they must be delivered from the bondage of the imperial yoke, both civil and religious, or death was certain. They formed the design of subverting the government, with the intention of establishing in its stead a liberal and Christian government.

They issued tracts and circulars, in which they attacked the abuses and corruptions of the civil authorities, and the religious teachers, &c. They destroyed idols, and circulated portions of the Scriptures and religious tracts, and preached to the people purer religion. All this, strange to say secured them the favour of the people and Hung-Su-Chuen commenced preaching about three years ago. In every place he exposes the corruption of the mandarins and priests, destroys idols, circulates the Scriptures and religious tracts, many of which are his own productions, in which, of course, there are many errors, and preaches the Gospel. His main army is now before Pekin. Considering all the circumstances of the present rebellion in China viewed either in a civil or religious point of view. it is without a parallel in the history of the world.

Dreadful Shipwreck and Loss of Life.

One of the most heart-rending and fatal shipwrecks that has been recorded for some time, occurred on the 15th inst. Some of the particulars are given below:

Within the memory of man such a storm as that which commenced on Friday, the 14th, and lasted during the three succeeding days, has not been known. The coast, strewn with fragments of shipping, told of its unparalleled fury. The fierce northeaster was felt even here, and damage was done to vessels in our sheltered harbor. What wonder that, the Powhattan—an old ship of about six hundred tons—became ungovernable and struggled fruitlessly in the waters? What wonder that, on Saturday last, after running before the gale for hours under bare poles, she found herself at last irretrievably entangled in the shoals about twelve miles below Barnegat inlet?

So it was. The ship, laden with passengers, left Havre for New York on the 1st of March last, under the command of Capt. Meyers, of Baltimore. She was driven among the shoals at the place we have indicated above, and remained there until Sunday evening at five o'clock before she went to pieces. It was observed by the anxious eye-witnesses on shore that directly she struck, she "hauled to the wind," from which circumstance it was impossible for any of her passengers to leave without certain death being the result. They however hoped for the best. They trusted that the storm which had now lasted so long must soon abate. During the long night of Saturday and the whole of Sunday the unfortunates—it is supposed some two hundred and fifty in number—were seen clinging to the leeward bulwarks of the ship with the sea continually washing over them and expecting that at the rise of every swelling wave. No assistance could be offered them, for the sea then ran so high that a boat, (if any had been at hand,) would have been instantly swamped.

Between 4 and 5 o'clock on Sunday afternoon the ship's bulwarks burst, and about fifty persons, at the same moment, were washed overboard. Mr. Jennings, the wreck master, with others, made great efforts to save some of those who were in the water, but in vain. The captain, too, was heard to cry from the ship, "For God's sake save some of those who are drowning." Every exertion was made, but it was no use; and in all the six bodies which the wreck-master succeeded in rescuing from the water, life was extinct.

It was immediately after this that the ship commenced going to pieces in earnest. No small boats were to be procured, for the government boats not arrive till all was over. About five o'clock the vessel was completely broken up; most of her passengers and crew were drowned, but a few still survived, clinging to pieces of the wreck. The shrieks of the dying rose even above the roaring of the storm, which seemed to be increasing rather that subsiding in fury. It was at this moment that a huge wave was noticed rolling inwards—the dead and the dying were alike engulphed within it—and when it had passed over them, there was not one left alive of those passengers and crew of the ill-fated Powhatan, who numbered two hundred and fifty souls that same morning. A singular fact connected with this is, that even the ship itself was splintered into minute fragments, so that scarcely a trace of her existence remained, with the exception of a few pieces of rigging that were washed ashore.—She was probably laden with heavy ballast, as her hull is supposed to have sunk, or else some portion of it must have been discovered.

More distressing even than such a sight as this, to those on shore, was the sight of the beach next morning. The storm had increased during the night, and the waves cast up their dead far and near. Twenty six men and two women were discovered near the scene of the shipwreck, and from Absecom—some twenty miles below—we learn that about forty bodies—men, women and children—had been washed ashore on that and on Brigantine Beach, about a quarter of a mile across the channel. Those seen by our reporter appeared to have been Germans. They were all much disfigured, and when our reporter left, bodies were still drifting ashore. Twenty-eight of those found were decently buried at Manahawkin, amid the profound sensation which the event has caused in that village. Mr. Joel Hayward, a citizen of Westcreek, picked up the body of a lady while crossing the bay on Tuesday; and it is believed that many others will be discovered there as soon as the weather becomes more favorable

Little has been collected yet from the wreck to prove the identity of the deceased parties. Some melancholy records, however, have been saved, and are now in charge of Mr. Jennings, the wreck master, at Manahawkin. About thirty-five passenger's boxes were washed ashore unbroken. Money has been found. Around one man's waist a belt was clasped, containing $40—his all probably—that he vainly sought to save. On this belt the name of "G. Kill" was engraved Several of the trunks bore respectively the initials "T G." "S. G;" an a nother "Philip Smith, for New York," A lady's ring was found, with the initials "K. L." inscribed upon it.

The government has no person to take charge of the life boats, and the public prints of the city having been in the habit of stirring the people along the shore, accusing them of land pirating, &c., no man now goes from the main to the beach, except when sent for, and then of course it is often too late. Had it not been for the late Judge Baldwin's charge to the jury, that every man on the beach is liable for any misdemeanor committed at a wreck, and some of the people hereabouts. there would have been help enough to have had the life-boats manned voluntarily and in season. When a storm first set in people here are not now willing to cross a bay in it, four or five miles, to a lonely beach, for the sole purpose of watching for wrecks. at no pay except abuse. Would New Yorkers do it?

A messenger from the beach states that only one man from either vessel was saved—a hand from the Manhatten—a Portland topsail schooner, not a brig. It seems that the sea broke completly over the beach in every direction. The dead bodies present the most heart sickening appearance. The bark is supposed to be from Hamburgh.

A later account says: When discovered by Captain Jennings, of Long Beach, which was on Sunday morning, she lay with her head to the south, the decks were crowded with passengers, and the sea was making a clean breach over her. The wind blowing a perfect gale from the north-east, the waves ran mountains high, twisting the ship about in the sand as if she were merely a cork boat.

About seven o'clock, the ship's masts went by the board, and almost immediately afterwards the hull burst in two, and every soul on board was launched into eternity. The sea presented a black mass of human heads and floating pieces of the wreck, but in a few moments all had sunk to rise alive no more. The beach was strewn with the dead bodies of women and children, pieces of the wreck, the baggage of the passengers, and empty casks. Nothing remained to mark the spot where the ill-fated ship had gone ashore, except surging waves beating upon a fragment of the hulk which lay upon the beach.

The crying of the drowning men and the shrieking of the women and children was hushed—all lay in the deep numbered with the dead, while the wind wailed loud and mournfully, adding still more horror to the awful catastrophe. All had sunk—captain, officers, crew and passengers, of two hundred and fifty persons—not a soul was left to tell the tale. No aid came from the government house that night, and Captain Jennings was compelled to remain there by himself, a lonely watcher of the dead.

On Monday morning four men arrived from the station house, but their help came too late. The storm, it seems, was so severe that while on their way back to the wreck on Sunday, with the life car and mortar, two of them fell down exhausted, and the whole party were obliged to return nearly frozen to death. This party of men, under command of Captain Jennings, set immediately about finding and gathering together those bodies which had been washed ashore. In the short space of an hour nearly twenty women and children were found, almost naked, scattered along the beach, some of them dreadfully bruised and cut.

One man was found about fifty yards from the beach, upon the sandhills, with a child in his arms; and from his condition it is supposed that he alone of all on board reached the shore alive, and crawling out of reach of the waves, in order to save his own life and that of the infant in his arms, fell down exhausted on the sand, and was frozen to death during the night. The child was firmly locked in his arms, quite dead, and appeared as if it had also died from exposure.

The whole of this day was spent in searching for the bodies of the unfortunate people. But one man was found among the number, all the rest being women and children.—They appeared to have been in excellent health, with rosy cheeks and smiling faces, looking as if they were asleep rather than dead. They were all laid side by side, until a boat could be got to carry them to the shore.—N. Y. Herald.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?—The following note to the Editor of the N. Y. Tribune appeared in that paper a short time since:

SIR:—A few days since, a paragraph entitled "The Veteran Printer," was copied in the Tribune, in which occurred the following sentence:

"Three of his children, certainly are widely known in the world of letters, viz: N. P. Willis, Mrs. Farrington, (Fanny Fern) and R S Willis."

So far as the foregoing statement refers to me it is incorrect With due reference to Mrs. Grundy and Paul Pry, Esq., I beg to state that several years since, by a sudden reverse of fortune, I was deprived of all my relatives

Respectfully,

COLONIAL POSTAGE.—An important reduction in colonial postage is on the point of being carried out. It is intended to reduce the postage between Great Britain and the colonies to a uniform rate of sixpence on letters not weighing more than half an ounce. On the 23rd of April the reduction will take place with regard to the following colonies, viz:—Canada, Prince Edward's Island, Bermuda, British West Indies (Barbadoes and Turk's Island excepted) British Guiana, Bahamas, Belize, Malta and Gibraltar; and on the 1st May the same reduction will be made in the postage on letters between this country and Ceylon, St. Helena, Hongkong, and the Gold Coast.

WOMEN'S LABOR.—Mrs. Davis, in an editorial letter from Washington to her paper, the Una, speaking of new avocations for women, says: Two ladies are here attached to the Coast Survey Office, who have been engaged three years, the other six months. They have been occupied with computations and magnetics, are now engaged upon tides They are paid monthly from the Coast Survey Office, exactly the same as men would be doing the same work

The petitions on the just and equal rights of women, were received very cavalierly by the New Jersey Legislature, but they did not appear to think Mrs. Merriman at all out of her sphere.

The Legislature of Tennessee passed, at its last session, a law to regulate the emancipation of slaves. It provides for the transportation to the western coast of Africa, of all slaves her tofore or hereafter liberated, and all free persons of color who fail to give bond for good behaviour. INTER-COLONIAL TREATY.—In the Nova Scotia House of Assembly, a resolution was passed requesting the Lieut.-Governor to enter into negociations with the Governor-General of Canada, and the Lieut-Governors of New Brunswick, Prince Edward's Island and Newfoundland, with the view to a more unrestricted commercial intercourse between them.

SACRILEGE.—Last night between the hours of 11 p m. and 5 a. m. some person or persons broke through a cellar window, into the Roman Catholic Cathedral, entered the vestry, and opened a case, from which they extricted six Silver plated Candlesticks, on Chalice and a Crucifix, valued at $50 or $60. WANTS TO EMANCIPATE.—We learn that Mr. Christy, agent of the Colonization Society, has been offered a group of slaves, in one of the Southern States, value at $12,000. The owner cannot emancipate them where he lives, and must remove them to some other State to effect his purpose. He has educated the parents with a view to sending them to Liberia, and is now desirous of accomplishing his design.

In view of the uncertainties attending the execution of wills, in reference to slave property, and the liabilities of his slaves being scattered after his death, he thus closes his appeal to Mr. Christy: "I abhor the thought of their being sold after I die. My reason for wishing to emancipate now is, I don't wish the devil to get my soul, and the lawyers my money. Pity me for Jesus, sake, and give me good council. Your brother in Christ."

Mr. C. informs us he has written to the owner that he accept the offer, as he feels confident the citizens of Ohio will enable him to send them to Liberia.—Cincinnati Times.

NEW DISCOVERIES IN NINEVEH.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, writing from Mosul says:

"A new palace has been uncovered in the ruins of Nineveh—a palace whose beauty excels any yet found in Assyria.

"Hungo monsters—compounds of the lion, man and eagle—guard the entrances. The slabs are in fine preservation, representing the King and his officers at a lion hunt, war scene and a victory, a state procession led by eunuchs the King's chariot being drawn by men, with altars and priests and griffins—in fine, picture of Assyrian manners and religion as they were three thousand years ago. The workmanship is most exquisite. The slabs are to adorn the walls of the British Museum"

Fugitive Slaves in Canada

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves residing in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been deputed by the Anti Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of everything, having generally fled stealthily, and without making such preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey being in constant peril by the way not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern or non-slave States. At any point if we detect or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which, should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honorably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him Lastly his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the unfitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon Race, or any other of the one great human family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. WARD, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating the need of temporary and immediate relief upon their arrival in that Colony—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B GRIBBLE, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. THOMAS JAMES, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on their arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number.

Miscellaneous.

The Life Guage.

They err who measure life by years,
With line of thought or span of days;
Some hearts grow old before their time;
Others are always young!

'Tis not the number of the lines
On life's fast filling page;
'Tis not the pulse's added throbs
Which constitutes their age.

Brave souls are serfs among the free,
While others nobly strive;
They yet can feel where their fathers stood,
Determined while they live!

Others, all spirit, heart and sense—
Theirs the mysterious power
To live in thrill of joy or woe,
A twelvemonth in an hour.

Seize, then, the minutes as they pass—
The woof of life is Thought!
Warm up the colors, let them glow,
By fire of fancy caught.

Live to some purpose,—make thy life
A gift of use to thee;
A joy, a good, a golden hope,
A heavenly argosy.

DR. DUFF ON CANADA.

The following extract from the address of this distinguished Missionary on the progress of Canada, will be interesting to our readers.

But now, as the time is brief, I must say one or two words with regard to this Canada of yours. I think I have remarked somewhere already that I cannot help feeling that since in our day the facilities of travelling, by land and by water, are so multiplied, I do hope and trust that the day is not far distant when some of the lords across the water, in Great Britain, instead of going over and spending their five and six or eight weeks, wandering up and down over Popish countries in Europe, will take the more rational plan of devoting ten days to the Atlantic—that is no great thing—and even though it were only ten days to Canada as the railways now-a-days would in that time carry them all over the country, and even into the backwoods. If any reasonable people would come over here and devote them five or six weeks to visiting Canada, they would go back with a world of new ideas, that would form new bonds of connection between the several members of our apparently dissevered empire; that would bind them together as in chains of adamant, in love, and unanimity of sentiment. For my own part, I simply and frankly confess, that though I had endeavoured to read continually what came in my way about Canada, and attended meetings of Colonial Committees, and heard letters, and so on, I do frankly confess, that brief though the time has been that I have been in Canada, I have already got more light and understanding on the subject of Canada, than I had got all the previous years of my life together. This is just what we ought to cry out in the ears of the British people; and methinks there is a great want in our educational system in Great Britain in this respect. I am led to think of this when I look at the state of things among our neighbors here, who are undoubtedly a great people, one in blood and religion with ourselves. I see quite well how intently they look after this, keeping up the knowledge of what their country is, and what their countrymen have done, and what the United States are, and showing all this forth in their school-books. I feel there ought to be a cry from Canada, and Australia, and India, to the people of Great Britain, dunning and dunning them continually, until they were obliged at last to put into their school-books some intelligible notices of the various members of the great British empire thus inoculating the minds of the British children with some proper ideas and conceptions on the subject, so that when they grew up to be men, whether as merchants or legislators, or governors, or what not, they would know the relative importance of every part of the British Empire. Why should we not aim at this? I see nothing to prevent it: quite the contrary. I look upon it as a shame to our country, that we have such an empire, and that those who ought to be the heads and leaders of that empire, are brought up from the days of infancy without knowing anything about it. Thousands of them could tell you everything about the seige of Troy, who could not tell you anything about the seige of Quebec. They will tell you everything about the endless little minutiæ connected with the Peloponesian war, and are able to tell you nothing of the contests that have been carried on in the Canadas, where so much has been done, and so much blood shed for the preservation of the integrity of the British Empire. All this ought to be understood. It is not very long ago that some one published, with regard to this Metropolis of Toronto, that it was on the borders of Lake Ontario, overhanging Kingston. (Laughter.) Now, friends, I am prepared to testify that there is nothing like seeing, and nothing like hearing. And when one comes to this region over the water, he is surprised at his previous ignorance, arising from the absence of instruction in school-books, more especially as to what is to be found westward of Montreal. We hear of the Hudson's Bay Company, and bearskins and such like, and we imagine that the whole region to the Pacific contains nothing but wild animals. Whereas, when you go westward, even two hundred miles west of Toronto, you find on a river called the Thames, though not quite so large as the original Thames, and at any rate not bearing so many ships upon its waters, a town calling itself London, and another calling itself Chatham, of great and growing importance. Perhaps they appear on the maps, but the maps themselves are so perplexingly small, not much bigger than the map of Scotland, that nine-tenths of intelligent men and women at home, have no idea that the United States and Canada are bigger than Scotland. The other day I was at London, and at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, I found an audience on a week-day, such as would have done credit to any of the ordinary towns of England and Scotland. I found the same thing at Hamilton, on a larger scale. Well, I say, facts like these would fall like strange tales on the ears of the people across the water, for they think there is nothing but forests, bears, and beasts with horrid skins, and endless dreadful frost and snow; they hear of noses falling off; it is quite extraordinary the opinions that are prevalent there.—And yet a meeting of this sort, I venture to say, in Great Britain, in Edinburgh, or in London, could not have a more thoroughly civilized appearance. The idea of these regions being given up to nothing but arctic frigid barbarism and bearskins, such an antiquated idea as this, we should do all we can to extirpate, and if spared I may have an opportunity of showing by and by, that these are not mere words of course that I am speaking. I had an exemplification furnished me the other day of what this railway which has been opened westward from Niagara to Detroit, is likely to do for this region. A respected friend, a brother minister, mentioned to me at London, that the person who had managed the stage line between Niagara and Detroit told him that the average number of passengers conveyed in a whole twelvemonth, used to vary somewhat between 1,500 and 2,000. The other evening—and the railway is not yet quite completed, there being still some quicksands that tumble down now and then—all which, however, will soon be rectified—it so happened that there was an accident. The engine took it into its head to run off the line, but happily it was noticed in time to prevent the passenger cars from being overturned. In this train there were between six and seven hundred passengers, and while they were detained another train came up with three hundred more.—The train from the east next came up with 600 passengers, so that it really happened that at that station, in the neighbourhood of Paris, there were congregated at one and the same moment of time that evening, not fewer than 1,500 passengers, nearly as many as used to be conveyed by the stage in a whole twelvemonth. That was in one day, and that not in the travelling season of the year. By and by, you will have floods of travellers across the Niagara Falls to see what is going on in Canada. But this shows what you have to expect from the railway, and you can see, already, that short as the time has been since the railway first passed through certain regions it has awakened a new spirit of enterprise among the Canadians. In travelling along through the forest, you see new log-houses erected and trees beginning to be felled, indicating that the moment the railway was opened the spirit of enterprise took a spring forward.

I believe that within a short space of time the whole of the track opened up by that railway will be turned into as thoroughly cultivated a garden as will be found in the whole world. And westward you must push until you reach the Pacific Ocean, and we shall be pushing eastward until the extremes meet, and sometime or other, we shall be shaking hands. If such be the material prosperity of Canada, need I remind you, dear friends and brethren, that there is an absolute necessity for being more rigid in paying attention to the intellectual and the spiritual, lest the material may make progress, but in advancing, leave the other two behind. If so, unsanctified prosperity, instead of being a blessing will prove a curse. Let us thank God that much is doing already in this respect, as I have witnessed in this city in the way of schools and colleges, and that there is a preparation for doing a still greater work also, into the details of which I need not enter. Oh, then, let progress be made more and more in these directions and departments; so that, whatever material prosperity there may be, under the gracious Providence of God, there may be corresponding progress made intellectual and the spiritual; and then that material prosperity will be tempered and regulated and directed by that which is high and noble and spiritual and good. It is in the conjunction of the two fully realised, that we shall see the perfection of humanity that we shall see a renovated earth. You have, then, before you great and boundless prospects. Oh, that God may rend His heavens and come down, and cause His Divine Spirit to shed His blessed influences more and more into the souls of the people, that it may not be found of this people, that while they are getting fat (so to speak) on the things of the earth, they are getting lean as to the things of heaven; for that heaven will end not only in languishment, but in death.

WOMEN OF CONSTANTINOPLE

Bayley St. John, in "Turks in Europe," gives the following account of the amusements of the women of Constantinople:—"Nearly all Turkish women sally out every Friday to take the air, away from the town, on the banks of the Bosphorus, or to some of the places where water and shade may be found. The wealthy go in carts without springs, of unwieldly and primitive construction—six or seven heaped together; and sometimes their husbands lead the oxen or horses to the chosen spot, and then go away, leaving the women perfectly free to enjoy themselves as they please. The most popular amusements are the singing and music of the gipsey women, who repair thither for the purpose—music which is a nourously languid, and singing which is detestably indecent. A lunch is generally brought out, and when this is despatched, smoking and drinking commence—drinking, not of sherbert, but of good brandy, and other strong liquors, which soon induce a boisterous gayety, so that the sultanas, whom we often imagine as pining away imprisoned, may be seen rolling in convulsions of inextinguishable laughter on the turf, or huddled up in a still more advanced stage of intoxication, like a bundle of rags. Their Montenegrin servants, who are the privileged beholders of these scenes, are often compelled to load them into their carts, in which they are jolted back to the harem. Those who are not too far gone, frequently pull up in passing through the Christian quarter, at the doors of taverns, to get more drink; and a file of a hundred carts may often be seen stopping in one street, and full of women, some made mad and chattering by their excess, and others hanging sleepily about and murmuring to be taken home. There is a walk planted with elm trees, not far from the city, where only women are admitted. Two or three thousand assemble there at a time, and, sitting upon a verdant slope, enjoy the pantomime of a comedy, which some infamous Jews, hired for the purpose, perform on the limits of the forbidden ground for their amusement. On these occasions, it would scarcely be possible for a stranger to recognize eastern life from the descriptions he is accustomed to read. The free conduct of the women has more than once attracted the attention of the government, which not very long ago published an edict, complaining that they remained out late at night; that they rode forth in coaches with young Christian drivers; that they ventured into shops, especially those of apothecaries; and even pushed their audacity so far as to eat ices in the Frankish coffee-houses of Galata and Pera. The edict accordingly recommended that early hours should be kept, and forbade women to enter shops of any kind, or to be driven about by young coachmen. These interferences with manners which were supposed to be great advantages in civilization, and which seem strangely accompanied by proclamations giving permission for women to appear on the public promenades, were of course ineffectual. The women continue their old customs, though some have been hanged or drowned for being found in the back shops of Christians. It will require something else besides repressive measures to bring about a reform in this respect. All laws in the East, moreover, have the temporary character of proclamations. They are applied for a day and forgotten. It is forbidden, for example, most expressly, for shopmen to have any other than old men for servants; and they almost without exception have spruce dashing young attendants.

The Earth is full of Sunshine.

The earth is full of sunshine,
When the heart is full of glee,
For the light within our spirit
Shines on everything we see:
Then it finds the smallest trifles
For its happiness suffice.
And pleasure in the simplest thing
As in the thing of price.

There is sunshine in the flowers,
In the shadowy forest trees—
There is sunshine in the rippling brook
That whispers with the breeze:
It looks on us from every face,
The homely and the fair;
And the happier the spirit feels,
The more it seeks to share.

A lovely thing is sunshine
And gladness is one of its gifts,
And more beautiful the sunny heart
That all things lives to bless—
That is always seeing something
For which to render praise
A spirit full of thankfulness
In all its works and ways.

That can pass along earth's pilgrimage,
And not think all untrue,
To whom earth's hope seems not a shade,
(Alas! they are but few)—
And the bitters leave for others, extracting but the sweet.
For such hearts make their own happiness
From everything they meet.

And they who thus unruffled
Glide down the stream of life,
With a spirit that elastic springs
From all their care and strife,
Have a well of joy within them
That not lightly will depart,
For they bear about their Paradise,
A kind and joyous heart

And are not such more happy,
And more likely to be right,
Than they who would persuade us earth
Hath nought for us but night?
For I say—and his a doctrine
That many will receive—
There is hope for every one on earth,
If they only will believe!—M. L. Murray.

MODERN EFFEMINACY.

After all, deny it who may, we are overreaching in our habits: we run too much to mind and mental exertion, and too little to muscle and muscular exercise; we become too much, far too much, the slaves of an elaborate civilization—of a subdivision in the labour of social intercourse; too much dependent on each other—too little dependent on ourselves. A statistical return of the number of persons in the higher classes of life, who have ever seen the sun rise for a week together, or who are fit for anything before breakfast, would be a warning and a caution to us all. How very bold the present generation is—how little we ourselves observe—how much we take for granted the observations and conclusions of others—how much the imagination is worked at the expense of the judgment—how much we associate with those who think like ourselves how little with those who think otherwise: and what an affinity of trash and prejudice is talked, and written, and thought, and acted on, that a little brisk travelling in a practical country would go far to strangle in its birth! Where is the parent among us who would not compound for the sweep of the grassy prairie, with all its possible risks and all its certain benefits, against the card and the billiard table—those green and fatal levels with all their paltry aims, and all their corrupting atmosphere? Who is there that does not turn with something like contempt from some young gentleman who smells of bread and butter and pachouli, stars about through all the insipid pleasures of a London season, and retires for the autumn to shoot tame pheasants or a low-and arrow-hunt, among the white-gloved toadies of St. Leonard's-upon-Sea, to a man who has faced—unnecessarily it may be, but still has faced—a grisly bear, in all the terrors of his five-inch claws, with nothing between his personal security and an unpublished work but a charge of ball and powder and decent nerve to back it. We do not, for a moment, wish to commend all the world to hunt in the far West; nor do we despair of the man whose means do not enable him to choose his way of life. We only hint that, even under difficulties—in a position of life far removed from independence, compelled by stern fate to a sedentary and studious existence—he may still spend his intervals of labour in a manner calculated to open the mind and strengthen the body; and whether he be born to mete tape by the yard, or to the enjoyment of ten thousand a year, he may still open his eyes to the big world that is stirring about him, and endeavour, as far as in him lies, to acquire, not a proficiency in accomplishments whose end is but the accomplishments themselves—not the mastery of acquirements whose main merit it is that they keep the mind free from depravity and idleness—but rather a knowledge of mankind and of himself—the unfettered use of all the better functions of mind and body, the head to conceive, the heart to resolve, and the hand to execute every good thing. Think of some of the evils that beset the social world in which the wealthy among us live! The one large meal, the business and the pleasures of life so needlessly carried out in the small hours—the drowsy lengthened sleep—the dawdling breakfast unenjoyed, or only got down by the free use of the whip and the spur of the palate—the eschalot and the peperbox, or the homoeopathic treatment of the devilled kidneys; for those whom over-indulgence shall have left not untouched in this particular—the constant tonic, the inevitable bitter, that in the tea, the coffee, the sherry, the pale ale, of everyday existence, literally prevades the cup of life: the blessed dawn unenjoyed, the morning sauntered through, the reckless misuse, or worse than that—the non-use—of the best and noblest faculties. Overdrawn, declamatory as all this seems—inapplicable as it is to the better and the worthier—who can deny that, with the wisest and the best, there is much margin left for the improvement of mind and body, and their practicable application to the great duties of life.—Church of England Quarterly.

Temporary Parliament House at Quebec.—It is stated by Le Canadien that the Government has rented the Hospital of the Sisters of Charity at £1000 per annum, for a temporary Parliament House. The arrangements are of a very liberal character and meet with public approbation. The expenses necessary to occupation will be allowed in the rental to the amount of £3000, and the Sisters will be indebted to the Government for any deficiency remaining at the end of the engagement. Any surplus expenditure beyond the £3000 will be at the risk of the Government.—Toronto Mirror.

CUSTOMS OF THE TURKS.

Here is a whole volume concerning the customs, manners, and habits of the Turks, contained in a single paragraph:—

"The Turks abhor the hat; but uncovering the head, which with us is an expression of respect, is considered by them disrespectful and indecent. No offense is given by keeping on a hat in a mosque, but shoes must be left on the threshold; the slipper and not the turban is removed in token of respect. The Turks turn in their toes; they write from right to left; they mount on the right side of the horse; they follow their guests into a room, and precede them on leaving it, the left hand is the place of honor; they do; the honors of the table by serving themselves first; they are great smokers and coffee drinkers; they take the wall and walk hastily in token of respect; they beckon by throwing back the hand, instead of throwing it towards them; they cut the hair from the head; they remove it from the body, but leave it on the chin; they sleep in their clothes; they look upon beheading as a more disgraceful punishment than strangling; they deem our short and close dresses indecent, our shaven chins a mark of effeminacy and servitude; they commence their wooden houses at the top, and their upper apartments are frequently finished before the lower ones are closed in; they eschew pork as an abommation; they regard dancing as a theatrical performance, only to be looked at and not mingled in except by slaves; their mourning habit is white; their sacred color, green; their Sabbath day is Friday; and interment follows immediately on death. The deaths of women are not registered those of the men are. Marriages are registered, and with the marriage the woman is virtually struck from existence, so far as the government is concerned. She is not known officially to the government of Turkey. Her 'lord' or husband does with her as pleases him best."

LAST HOURS OF MR. CALHOUN.

His country, the South, and its future was all to him. He did not care about his own future. It was a small matter in his eyes as the following facts will show:—

For two days before he died, and when it was generally known in the city that he could not live, many visitors called at the house. His physician, Dr. Hull, insisted for his own comfort, that he should see as few as possible. Mr. Calhoun acquiesced, and added, "Mr. Scoville knows who I will see and who not." I, of course, went to the front door whenever the servant announced a visitor to him, and the requests of those who wished to see him. On one occasion (the day before he died) I found the visitor to be the Rev. Mr. Butler. I told him Mr. Calhoun was very ill—"too ill to see any one." "That is the very reason why he should see me. Will you have the goodness to announce me, and tell him that I do wish to converse with him, as a minister of God in reference to his situation?" I hesitated an instant, and then remembering that his daughter was a communicant in the Episcopal Church, I told Mr. Butler was a pastor. I decided that if I wished to avoid wounding in future regard I had better forego my objection of sending off Mr. Butler, and so I said, "Wait a moment," and I left him standing at the front door, while I returned to the bedside of Mr. Calhoun. God bless his glorious soul! I see him now as I saw him then, his head propped up by pillows—his pale emaciated but stern and commanding countenance—his eyes closed, his hands and fixed upon me as I entered the room. He knew that I had been [illegible] "Who is it?" he asked. "Mr. B[illegible], sir ——" "Why do you not bring him at once? It [illegible] "It is not Mr. [illegible] Butler?—I don't [illegible] Who is he?" "It is the [illegible] of the Episcopal Church, Rev. Mr. Butler." "What does he want?" "He says that he has heard you are very low, and considers it his duty to come and talk to you about your matters." "Send him off about his business. Too late to talk to me his nonsense at such a time as this." I went to the door, and informed the Chaplain that Mr. Calhoun was too ill to see him. "You certainly must be mistaken. Does he know it's me?" I cut the matter short with a decided "Yes, sir, he does, and he says he don't want to see you, and I wont disturb him by going in again with your name." The Rev. Mr. Butler left, and when I returned to the room the impudence of the call was still in his mind. His eyes were closed but I heard broken sentences such as, "To call on me for such a purpose." "Young man not grown!" "Subject I have thought of all my life."—Scoville, Private Secretary to Mr. Calhoun.

Seed Potatoes.—Now, when the time permits, our friends would do well to set about the selection of their seed potatoes. It very often happens that, when planting time comes round, the great bulk of the supply of potatoes is used up, and the seed must be taken from what remains, which has been picked over, perhaps, twice or three times, and all the best tubers taken for family use.

If a healthy crop is looked for, one essensential preliminary must be the use of healthy seed. We believe there is much of the blame of failure to be laid to the account of the use of seed potatoes which are in an unhealthy state when planted. Along with a healthy stamina in the tubers it is necessary that those chosen for planting should be well shaped. Their produce will be similar when gathered. If care is not taken in this particular the produce will follow the shape of the irregularly shaped potatoes which may be planted. In similar respects the small ones will produce their like.

On a trial it will be found that such are the results of using the various kinds and shapes. The best security, therefore, for a good crop, is to collect good seed now, when the harvest has it in his power to do so. A writer in the Ohio Farmer says:—"I planted whole large potatoes, at the rate of 25 bushels per acre. The yield was not less than 250 bushels per acre, and very large, sound, ones. Cutting the seed was also tried, and although nearly the same amount of seed was used, the yield was from one-fourth to one-third less. Small seed produced small crops, and I lost 50 bushels by the experiment. I planted in April on sward turned in December. Soil, mixture of clay and sand. All of them were sound, but were neither the best nor most prolific kind."

☞ Parliament has been farther prorogned until the 1st of June next, and then to meet or the despatch of business.

Constitution of the National Council.

For the purpose of improving the character, developing the intelligence, maintaining the rights and organizing a Union of the Colored People of the Free States, the National Convention does hereby ordain and institute the

"NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE COLORED PEOPLE."

Art. 1. This Council shall consist of two members from each State, represented in this Convention, to be elected by this Convention, and two other members from each State to be elected as follows: On the 15th day of November next, and biennially thereafter, there shall be held in each State, a Poll, at which each colored inhabitant may vote who pays ten cents as poll-tax; and each State shall elect, at such election, such delegates to State Legislatures, twenty in number from each State, at large. The members of the National Council in each State, shall receive, canvass, and declare the result of such vote. The State Council, thus elected, shall meet on the first Monday in January, 1854, and elect additional members to the National Council, in proportion of one to five thousand of the colored population of such State; and the members of council thus elected, to take office on the sixth day of July next, and all to hold office during two years from that date; at the end of which time another general election by State council shall take place of members to constitute their successors in office, in the same numbers as above. The State council of each State shall have full power over the internal concerns of said State.

Art. 3. The committee on Manual Labor School shall procure funds and organize said School in accordance with the plans adopted by this National Convention, with such modifications as experience or necessity may dictate to them. The committee shall immediately incorporate itself as an academy under "The General Committee of the State of ——," and shall constitute the Board of Trustees of the Manual Labor School, with full power to select a location in the State designated by the National council, to erect buildings, appoint or dismiss instructors in the literary or mechanical branches. There shall be a farm attached to the School.

Art. 4. The committee on Protective Unions shall institute a Protective Union for the purchase and sale of articles of domestic consumption, and shall unite and aid in the formation of branches auxiliary to their own.

Art. 5. The committee on Business Relations, shall establish an office, in which they shall keep a registry of colored mechanics, artizans and business men throughout the Union. They shall keep a registry of all persons willing to employ colored men in business, to teach colored boys mechanical trades, liberal and scientific professions, and farming; and also, a registry of colored men and youth seeking employment or instruction. They shall also report upon any avenues of business or trade which they deem inviting to colored capital skill or labor. Their reports and advertisements to be in papers of the widest circulation. They shall receive for sale or exhibition products of the skill and labor of colored people.

Art. 6. The committee on Publication shall collect all facts statistical and statements, all laws and historical records and biographies of the colored people, and all books by colored authors. They shall have for the safe keeping of these documents, a Library, with a Reading Room and Museum. The committee shall also publish replies to any assaults, worthy of note, made upon the character or condition of the colored People.

Art. 7. Each committee shall have absolute control over its special department; shall make its own by-laws, and in case of any vacancy occurring, shall fill up the same forthwith subject to the confirmation of the council. Each committee shall meet at least once a month or as often as possible; shall keep a minute of all its proceedings, executive and financial, and shall submit a full statement of the same, with the accounts audited, at every regular meeting of the National council.

Art. 8. The National council shall meet at least once in six months, to receive the reports of the committees, and to consider any new plan for the general good, for which it shall have power, at its option, to appoint a new committee, and shall be empowered to receive and appropriate donations for the carrying out of the objects of the same. At all such meetings, eleven members shall constitute a quorum. In case any committee neglect or refuse to send in its report, according to article 8th, then the council shall have power to enter the bureau, examine the books and papers of such committee; and in case the committee shall persist in its refusal or neglect, then the council shall declare their offices vacant, and appoint others in their stead.

Art. 12. A member of the council shall be member of only one of the committees thereof.

Art. 13. All officers holding funds, shall give security in double the amount likely to be in their hands. This security to be given to the three first officers of the council.

Art. 14. The council shall have power to make such By-Laws as are necessary for their proper government.

Art. 9. In all cases of the meetings of the National Council, or the committees, the traveling expenses (if any) of the members shall be paid out of the respective funds.

Art. 10. The council shall immediately establish a bureau in the place of its meeting; and the same rooms shall, as far as possible, be used by the several committees for their various purposes. The council shall have a clerk, at a moderate salary, who will keep a record of their transactions, and prepare a condensed report of the committees for publication; and, also, a registry of the friends of the cause.

Art. 11. The expenses of the council shall be defrayed by the fees of membership of subsocieties or councils, to be organized throughout the States. The membership fee shall be one cent per week.

[The following resolutions having direct bearing upon the plan of organization were adopted by the Convention and are therefore appended to the Council's Constitution.]

Resolved, That the Council shall be delegated to select its various Committee.

Resolved, That the Council shall have power to offer a premium for prize essays on different subjects agreed on by Council.

Resolved, That the said Council shall hear and grant petitions, and be governed by the rules of legislative bodies, and their decisions shall be final.

Resolved, That any State applying for admission into this Union, shall be admitted on such terms as may hereafter be agreed upon.

Resolved, That in establishing a National Council for our own special improvement, and a Manual Labor School for the education of our children in science, literature and mechanical arts, this Convention do this, not to build ourselves up as a distinct and seperate class in this country, but as a means to a great end, viz: the equality in political rights, and in civil and social privileges with the rest of the American people.

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the colored people, in offering a plan for the organization of the school, beg leave to state,

1st. That the location of the school, which is to be within one hundred miles of the town of Erie, Pennsylvania, will be selected as soon as three thousand dollars are paid in; the school building and work-shop will be commenced as soon as ten thousand dollars are paid in; and the school commenced as soon as fifteen thousand dollars are paid in; and that in no case will a contract be made beyond the sum of money actually paid in. The site of the school will be at least two hundred acres of land, one hundred and fifty of which shall for ever be used as a farm for agricultural instruction.

2nd. In accordance with a vote of the Rochester Convention, the teachers are to be selected for, and pupils admitted into, the school without reference to sex or complexion.

3d. Special provision will be made to make this, from the beginning, an industrial school for females as well as males; a prominent principle of conduct will be to aid in providing for the female sex, methods and means of enjoying an independent and honorable livlihood.

6. The School shall be organised and conducted entirely by a board of fifteen trustees.

7. Six of these trustees shall be the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the People of Color; and nine of the trustees shall be elected by the Stockholders when three thousand dollars shall have been paid in by them, (the stockholders) and annually thereafter. Each share of stock shall count as one vote at all such elections. And stockholders may vote by proxy, on affidavit made and acknowledged before a Commissioner of Deeds.

11. The Treasurer shall publish at least once a fortnight a list of all the donations and subscriptions of stock received by him; and shall transmit to each donor or stockholder, a copy of the paper, (Frederick Douglass' Paper, or Alienet American,) which shall contain the acknowledgment of their gift or subscription.

THE GOSPEL TRIBUNE.

PROSPECTUS.

The first number of a monthly paper, to be known as above indicated, is proposed to be published in Toronto within a few months, and not later than the First day of July, 1851. The work in size and appearance, to be at least equal to the Missionary Record or Christian Observer; and as much superior to either in style and execution as the subscription list will warrant.

DISTINCTIVE OBJECT:

To enlarge the limits of Communion and Church-Membership, among Christians, to the greatest possible extent; and to circumscribe those bounds to the exclusion, if possible, of all other characters; without otherwise disturbing the Membership of existing Churches; till acknowledged Christian Character shall constitute the only passport, at any time, and the perfect passport at all times, to every Communion and Church worthy of the Christian name; "that the world may believe" in Christ, even as he prayed.

GENERAL OBJECTS:

The promotion of Religious, Moral, Intellectual and Social Improvement, under the guidance of Divine Revelation, submitting every move and measure to the test of Gospel Principles.

SUPPORTERS:

The distinctive and general objects of the work are such as to claim for it the patronage of all classes of men, excepting those wedded to other pre-requisites of Communion and Church-membership, than acknowledged Christian Character; and here it is recorded with great pleasure that the encouragements tendered, thus far, are in strict accordance with the above general claims.

ORIGIN AND PROGRESS:

This movement has long been contemplated. For twenty years the subscriber has made the distinctive object of the Gospel Tribune his special study: examining carefully and personally the denominational aspect of Religious Societies,—their reciprocal bearings, their mutual relations, and the nature of their combined influence on the evangelization of the world. Lately, his position as Publisher of the Scripture Manual has probably afforded him the best possible facilities for personally testing the strength of his positions and for the attainment of certain important information, but little of which he had previously been able to obtain. All may rest assured, however, that no undue advantage will ever be taken of the frankness and candor with which Christians of every name, as well as skepticism of every class, have freely expressed their convictions in the presence of the Travelling Colporteur; the capacity in which the Publisher is still extending his observations through Canada and the neighboring States.

CO-LABORERS:

Of distinguished worth and of well-known literary ability, are already secured in the several sections of Canada, and in the States of the American Union; and arrangements are now in progress, to obtain from living responsible writers in Britain important assistance in the development of the Tribune's Mission.

TERMS AND NOTICES:

The Terms are One Dollar per Annum in advance,—otherwise Two Dollars; it being found that one half of the Subscriptions, not paid in advance, are worse than lost. Editors—friendly—will render assistance by noticing this Prospectus. All parties willing to aid, may at once commence soliciting the names of Subscribers. Two books—the Scripture and Lacunæ Manuals—fully gilt, and the Paper one year, will be forwarded to the person who first sends the names of ten Subscribers; and one of either of the books in substantial blue binding or the Paper one year, to every one who sends ten names. Subscriptions and all other communications for the Paper to be sent, post-paid and marked Money, (if inclosed) and addressed Robert Dick, Box 411, Toronto.

Sermons and Lectures, promotive of the Tribune's object, will be delivered by the Publisher throughout the Province as frequently as shall be found compatible with his other duties.

(Signed) ROBERT DICK.

CALL FOR A NATIONAL EMIGRATION CONVENTION OF COLORED MEN,

To be held in Cleveland, Ohio, on the 24th, 25th and 26th of August, 1854.

Men and Brethren:—The time has now fully come, when we, as an oppressed people, should do something effectively, and use those means adequate to the attainment of the great and long desired end—to do something to meet the actual demands of the present and prospective necessities of the rising generation of our people in this country. To do this, we must occupy a position of entire equality, of unrestricted rights, composing in fact, an acknowledged necessary part of the ruling element of society in which we live. The policy necessary to the preservatum of this element must be in our favor, if ever we expect the enjoyment, freedom, sovereignty, and equality of rights anywhere. For this purpose, and to this end, then, all colored men in favor of emigration out of the United States, and opposed to the American Colonization scheme of locating the Western Hemisphere, are requested to meet in CLEVELAND, OHIO, on TUESDAY, the 24th DAY of AUGUST, 1854, in a great NATIONAL CONVENTION, then and there, to consider and decide upon the great and important subject of Emigration from the United States.

No person will be admitted to a seat in the Convention, who would introduce the subject of emigration to the Eastern Hemisphere—either to Asia, Africa, or Europe—as our object and destination; is to consider our claims to the West Indies, Central and South America, and the Canadas. This restriction has no reference to personal preference, or individual enterprise; but to the great question of national claims to come before the Convention on.

All persons coming to the Convention must bring credentials properly authenticated, or bring verbal assurance to the Committee on Credentials—appointed for the purpose—of their fidelity to the measures and objects set forth in this Call; as the Convention is specifically by and for the friends of emigration, and NONE OTHERS—and no opposition to them will be entertained.

The question is not whether our condition can be bettered by emigration, but whether it can be made worse. And then, there is no part of the whole spread universe where our social and political condition can be better than here in our native country, and nowhere in the world as here, proscribed on account of color.

We are friends, too, and ever will stand shoulder to shoulder by our brethren, and all our friends in all good measures adopted by them for the bettering of our condition in this country, and surrender no rights but with our last breath; but as the subject of emigration is of vital importance, and has ever been shunned by all delegated assemblages of our people as hitherto met, we cannot longer delay and will not be further baffled; and deny the right of our most sanguine friend or enemy to hinder, by even an intelligent enquiry to and the carrying out of these measures, which this can be done to our entire advantage, as we propose to show in Convention—as the West Indies Central and South America—the majority of which are peopled by our brethren, or those identified with us in race, and what is more, destiny on this continent—all stand with open arms and yearning hearts, importuning us in the name of suffering humanity to come—to make common cause, and share one common fate on the same soil.

The Convention will meet without fail, at the time fixed for assembling, as none but those favorable to emigration are admissable; therefore no other gathering may prevent it. The number of delegates will not be restricted—except in the town where the Convention may be held—and there the number will be decided by the Convention when assembled, that they may not too far exceed the other delegations.

The time and place fixed for holding the Convention are ample; affording sufficient time, and a leisure season generally—and as Cleveland is now the centre of all directions—a good and favorable opportunity to all who desire to attend.—Therefore it may reasonably be the greatest gathering of the colored people ever before assembled in a Convention in the United States.

Combinations are advised that no favors will be shown to them or their expatriating scheme as we have no sympathy with the enemies of our race.

All colored men, East, West, North and South, favorable to the measures set forth in this Call will send in their names (post-paid) to M. R. Delany, or Rev. Wm. Webb, Pittsburgh Pa., that there may be arranged and attached to the Call, five names from each State.

We must make an issue, create an event, and establish a position for ourselves. It is glorious out-door but far more glorious to carry out.

DOUGLAS vs. THE CLERGY.

Full two-thirds of Senator Douglas's letter is taken up in berating the clergy for "having solemnly protested, in the presence and in the name of the Almighty," against his infamous Nebraska fraud, as if that form of speech were intended to assert, and did assert, a divine right to overrule the civil authorities. Bah! These forms of speech are common every day. We say, "In the name of Heaven," don't do this, or do that, in almost every earnest conversation. He must be a fool who can be gulled by his clap-trap of the Illinois Senator.

But the Little Giant is alarmed at the Clergy signing their names according to their profession. What of that? Mechanics meet, and as mechanics, and so declare—who objects? Lawyers do the same—all professions, on occasions. But what of that? It is their right—and they exercise it, and no politician is alarmed thereat The man is crazy, or would be deemed such, who should denounce such action. But the Clergy have dared to exercise their right as citizens! Awful! It is a pity that they would not exercise those rights oftener, as as other citizens do, for, if they did, in our judgment there would be less evil done and more good secured, certainly, through the action.

The rest of the letter is droted to enlightening "the men who follw a sacred calling," as to the Nebraska fraud. And here it is characterized by evasion, double-dealing and sophistry! The ise in 1820, '21, as regards Missouri, vs Slavery. Everything hinged upon that. The Slave Power won—but agreed tha the curse should not go north of 36 dr. 30 min. That agreement this slave powr seeks to break, and Senator Douglas decres it is no breach of faith! Why, he ma preach till doomsday, and he cannot establ the fact. The ignorant and the informed kow that it is a breach of faith the very ument that the statement is made, and no bragart browbeating can deceive them. Yt Senator Douglas insolently asks the Clergy why they do not petition Congress against gambling, and licentiousness, as well as slavry—as if the existence of these evils would palliate or excuse the sum of all villainies, ous if there were any illogical sequence folloing their special action in this case.

But the mighty Illinoian branch out into the climax of clap-trap, claiming for the huge Nebraska Swindle all that the Pgrims of Plymouth Rock ever claimed—thought of self-government. It is a "Mayflow charter." There is no check imposed ithe bill. except what the Constitution of t Union imposes, and the people may make sh laws as they please. False, every word. Why, the Constitution declares that Congss shall make all needful rules and regulatio concerning the territories. But, go rther. What is self-government? The righ people to elect their own Governor. Kansas and Nebraska bill, the Preside points himself. The right to elect the legislators. Yet no alien nor colored can vote for such—only the few! citizens who, in Illinois, could vote fo ernor and members of the legislature not vote for either in Kansas or Ne under Douglas's bill. The right to their own Judges. The President United States and Senate appoint Suppose, for instance, that the peop Kansas and Nebraska, should declare ag human chattelism, and say not a slave pollute their soil, have they power to e their sovereign decree? No! But the ernor can baulk their desire; Congress it: the President, by indirect action, aside. Talk then of self-government! to compare, under these circumstances Nebraska and Kansas bill with the Pi action at Plymouth! so say, as Dougl say, that these territories are "in pre the same condition as our ancestors Plymouth rock!"

Chaff like this will not deceive: ever dulous partisans cannot be caught b Every man of sense will see the dece practised, and scorn the deceiver, who madly mock them by the shadow inste the substance of self-government—by famous cheat instead of a glorious real Cleveland Leader.

Col. Benton on the Nebraska Bi[illegible]—Benton, they say, is extremely delight over the Administration "settlers" from Co necticut and Rhode Island. He laughs rig heartily over them, and points his finger the Douglas party in derision. A memb observed to him the other day that t House was losing interest in the Nebras question, the commencement of a speech o that subject being generally a signal for a regular stampede. "Yes, Sir," replied Old Bullion, "it is like a dead dog on a common.—At first every passer by stops to see if it is a dead dog; but presently decay begins, and then every man's nose tells him, and he gives the nuisance a wide birth. Sir, Nebraska is a dead dog. It is rotten sir; it is rotten, and nobody wants to be near when it is about to be stirred. They go round it sir, they go round it!"

It is thought that Benton will let off his speech against the Nebraska Bill sometime during the present week. It will doubtless be a crusher.—Syr. Journal.

Can Fugitive Slaves take care of Themselves?

TORONTO, C. W., March 22, 1854.

DEAR BRO. WALKER:—I send you a line or two about our people here, as some information respecting them may not be uninteresting to your readers. The accession to our numbers has been great during the winter past, at this, and other points west of us. Nearly all who have joined us have been directly from the South, fugitive slave bill and blood-hounds to the contrary notwithstanding. Those who have reached this point have been mostly from the "Old Dominion," and I assure you that some of them are not only "the dare devils of the South," but also the choice sons and daughters of Virginia's best blood. There are among these some ten young men, of whom England need not be ashamed, and the United States may regret her loss of them yet, should the war be world-wide. From what I can learn, the new comers at the points west of us are not a whit behind.

Our people are evidently improving, physically, intellectually, and morally. They command more respect, and are received more on terms of equality than ever before. Here there is no difference made in public houses, steamboats, rail road cars, schools, colleges, churches, ministerial platforms, and government offices. There is no doubt some prejudice here, but those who have it are ashamed to show it. This at least is true of Toronto. And even out west, at Chatham for example, it is getting to be true.—The colored people have the balance of the power there at all the municipal elections.

Our people here are generally becoming land-owners, and are increasing in industry and enterprise. In another generation we shall be another people. There is evidently an improvement in the external piety of our churches. The ministry is improving some, but not all I could wish. Their preaching is more instructive than it used to be.

There have not been many revivals in our churches this winter—yet several have enjoyed seasons of refreshing from the Lord, and among them we may number our own.

Our friends may be hopeful of our people here.

Yours, &c.,

W. P. NEWMAN.

Beauties of Colonization!

The Legislature of Tennessee passed, the last session, a law to regulate the emancipation of slaves. It provides for the transportation to the western coast of Africa of all slaves heretofore or hereafter liberated, and all free persons of color who fail to give bonds for good behaviour.—Pottstown Ledger.

That is pretty! No wonder that our philosophical and philanthrophic neighbor is so devoutly in favor of the colonization scheme! He has a couple of times expressed his fears that our prejudices were the reason we did not believe it too, though we might not be aware of it—as the enterprise was certainly too good, too noble to be discarded by a disinterested friend of the slave. And more recently the Editor treated his readers to another learned leader on the beauties of the project, expressing increased surprise that the colored people do not flock to Africa in greater numbers. We have given the matter a little attention, and have come to the conclusion that many of them are pastured or have been. I saw here a sale of negroes, wagons, mules, &c. I will give you a few of the prices, which I took down—most of them were sold on 12 mo. approved paper.

Woman and small child, $1050; man aged 19, $950; man and wife aged 18 and 17, $2000; boy aged 14, $640; girl aged 10, $525; man aged 24, $860; boy aged 11, white, $580; boy aged 11, $625; woman aged 25, $900; man and little boy, aged 50, $1020; woman, age 46, $395; man with the gravel, aged 19, $700; a man perfect, aged 40, $1600; woman 40, girl 8, $600; man, aged 27, $1410; boy aged 12, $725; girl aged 4, $300; girl good looking, aged 14, $805; girl, a little blacker, aged 15, $815.

There were four auctioneers crying at a time, (not for sorrow but for money,) and the ladies were showed up, turned about and the women felt off, and asked questions of the [illegible] system with. One boy took about $50 more for having a row of pins stuck on his coat sleeve. The auctioneer got him up to a point, where he stuck. He praised the negro, reiterated his good qualities, and yelled a-going till he was red in the face, and no advance. All of a sudden he discovered the row of pins. 'Why, gentlemen,' said he, 'this nigger' is worth his weight in gold. Some boys will waste more in a year than they are worth, but this "feller" is the most careful, saving hand in the world. A nigger that will pick up such little things as pins, and save 'em, why, gentlemen, you can't give too much for him. "Only look here," and he showed the proof of his saving propensity, and he soon run up fifty dollars higher. All were first rate and 'sold for no fault.' If the negroes had believed half what was said in their praise, they would be excusable for being vain. One little boy, when they sold him on the box, cried and sobbed as if his heart would break. An old black woman (his grandmother) tried to comfort him. He clung to her neck and hid his face in her bosom. 'Come, come, Billy,' says the auctioneer, 'don't cry we'll get you a nice place. Going at only 575 75—75, 80, thank you, sir, 80—80, hold up your head, you shall have a good place. who'll give 85? Just going at 80, &c., and he was at last struck off at $585, but if he got a nice place, I don't think the auctioneer's promise had much do with it.—Cleveland Leader.

Compliment from the Legislature of Louisina.

Although it is our general practice in the Citizen to decline the Publication of complimentary addresses to the Editor, we cannot deny ourselves the pleasure of giving the following correspondence to our readers. We believe it will give satisfaction to our friends, as it has been a source of pride to us.

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA,
March 30, 1854.

Sir: The undersigned have been appointed a joint Committee, on the part of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, to transmit to you the accompanying resolutions, unanimously adopted by both branches of the General Assembly.

In the performance of this agreeable duty, and in conveying to you the sentiments which originated and led to their adoption with such entire unanimity, we beg leave to say, that while we cherish the warmest sympathy for all who have made patriotic sacrifices for the emancipation of a nation from political tyranny and oppression and are ever ready to receive them to our homes and hearts, the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, in adopting these resolutions, have been actuated mainly by a high sense of your enlightened and just political principles, as specially indicated by your able defence, in the midst of a fanatical opposition, of those great constitutional rights, and those national and fraternal sentiments, which are calculated to unite and harmonize the diversified interests of the country, and to cement the union of these States, on the perpetuity of which repose the highest hopes and dearest interests of mankind.

With these views and feelings, in the discharge of the duties assigned to us, in the name of the people of Louisiana, we invite you to the freedom and hospitalities of our capital, and avail ourselves of the occasion to add the expression of our individual consideration and respect.

RESOLUTION INVITING JOHN MITCHEL TO THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT OF THE STATE.

Resolved, by the Senate and the House of Representation of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That the distinguished patriot and exile, JOHN MITCHEL, in consideration of his exalted character, his pre-eminent ability, and just and expanded national sentiments, as particularly exemplified in his late letter on the subject of Southern institutions, be, and is hereby, invited to the seat of Government of this State.

Be it further Resolved, etc., that a committee of two members, on the part of the House, be, and they are hereby appointed, to transmit a copy of these resolutions to JOHN MITCHEL.

MR. MITCHEL'S REPLY.

To the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Representatives of Louisiana.

NEW YORK, April 7, 1854.

GENTLEMEN: Your very kind and courteous letter has just been received, enclosing a resolution of the Legislature, which extends to me the distinguished honor of an invitation to the hospitalities of your State capital. It is indeed a distinction wholly unexpected, and I fear hardly merited; but it were affectation to deny that it has given me the keenest pleasure, and will always be remembered with pride.

My warmest thanks are especially due for this high and authoritative recognition of the cause of Irish nationality, for which I cause I, as well as many better men, have for years endured the most curious refinements of malignant vengeance at the hands of our country's enemies. And now that the corrupt Parliament, Press, and Administration of England are eagerly heaping deadly insults and calumnies upon the names of their intended victims, it is, to me at least, much more than a compensation that I am addressed with fraternal respect, and my hand is grasped in friendship by a higher and prouder race of freemen than Europe has known for two thousand years.

The course which I have taken as a journalist, on some questions of vital public interest, and which has had the good fortune to meet with the marked approval of the Legislature of Louisiana, was dictated solely by my own long-settled opinions and feelings. The ungenerous imputation which has been made—that I took that course, in order to court and flatter the South at the expense of the North—the North where I have made my own home—must to Southerners, appear irrational enough. And even those who make such a charge must themselves disbelieve it, for obvious reasons. In truth, I took no thought of South or North at all—of sectional interests or geographical parallels of latitude; but as a great question of social policy arising for discussion, I felt myself entitled, and indeed bound (having to conduct a journal at all) to deal with the same, plainly and independently. If my conclusions differ from those of several politicians, orators and philosophers of these parts, perhaps it is because I have drawn mine from some considerable study of history and politics in ancient and modern times, and not exclusively from the papers of Old England, the lectures of New England, and the Gospel according to the Washington Press. Once for all, I refuse to believe that human wisdom and virtue were born about the beginning of the nineteenth century—were cradled in Exeter Hall—were suckled, like the twins of Rhea Silvia, by a she-wolf (or strong-minded female)—and have reached their highest development and brightest consummate blossoming in the 'Garrisoniam' of Boston, howling against the Union as a dog bays the moon.

You will not condemn nor wonder at the zeal of a stranger and a refugee for that Union. In my case, it is not unnatural. To me, from my childhood, the United States has been a sacred Unity—one and indivisible—the completest, grandest achievement and monument of the courage and wit of man in modern times. The admiration became a passion; and the passion led me far and cost me dear; but the dearer it has cost me, the more jealously and proudly I cherish my old faith and hope; now when the banner I gazed on so long from hopeless distance, with "the desire of the moth for the star," gleams and waves above me at last. May the colors of God's bow be torn asunder, ere the Stripes of that majestic banner!

I beg, gentlemen, that you will convey to both Houses of the Legislature my warmest acknowledgment of their goodness: and assure them that I shall endeavour, at an early day, to avail myself of their invitation, and visit Baton Rouge.

With sentiments of high consideration, I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

JOHN MITCHEL.

Col. Benton.

After a long silence, "Old Bullion" has exploded. The minnows that infest the turbid political waters of Washington City have felt the earthquake shock, and stand aghast as the tornado of duty sweeps them into deserved obscurity. He has immortalized in infamy the eaves-dropping crew who linger on the outskirts of Presidential levees, to catch a hint of the leaning of the Chief Magistrate and his cabal upon the exciting topics of State policy, in order that favorites in Congress or bribing editors may shrewdly foreshadow the action of the Executive. In not very polished but expressive figures, he has indicated his opinion of extra-official meddling with popular legislation, and he has not scrupled to brand with unmistakeable marks of disgust the sophomorical efforts in debate of a race of statesmen that have escaped too early from their leading strings.—The luminous logic of Benton has dealt a death blow to the "silent, secret, limping, halting, creeping, squinting, impish motion, conceived in the dark, midwifed in a committee room, and sprung upon Congress and the country in the style in which Guy Fawks intended to blow up the Parliament House with his five hundred barrels of gunpowder hid in the cellar under the wood."

Nothing that Pitt ever thundered from the benches of the House of Lords, can exceed the felicitous humor and biting sarcasm which characterizes the entire speech. We entertain, with lively satisfaction, the hope that the effect of this first effort of the great Missourian, will be apparent in the improved condition of the lower House. If we had our choice we should rather be the hero of the Dunciad, than the subject of Benton's satire. The notoriety gained from such a source would be endowing but not enviable, but most assuredly the fate is reserved for some of our Representatives, unless, in the exercise of a superadded for which we have no reason to give them credit, they sink into oblivion, convinced that they have sufficiently stultified themselves, without braving the fiery ordeal of Benton's anger.—Philadelphia Register.

Culture of Spring Wheat.

I have raised spring wheat for fifteen or twenty years without missing I believe, a single year. It was formerly thought we could not get a crop in our town, it grew so rank and blasted; but for fifteen years have had but one crop blasted, and that only partially.

The answer given for a fair crop, in a former communication, was stated at about "twenty bushels per acre." As this small amount might prevent some from making a trial of it, I will state that I have not raised so light an average crop for fifteen years, except one year.

I have taken three first premiums in our county, for from thirty to thirty-two bushels.

I was taught to sow only one bushel to the acre, but by reading and practice, I found more to be necessary, until I increased to three bushels to the acre; but I have found that there should never be less than two bushels, nor more than two bushels and a half sowed to the acre.

The price (stated in the answer above) was one York shilling less than winter wheat.

Now this cannot be fairly said to be the difference in the wheat, but in the foul stuff mixed with the wheat. Some farmers think anything almost will do to sow that is called spring wheat; but I have learned from your valuable Cultivator, that you must saw good clean seed, if you will have a good clean crop to harvest. Nothing but the largest kernels, well screened, the pure wheat itself, will do for me to sow; and then I raise wheat that will command a price with the finest winter wheat. It is preferred by us for bread, to the finest western flour. I have sold from fifteen to thirty and forty bushels per year for seed, at from $1,50 to $2 per bushel, for many years past.

The mode of culture, is the all-important consideration of the young farmer. You have taught me to plough deep, and to pulverize the earth as fine as possible, so that when my men say a piece of ground is harrowed sufficiently, I have double the labor expended which they thought sufficient.

And land that you can raise good corn or potatoes upon, will grow good spring wheat. I manure for corn, with 20 to 25 loads of barn yard manure to the acre—put on in the spring, after the sod is turned under—harrowed until it becomes as fine and mellow as a dung can make it. Thus I raise, with lime, ashes, and plaster, a large and profitable crop of corn.

But now comes the spring wheat, the best and most profitable crop I can raise. The stalk ground is plowed in the fall, when quite dry, or as early in the spring as the ground will do to work—deep fine furrows—only one plowing, (but the labor of twice, as some do it;) and now comes what my neighbors say is the secret of my raising spring wheat:—Some of them are yet so faithless that they will not try, while many are now raising full as good as I do.

I put on all the leached and unleached ashes I can get, if it is six, eight or ten loads to the acre, or if only a single load spread evenly out of a wagon, then harrow it well.—When this is done, it is ready for your seed; when sowed, put on your team and harrow and make it as mellow as an ash heap.

I have been thus lengthy and particular, as I know the difficulty of getting the generality of farmers to do just right, for I have had the question put to me so often, "if you will warrant me as good a crop as you raise, I will buy your seed." I tell them I will, if they will do just as I say, but scarcely one in ten will.

But this is not all. I never raised smutty wheat but one year, (at least for fifteen years past,) as I have invariably attended to preparing the seed myself except this year. I must relate the anecdote to close:

I told my man to take the wheat, the salt and lime, prepare it, and sow as I directed. He put the lime, salt and water together, washed the wheat and sowed it. The crop was so smutty, it almost destroyed the wheat. What was the cause of this, I know not; but there is a right way, and when the right way is found, it should be strictly adhered to, no matter by whom first discovered.

The right way then is, take your wheat—it must be the best seed wheat—make a very strong brine—pour in a half a bushel at a time, wash and skim, and skim and wash, until you know there is nothing but wheat, then pour off the brine in another tub, put the wheat in a box, and roll it in new slacked lime, as much as you can make adhere to the kernel, keep adding as you need, to cover the wheat, that it may become well saturated with salt.

When you harvest it, keep it away from your oats, rye, and buckwheat, or thresh it in the field, so that you know that you have nothing but wheat to sell and you will not need to sell for a shilling less than winter wheat.

If you are dissatisfied, call on me, and I will show what good bread my wife makes of it, (ah, and good butter too,) and this, with hundreds of other suggestions, for the garden as well as farm, which we have learned from a constant perusal of your Cultivator,—Country Gentleman.

Emigration to Nebraska.—The emigration to Nebraska terrstory is very large.—The St. Louis Republican says a great number of persons have arrived in that city on their way to that territory to settle. The steamboats were taken up as fast as they arrived, to convey the emigrants to their destination. It is said that Mr. Johnson, the missionary of the M. E. Church South in Nebraska, and now the delegate representing it at Washington, is a slaveholder, and that he is actively urging the passage of both these bills, in order to secure to himself and the small circle of slaveholders by whose agency he was elected, the permanent possession of their property.

To be meditated upon by Drinkers of Intoxicating Liquors.

Adulteration of Ale.—If any additional arguments were needed why people ought to abstain from ale and porter surely a sufficient reason would be found in the drugs with which the liquors are so adulterated. In the essay on Brewing, published in the Library of Useful Knowledge, we find, that in the manufacture of beer, sugar, molasses, honey and liquorice, are used for malt. Broom, opium, gentiam, quassia, aloes, marsh, trefoil, coculus indicus, tobacco, nux vomica, are used for hops, and the last mentioned are known to be highly poisonous. Saltpetre, common salt, mixed with flour, jalap, the fiery liquid called spirit of maranta, bruised green copperas, live, egg-shells, hartshorn shaving, nutgalls, potash, and soda, are used to prevent acidity. Coriander seeds, carraways, orange peel, long pepper, capsicum, grains of paradise, have been employed for flavour. Coculus indicus, bitter bean, nux vomica, and opium, which are strong poisons, are used for the purpose of producing intoxication. Here the reader will perceive how avarice has studied to enrich itself at the expense of the health, and lives, and morals of the people.—English Publication.

Adulteration of Liquors.—Eminent chemists assert that nine-tenths, at least, of all the liquors consumed in the United States are more or less drugged. To say that half of all that pretends to come across the Atlantic is wholly manufactured on this side of it, would be to fall short of the truth.

There are numbers who live and thrive by such nefarious trade. Long practice in the use of sugar of lead, capsicum, acids, aloes, juniper berries, verdigris, logwood, &c. &c., in varying and nicely graduated proportions, has enabled them to bring the art to a degree of perfection that seems almost fabulous. Cheap Mononghela whiskey, brought into their vault by the hogshead, comes out bottled and ready for sale, as "Madeira," "Cognac," "Champagne," "Pale Brandy," "Cream of the Valley" and "Old Port." In these the color, flavor, and smell of the originals will be so closely imitated that experienced taste is deceived by them. So complete and minute are their operations that not only are foreign brands forged, and the shape of bottles, the devices of seals and corks imitated, but even artifical dust and cobwebs are fabricated, to give them an air of respectable antiquity,

If other proof of this were needed, besides the results of chemical analysis, it might be found in the facts that more Port is drank in the United States in one year than passes through the Custom House in ten; that more Champagne is consumed in America alone than the whole Champagne district produces; that Cognac Brandy costs four times as much in France where it is made, as it is sold for in our corner groggeries; and that the failure of the whole grape-crop in Madeira produced no apparent diminution in the quantity, nor at all corresponding increase in the price, of the Wine. Genuine Brandy, Gin, and Rum are the most costly of all fermented drinks, instead of being as we are accustomed to think, the cheapest. To say nothing of the cost of transportation, they cannot be bought on the spot were they are made at anything like the rates they are sold at in our drinking saloons. Brands that at wholesale bring $3 a bottle, are sold at retail for "three cents a glass!"—Alb. Evt. Journal.

Consumption of Spirits, Beer, &c.—A return has been made up by the Board of Trade, showing, "as far as can be given," the quantity of spirits, beer, &c., consumed in the United Kingdom annually. In the instance of beer the return has been calculated upon the quantities of malt and sugar used by brewers, deducting the beer exported; there is no account of the beer brewed in private families, and therefore the quantity really drunk must be larger than is here stated.—But, taking this return as the most complete that could be obtained, we have the following account for 1853:—4,931,639 gallons of foreign and colonial spirits were consumed in Great Britain, and 211,685 in Ireland. Of home-made spirits the consumption was 16,-885,955 gallons in Great Britain, and 8,135,-362 in Ireland. Foreign and colonial wine, 6,227,022 gallons in Great Britain, 586,809 in Ireland. Beer, 16,443,881 barrels in Great Britain, 640,251 in Ireland. Malt, 40,362,102 bushels in Great Britain, 1,630,-076 in Ireland Sugar, 6,999,884 cwts. in Great Britain, 487,705 in Ireland. Tea, 51,001,851 lbs. in Great Britain, 7,832,236 lbs. in Ireland. Tobacco, 25,940,545 lbs. in Great Britain, 4,624,141 lbs. in Ireland. Taking the population as being much the same in number in 1853 as in 1851, when the census was taken, the average consumption during the year must have been then considerably above a gallon of spirits (nearly nine pints, or about a sixth of a pint per week) nearly a quart of foreign wine (or half a pint in three months), and about 22½ gallons of beer (not quite half a pint a day).—An individual average, however, is very wide of the mark. It may give a somewhat better idea of the quantity to take the average by families. According to this return, if there had been a Communistic system, and these beverages had been equally distributed, a family of six persons must have had to drink, in the course of the year, 52 pints of spirits (a pint a week), six quarts of foreign wine (a pint a month), and 1,080 pints of beer (not quite three pints a day).

Woman's Rights.

In the N. Y. Assembly, the Committee to whom was referred the "Woman's Rights" memorial, have made a report. They assert that the education and elevation of women, are not the offspring of legislation, but of civilization and Christianity; and the more she is elevated the greater will be the difference between the sexes. On the subject of matrimony, the Committee are very conservative, maintaining that it is not a mere contract. Other points are referred to in the report, and the Committee finally recommended the passage of the following bill:—

"1. Any married woman, whose husband, either from drunkenness, profligacy, or any other cause, shall neglect, or refuse to provide for her support and education, or for the support and education of her children, and any married woman who may be deserted by her husband, shall have the right, by her own name, to receive and collect her own earnings, and apply the same for her own support, and the support of her children, free from the control and interference of her husband, or of any person claiming to be released from the same, by or through her husband.

"2. Hereafter it shall be necessary to the validity of every indenture of apprenticeship executed by the father that the mother of such child if she be living, shall in writing consent to such indenture, nor shall any appointment of a general guardian of the person of a child by the father be valid, unless the mother of such child, if she be living, shall in writing consent to such appointment."

Extraordinary Performances of a Lady.

The following is an extract of a letter from a person travelling in the wild portions of Delaware and Sullivan counties, N. Y.—

As I was trudging along one afternoon in town of Fremont, one of the border towns of Sullivan county, I was overtaken by what I at first supposed to be a young man with a rifle on his shoulder; and being well pleased with the idea of having company through the woods, I turned round, and said, "Good afternoon, sir." "Good afternoon," said my new acquaintance, but in a tone of voice that sounded to me rather peculiar. My suspicions were at once aroused, and to satisfy myself I made some inquiries in regard to hunting which were readily answered by the young lady whom I thus encountered. She said she had been out ever since daylight—had followed a buck nearly all day, got one shot and wounded him, but as there was but little snow she could not get him, and was going to try him the next day, hoping that she could get another shot at him, and she was quite certain she should kill him.

Although I cannot give a very good idea of her appearance, I will try to describe her dress. The only article of female apparel visible was a close fitted hood upon her head, such as is often worn by deer hunters. Next, an India-rubber hunting coat; her nether limbs were encased in a snug, tight-fitting pair of corduroy pants, and a pair of Indian moccasins upon her feet. She had a good-looking rifle upon her shoulder, and a brace of double-barrelled pistols in the side-pockets of her coat, while a formidable hunting knife hung suspended by her side. Wishing to witness her skill with hunting instruments, I commenced bantering her with regard to shooting. She smiled and said she was as good a shot as was in the woods, and to convince me she took out her hunting-knife and cut a ring four inches in diameter in a tree, with a small spot in the centre.—Then stepping back thirty yards, and drawing up one of her pistols, put both both balls inside the ring. She then, at thirty-five rods from the tree, put a ball from her rifle in the very centre. We shortly came to her father's house, and I gladly accepted an invitation to stop there over night. The maiden hunter, instead of sitting down to rest, as most hunters do when they go home, remarked that she had the chores to do. So out she went; fed, watered and stabled a pair of young horses, a yoke of oxen and two cows. She then went to the saw-mill, and brought a slab on her shoulder that I should'nt like to carry, and with an axe and saw soon worked it into stove wood.

Her next business was to change her dress and get tea, which she did in a manner which would have been creditable to a more scientific cook. After tea she finished up her usual housework, and then sat down and commenced plying her needle in a very lady-like manner. I ascertained that her mother was quite feeble, and her father confined to the house with the rehumatism. The whole family were intelligent, well educated and communicative. They moved from Schoharie county into the woods, about three years before. The father was taken lame the first winter after their arrival, and has not been able to do anything since. Lucy Ann, as her mother called her, has taken charge of, ploughed, planted and harvested the farm; learned to chop wood, drive team, and do all necessary. Game being plenty, she had learned to use her father's rifle, and spent some of her leisure time in hunting. She had not killed a deer yet, but expressed her determination to do so. She boasted of having killed any quantity of partridges, squirrels and other small game. After chatting some time, she brought a violin from a closet, and played fifteen or twenty tunes, and also accompanying herself on the violin in a style that showed she was far from destitute of musical skill. The next morning she was up at four o'clock, and before sunrise had the breakfast out of the way, and all her work out of doors and in the house done, and when I left, a few minutes after sunrise, she had on her hunting suit, and was loading her rifle for another chase after the deer.

Disunion at the North.

We give below a letter from a New England gentleman, well known to some of our citizens, taking ground in favour of Disunion. We presume it would not do much harm, if we of the North, who have so often been terrified by the specure of Disunion, should now turn its frightful features towards chivalric braggarts of the South. Many of our people are beginning to believe that it is useless to try to live in peace with the South, and that a separation must come sooner or later .When a man sells us a house, pockets and spends the money, and then attempts to get possession of the house again, either by aid of the law or by force, we must set him down as a rascal and have nothing to do with him. The case is much stronger when the house was our own originally and we paid the money merely to buy our peace. There is just as little inducement to enter into or continue in partnership with such men politically as personally. Let the South beware !—Cin. Gazette.

The Tribune accompanied the publication of the letter with the following remarks:

Among the letters from the people, which we this morning publish, is one which merits particular attention as well from its subject as from the character of the author whose name is signed to it. We refer to the communication of Mr. Foote, of New Haven, under the significant title of Freedom and Disunio.. The writer is a retired and wealthy man of buisness, of ripe years and moderate and conservative tendencies. No person could be more unlikely to take extreme or fanatical views of any great public question, and yet we find him coolly advocating Disunion as the means of extricating the free States, not only from all participation in the crimes and evils of slaveholding, but from the degraded position of tools and abettors in the extension of the accursed system. At the same time he boldly proclaims what is no dubt true, that separation would be of great pecuniary benefit to the Northern States. We publish his communication as na evidence of the conclusions at which sensible and quiet men are arriving under the conviction that no agreement or compromise which the South may make on this subject can be relied on, and that Southern faith to-day is as worthless as Punic faith of old. If, they say,—and there are thousands of such men, —this Union is to be converted into a great instrument for the propagation and perpetuation of Slavery, Let it Perish! Such is the effect of the Nebraska perfidy at the North and such is the spirit to which those conspirators have given birth among the most calm and reflecting classes of our people.

FREEDOM AND DISUNION.

To the Editor of the N. Y. Tribune:

Sir: Can not a convention of wise and prudent men from the free States be had to take into consideration the propriety of their immediate separation from the slave-breeding and slave-whipping States. The "painted Devil" of Disunion has so long been held up by the South as a scarecrow to us Dough-Faces, that we are becoming accustomed to it, and we no longer tremble with fear at the sight of it as heretofore. Perhaps it would be well for the South to look its own bugbear in the face, instead of trying to frighten their neighbors with it any longer.

I can perceive no good reason that should induce the free States to wish to remain one day longer chained to the dead carcase of Slavery. They have all the elements of a great empire, and as much territory as can probably be well and safely governed under a republican regime. With unlimited quantities of wheat and iron and coal, their command of sugar and cotton will be unlimited; and with the enterprise and industry which free labor and a cold climate will always create under a free government, they must inevitably make slave labor tributary.

The struggle of the slave States for political supremacy in our National councils, is one of life and death to them, and they will inevitably succeed in it, because it is not a life and death struggle to the free States. Heretofore I have always considered a separation of the States as altogether impracticable, inasmuch as our great Western rivers all debouch through those States that must form a part of the Southern confederacy. But our railroads and canals have superseded the necessity of rivers, for any other purpose than that which Richard Brinsley said they were created, viz: to feed navigable canals.

I am not in the habit of writing political or any other kind of essays; but it appears that the pro-slavery feeling and the moral debauchery consequent upon it is so rampant that it becomes the duty of every man to raise his voice against it. As public journalists you have much power and influence, and if you would once look the subject of the separation of the States calmly and coolly in the face, you would perceive that it is not such a horrible monster as it has been represented, at least so far as the free States are concerned; and if you were once to be convinced that disunion and destruction are not convertible terms, and that it is better to let our Southern brethren enjoy the benefit of their peculiar institutions in peace and by themselves, than it is to try to convince them of that of which they have long been aware, viz: That the breeding and whipping of negroes is not only dishonest and dishonorable, but it is also very unprofitable—then I think you could do much good.

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL E. FOOTE.

New Haven, March 10, 1854.

A Visit to Dr. Duff's English School, in Calcutta.

RAIN? "R-a-i-n," spells one of the boys. What is rain? "Water from the sky." Has it been produced by the sky itself? "No!" How has it been formed? "Oh!" says one, with the characteristic smartness of the Hindu youth, "Do you not know yourself?" I think I do; but my present object is to find out whether you know it. "Well," replies another, with an air of manifest satisfaction, "I'll tell you—it is squirted from the trunk of the Indra's elephant!" Indeed: that is a new theory of the origin of rain, which I did not know before; and I should now like to know on what evidence it is founded. All I can say about it is my Gurn told me so." But your Gurn must have some reason for telling you so. Did he ever see the elephant himself? "Oh, no! the elephant is wrapped up in the cloud, as in a covering, and no one can see it with his own eyes."—How, then, came the Gurn to know that the elephant was there at all? "To be sure, because the Shastra says so," Now I understand the matter. You say the rain comes from the trunk of the elephant, "Certainly; for though I have never seen it with my own eyes, yet I believe it is there, because the Gurn has told me that the Shastra says so; and what the Shastra says must be true." Your Gurn has taught you a very different theory from that which my Gurn taught me in Scotland. Would you like to hear it. and compare the two together? "Nothing would delight us more." reply several voices. In boiling your rice, what rises from the vessel?" Smoke—vapor." True; and when it gets very, very wet, does all the vapor continue to stick to it? "No; it falls in drops." Very good. What, then, would you say of the vapor itself. Is it dry or wet? "Wet, sure enough." Whence, then, does the wet vapor proceed? "It can only be from the water in the vessel." Is the vapor a different kind of substance from the water?—"No!" Why do you think so? "Because, when it gathers on the lid, it turns to water ter again" So you conclude that the vapor is just a part of the water in the vessel?—"Yes." What drives it off, then, from the rest, and makes it fly into the air? "It is nature to do so." Think a moment; when you hold a cup of cold water in your hand do you see the vapor arising from it? "No." What, then, makes the difference between the drinking water in your cup, and the water that boils the rice? "The one is cold and the other is warm." What makes it warm? "The fire." So it is from water warmed by the fire that you see the vapor ascend, and not from the cold! What must you infer from this? "That it is the fire which, in making the water warm, makes it go into vapor." After a heavy fall of rain on the heated ground, when the sun shines out strongly in the morning, what do you see? "Great vapors or mists." Where do they come from? "From the wet ground."—Where do they go to! "Up to the sky." Is it warm or cold up in the sky? "Very cold high up, so that the fakirs say the water grows hard in the Himaylay at the source of Ganga." When the vapors from the wet ground rise up to this wet place in the sky, what will become of them? "Perhaps they will form into drops as the vapors from the boiling rice do upon the lid of the vessel."—When a great many drops gather tegether, will they stay up in the sky always? "No; they will fall down." And when a great many drops of water fall down from the sky, what is it? "Rain, to be sure." Well, that is the theory of the origin of rain which I once learned from my Gurn in Scotland. "How natural!"—"How like the truth!"—"Surely it is true." "Ah! Ah! what have I been thinking? If your account be the true one, what becomes of our Shastra?—What becomes of our Shastra? If your account be the true one, then our Shastra must be false. Our Shastra must either be not from God, or God must have written lies. But that is impossible. The Shastra is true; Brahma is true; so your Gurn's account must be false; and yet, it looks so very like the truth."

Now, here was the commencement or first germ of mental struggle which only terminated, in the case of some, with the entire overthrow of Hinduism. Up to that moment the very notion that it was possible for any thing in the holy Shastras to be false, had never been conceived even as the creation of a fitful dream. Even to hesitate on a point so sacred and fundamental, must presuppose a degree of mental effort which those who have been nursed in the lap of truth and freedom in a Christian land, can scarcely conceive. And, yet, here was now the sudden injection of a doubt, where all doubt was believed to be impossible—the sudden starting of a suspicion, where suspicion was believed to be an insult to the memory of an immortal ancestry—an impious contempt for the authority of the gods. Yet so palpable were the facts, so natural the inference, and so like the truth, that in spite of such an array of antecedent antipathy, the mind strove in vain to shake itself loose from a dreaded and hated, but struggling and clearing conviction.—Duff on India Missions.

FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.

A letter from Widdin, of the 2nd., in a Vienna journal says:—"The tete de pont of Tschernawdo, was cannonaded on the 30th ult., by the gunboats, and the Russians are said to have taken possession of a small redoubt on the road leading to Hirsova. On the same day, several French and English vessels were cruising off Mangalia, and the rear admiral in command of them, had put himself in communication with the gun-boat of Kustendje."

Letters from Constantinople fully confirm the previous reports of four of our English vessels having been fired upon by the Russian batteries on the Danube. The Bedlington, first reported, received no less than seventeen shots, and sunk in eight minutes; the Crescent received seven, and the Annie three shots. The two latter were boarded and the crews taken prisoners, but were on the following day released. The master and crew of the Annie, then took possession of their vessel, and arrived safely at Constantinople. The Crescent, however, was so severely disabled that it was found impossible to bring her into port, and she was afterwards standing within three miles of the batteries.

The Turkish corps at the command of Mustapha Pasha, who at the last dates stood at Karassa, consisted of 45,000 or 50,000.

At Kalarash, where the Russians are preparing to cross into Bulgaria, the Turks succeeded on the 1st inst., in totally destroying a whole bridge equipage, which the Russians had brought up to throw across the Danube. A letter from Bucharest, of the 4th, states that the contest which has been going on near Kalarash ever since the 28th was not then decided. Omar Pasha has set out from Silistria to Rassova, whence he would go on to Trojan's Wall, in order to conduct the operations against the Russians in person.—The Turks, at the date named, had still garrisons in the Dobrudscha, and were stationed at Kastendje, Pollas, Kostelli, Karassa, and Boghaskoi.

Below Silistria, but towards Rassova, the Turks have thrown up several batteries which for some time past have answered the Russians opposite with some hot fire. These guns must be silenced before the Russians can set about effecting the passage. In Silistria the garrison is fully prepared for every event. Since the 28th ult., all the gates have been kept shut and barricaded, one gate alone being excepted, through which in case of need, the guns planted along the strand can be brought into the fortress.

A surgeon who is in the Russian army in Wallachia, writes that the preparations for feeding and doctoring the soldiers are upon a scale unknown in previous Russian campaigns. Provisions are accumulated as if the men were going into a desert. The chimneys smoke day and night with the baking of biscuits. The slaughter of cattle at Ibrail and Galatz is incessant. This witness mentions the left wing of the Russian army as consisting of 84,000 men, referring doubtless to the corps at Kalarasch and in the Dobrudscha. He incidentally mentions that the hospitals are all crowded, a large proportion of their tenants being wounded.

The commercial ports and towns of Russia begin to fell the sad effects of the war. At Odessa, according to the Cologne Gazette, business is in a complete state of stagnation. The government has adopted the most severe measures against foreigners residing in the place, or who have come there on business. Some foreign merchants had requested the governor to give them some information as to the question of peace or war, received orders to quit the place within eight days. For several weeks past travellers arriving there—even those belonging to friendly nations—have not been allowed to quit their vessels. A Belgain merchant, whose papers were perfectly regular, had a sentinel placed over him on Board a Belgain vessel for six weeks. He then escaped from the vessel in a boat, and was picked up by her at twenty miles distant from the port.

Letters from Warsaw of the 24th ult., state that a very depressed state of feeling prevails there, notwithstanding the carnival with its attendant pleasures has been ushered in as usual. All trade is at a stand-still; Prussia's conduct excites amazement. The old Russian party views this power with mistrust, and it seems in their eyes as something perfectly astounding that Prussia should remain even neutral—that she should not instantly join the emperor.

The Military Union of France and England.

From the Paris Presse, April 12.

This event at which, the Duke of Cambridge was present yesterday, was more than a brilliant military manœuvre—it had a political importance which did not escape the notice of any of the numerous spectators who thronged the Champ de Mars. English uniforms mingled with French uniforms, were for every eye the visible sign of that strict alliance which the same feeling of dignity and civilization, and the same interest has cemented between France and England—an alliance so much the more serious and durable that it does not result from those personal considerations, nor from those dynastic affinities which the slightest incident compromises and overturns, but rests on mutual sympathy and on a truly national policy. The presence of the English officers had besides been the occasion of manifestations altogether spontaneous, which attests at the same time the progress and the justice of public opinion. The acclamations which broke out on their passage demonstrated in an undeniable manner that the union of the two nations is not less cordial than that of the governments. There remains at present nothing of the ancient prejudices which aroused such lively and deplorable passions between England and France. All the classes of society in each of these two great countries are well aware that France and England are, in the whole world, the most worthy and disinterested representatives of right, justice, and moral and material progress; that they have the same interests to carry out, and the same interests to defend; that, in fine, as their contests have shaken all the states, so their alliance confirms the general equilibrium, and guarantees the security of modern nations. The first effort of this new and generous alliance has for its object to protect the right of Europe against the ambition of Russia, to maintain respect for treaties, to arrest in their invading march the heirs of Attila Huns, and to oppose to the barbarism of the races of the north the impassable barrier of civilization. The armies which march for the support of his noble cause may be proud of their mission; they will obtain not merely that glory of a military character which is sought for on the battle-field—they will also have that still more useful glory which great services merit, rendered to humanity by the triumph of principles which ensure universal peace. Such were the sentiments and impressions which yesterday filled every mind in seeing a prince of England by the side of the Emperor of France, and the superior officers of Great Britain and France confounded in the same ranks, at the same moment when they are about to undertake the supreme struggle of right against iniquity, and of the interest of all against the ambition of a single one.

Galignani's Messenger of the same date says: The most remarkable part of this splendid pageant was not the appearance of the troops, however magnificent, but their bearing, and that of the multitude of spectators, towards the Englishmen. That our countrymen would be received with courtesy no one could doubt it, from the exquisite politeness and hospitality of the French. It was not, however, with mere politeness they were greeted, but with marked and even affectionate cordiality. As the Duke of Cambridge passed along the lines, loud and constant cries of "Vive l'Angleterre! Vive le Prince Anglais!" were raised both by soldiers and people, in conjunction with the shouts of "Vive l'Empereur!" and during the filing off these cries were again repeated with marked enthusiasm by both. The bands too, of most of the regiments, frequently played "God Save the Queen!" Amongst the pedestrians—that is to say, the lower and most numerous part of the spectators—the friendly feeling towards the English was in fact so great as to occasion surprise. "Which is the Prince?" "Which is Lord Raglan?" were the universal enquiries, whenever the imperial cortege passed near; and whenever any good natured fellow said, (with, by the way, as regarded the Duke, a greater desire to oblige than, perhaps, his knowledge of English social distinctions warranted,) "Voila, Lord Cambridge, le Prince Anglais—celui-la a cote de l'Empereur!" or "Voila, Millord Raglan—celui qui n'a qu'un bras!"—whenever such a reply was returned, up rose a shout of "Vive le Prince! Vivent les Anglais." One would have said, really, that "perfidious Albion" had never existed in the imagination of the French, and that French and English had been fast friends for ages.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS.—The Committee which was appointed on the Woman's Rights petitions in the New York Legislature have reported in favor of allowing married women, whose husbands shall, from drunkeness, profligacy, or any other causes, neglect or refuse to support and educate their families, the right to collect and entertain their own earnings. Also, that no child can be apprenticed unless the mother, if living, shall sign the indentures. A tardy act of justice; the sooner it is passed the better.

A Northern Confederacy.

It will be seen by reference to the article headed "Disunion at the North," that the Disunion doctrine in the States, is making decided progress among politicians on the other side.

The Editor of the Tribune, who is a host in himself, whether on the right side of a question, or the wrong, endorses the sentiment at once as the plan for the times. The question of the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of negro slavery, does not seem to influence these new Disunionists at all, their own trade, as well as their own liberties, being in jeopardy from the possible march of slavery North, it is that gives scope to their vision, and point to their periods.

We cannot, in view of the position taken by the writer, regard it at all in the light of an anti-Slavery movement; for Southern brethren are distinctly told that if they will not be convinced that slavery "is not only dishonest and dishonorable, but also very unprofitable," they may enjoy their peculiar institution in peace. We have often heard that to dissolve the Union to get rid of slavery, would be wrong, but the North has just as much right to set up for herself as the South, when a little trade is involved; the latter according to her leaders, and the measures advocated in the late Commercial Convention, intends to do so either at home or in Brazil; that is, after they get the "statistics" about everything,—after Congress decides to help them to build railroads, gives them everything preparatory to a successful rupture, and they feel strong enough in the joints to begin, and as it is throughout a matter of business, why may not the North forestall her? as a "speculation"—it will evidently pay: the new Disunionists give us a clear demonstration of that, all but the figures.

When did the people North ever take hold of anything that they did not make the point turn upon the everlasting dollar?

Only prove to these men that slavery could be made profitable to the North, and before one month, measures would be completed to welcome it in every free State of the Union. What assurance have the oppressed classes in the States, that the new regime North, would be more endurable than the present? Principle does not take the paramount place with them—pay does. Sure enough, some squirming is made at the thought understood that negro-catching is disagreeable, especially, as "they are not our negroes, and as our Southern brethren are bad pay," but, no manly feeling is evinced against the institutions nor in sympathy with the victims. Again, the propositions comes from those who are "thought" to think liberally. Some of the greatest declaimers against the evils of slavery "away down South," have been known to change when offered better pay: the cases are neither few nor far between. The defection from the ranks of freedom, is so ordinary, that the question with the colored people of the North, is, who are our friends?—not are they unsound. They know that the numbers of professed friends, is on the increase, but they are not so certain that their true friends are. In view of the bearing the agitation of the question will have upon the Northern colored man, the subject to him, at least, assumes a significance immeasurably beyond computation in dollars and cents. In this movement to our mind, is his future subsistence involved. We speak not of political nor social recognition. The free North with unlimited ability to be generous, has barely and grudgingly eked out to the colored man a pecuniary subsistence—he is used to enough to keep from starvation, and they to give just enough and in such a way as to prevent a just verdict against them. There has been nothing in the situation of the Northern republics, to justify their littleness in this respect, Slavery and its attendants were proven to be unprofitable to the North; by what parity of reasoning then was it assumed that the alienation of a large body of those freemen, would be an advantage? As free States, they owe nothing to the South—not even according to Southern assertion, which boldly declares that the peculiar institution shall be let alone; but as voluntary tyrants they promote within their own territories, a prejudice more debasing than the world ever before saw. Should the issue they now make, be successful—should merely commercial interests determine their action, what guarantee have the colored people of the North, that a work of expatriation may not commence, more terrible in its results than could possibly be effected even under the Union with the Southern States? The great confidence of the North is in accession of strength from foreign emigration, and in the slave labor monopoly of the Southern States.

Looking forward to an inexhaustible supply from the human store-houses of the old world, by reason of the encouragement to white emigrants to labor, she unhesitatingly labors to get rid of her colored population; the work of starvation is not to begin; already in many sections a tacit agreement obtains to withhold patronage from them.—In the large cities and towns, they are not only prohibited from buying property, or renting in good locations, but often from living on their own premises; for land is sold with an express prohibition against selling to colored people, and every ingenuity that a monkey-like imitation to "use up" our negroes can suggest, is devised upon a pitiful scale.

Strange, that with the extension of these separation views there should not be some abatement of the rancor against their colored population, but there is not! Men now live who refer with a measure of satisfaction, to periods in the past, during which the burdens of the free man were far less weighty than now. Whatever separation may do for the slave, it is very clear to our mind, at least, that but very little good may be hoped for by the freeman, so long as he continues numerically far in the minority, and so long as that minority can be effected, by a large influx from abroad, of a more highly favored class.

Our plan would be to leave for a better country, Canada for instance. But more of this next week. *

John Mitchell's Reward.

The latest intelligence received of the above worthy, will be read with great interest no doubt, as why should not everything be which relates to him?

John is a "luckier" man than is often found among the slavery advocates; he gets his pay nearly as soon as the work is done.

Webster, Clay, Calhoun—men to the manor born, severally and singly failed of the reward they sought, but John Mitchell wants a plantation well stocked with negroes, and of course, the antecedents to the same, and straightway come the antecedents in the shape of congratulations from masters, with a magnificent invitation at the end. Who will say, in view of the proverbial liberality of Southern gentlemen, when they do not have to earn the means, that the plantation and negroes will not come next in order?

It matters little that other men sought to win the Presidency, by defending the "peculiar," which "high seat" some say is far above John's humble wishes—that will not save their fame from unfavorable comparison with Mitchell, the convict.

He is decidedly the greatest genius of the whole of them—he has accomplished an unbidden task and is sure of his pay. We think there is a misapprehension in respect to the Southerners; they are usually said to be bad pay, but our opinion of them, founded on facts, is, that they not only pay promptly, but well, provided there is no bungling. True, indifferent sort of work pays poorly with them—your doughface or flunkey, though necessary to the corrupt, but thorough-bred politician. gets but little for his services, let the aim he makes be as high as it may; but the man who takes to the work from an inherent relish for it, and carves out his own course without their dictation, will not only be popular with them, but will receive marks of especial regard.

Mitchell is the man! His course has been the most successful of the many who have attempted to steer the dangerous way, because undertaken with a will, and independent of outside influence, he must have a plantation; if not, something certainly.

Southern gentlemen never have much cash to spare—the Legislature now inviting him is without funds to pay its members, but, as it is easy enough to make change with negroes, he will probably return with pockets full of it. *

The Representation of Kent.

As a great deal of misapprehension appears to exist as to the political complexion of this County, we may state that it is both largely and staunchly conservative, and that there is no question—unless there is some such accident as two conservatives running, of its returning a thoroughly reliable and uncompromising man of that party. We understand—and we make the announcement, with very great pleasure—that Mr. Larwill will again contest the County, by the general desire of the Conservative party. He is a self-made man, thoroughly conversant with the interests of the country, sufficiently independent in Parliament, and strongly conservative in his principles. That we are not mistaken in the political character of this County we subjoin the returns for the different townships at the last election, from which it will been seen, that Mr. Larwill had a large majority over the other two candidates. And there is little doubt, that had Mr. Rankin—who was a sort of John Vansittart and Francis Hincks politician—not run, Mr. Larwell would have been returned for the County Mr. Brown now represents.

We would call the attention of the colored Chathamites to the above, particulary the voting portion. The opportunity will ere long be given, to vote for or against the man who has been so long known to oppose the true interests of Her Majesty's colored subjects in Kent.

Politicians are seldom over scrupulous as to the means to be used to effect their purposes, and you of Chatham may, in view of past favours, reasonably anticipate the usual number of tricks, and extras gratis, in this instance. Remember the "Larwill Petition" against your settlement in the country. Remember the exclusive public school, from which your children are debarred admittance against all law and decency! and particularly remember the favor shown it by the prospective canditate for Conservative honors! Of what importance is Conservatism or any other ism to you, when the probabilities are, that against your peace and rights as British subjects, a war of opposition will be prosecuted, more annoying because directed by connivance of some political party? Is negrophobia to lead off in Kent, in the person of its most suitable representative, dressed in the sheep skin of Conservatism? But count not upon open and deliberate opposition before Election. No no! you may possibly find yourselves transformed into "good darkies," colored fellows, decent black men, colored men, colored gentlemen, and even colored brethren, before the time for meeting at the hustings. Who doubts it? The different classes will be treated according to their status. Who doubts that?—To the cheap character whiskey, to others, placards, flattery, &c., as the case may be.

Avoid the bait as you would the Upas. Do not permit yourselves to be disgusted by deceit or flattery, and then be caught with anonymous placards. They are then worse than all. Converts to the cause of equal rights, who take that way of showing it only, are not to be trusted. To be plain, your votes are wanted.

We dwell upon this point, because we think it deserves particular attention. Do not suffer yourselves to be deceived into a vote for the man who stands committed to the Larwill petition, even should you be a Conservative. Neither listen to any overtures that will cause you to throw away your vote; but vote, by all means, for any tinker, farmer, or what not, though a Reformer, you can find who is qualified, and who is honest enough to let you and yours prosper without molestation.

Do not, we entreat you, look at this subject indifferently, or assist in doing something now, through devotion to party names, or through ignorance, that will have to be undone. Sum total!—Do not vote for Larwill! Vote for no man opposed to you!—Persuade your neighbors to vote for a gentleman, a man who does not hate colored people, not your enemy.

Do not vote for a moderate drinker, tippler, or confirmed brandy drinker. Do not vote for Larwill!!! *

For the Provincial Freeman.

MR. EDITOR: Dear friend,—As your interesting paper, I trust, has a wide circulation among the fugitives, as well as their friends, in Canada, it may not be uninteresting to all concerned to see a letter occasionally from this region, relating to "escapes," "arrests," &c. Hence you are at liberty, if you see proper, to appropriate this letter to your readers.

Yesterday another poor escaping fugitive was found secreted on board the Pennsylvania, near Newcastle, Del., within sight of the land of liberty—of the place where he had doubtless so earnestly prayed that he might reach and be free.

This unfortunate man, evidently, through great peril, had succeeded in getting on board of the Pennsylvania, at Richmond, with high hopes of being able to escape his tormentors and oppressors, thereby winning for himself the inestimable prize which he had been so long robbed of—liberty. But how horrible and hopeless must he have felt when he heard the sound of infuriated voices of men armed with crow bars, clubs and other deadly weapons, searching in every corner of the boat for him, as they would have done for a mad dog. A lady who witnessed, with weeping, on board of the boat, the terrible scene connected with the arrest, described the savages who made the arrest, as being armed as above alluded to; and the poor heart broken hero, as looking of course very dejected and friendless. I can hardly conceive how he restrained himself from utter desperation; from taking the life of his captors, or his own. Certainly it must be beyond the conception of the human mind to fathom the bitter anguish which must pervade the bosom of any one placed in the situation he was found.

The telegraph was used in BETRAYING him. A week ago four others were taken from a boat, near Richmond, who they were or what disposition was afterwards made of them I am unable to say, having heard nothing further of them than the simple fact of their having been arrested.

These tidings I am aware will fill the heart of not a few anxious fugitives amongst you, with great sadness. Will it not revive in the minds of many most keenly the situation of dear friends left in bondage? The inquiring thought will go to many hearts doubtless, exciting their apprehension that the captured fugitives were the very ones they had been looking and praying for—their own blood kin!

Well, notwithstanding these brutal arrests and the ever vigilance of the slaveholder and slave-hunter, the number of fugitives escaping, and of those who are ready and willing to aid them to Canada are daily increasing, and there is not the least room to doubt but that the underground Rail-road will do this year, according to what has already been done since the year set in, just double the amount of business that was done last year. In this respect that mischievous book Uncle Tom's Cabin, may be charged with helping the underground largely; for but few of the intelligent "articles" there are in the south, who have not read, or heard it read, and consequently have at once "fired up" to strike for Canada. By the way, quite recently I had the pleasure of an interview with a very intelligent "piece" of property from far South, who had Uncle Tom with him, thinking as much of the old fellow probably as any other friend living.

Since writing the above, four very hearty and "likely" looking young men and women have arrived; and will soon I hope swell the goodly number who are already counted amongst her Majesty's subjects.

You are already aware that Davis the "Salt water" fugitive has been sent back to Ga. That does not end the matter, however, for the friends ance. And there is some reason to hope that their efforts will not be unavailing. That Davis will stand as good a chance on trial for his freedom in Georgia, amongst the rankest slaveholders as he would be likely to do in Del., where they think themselves quite well NORTHERNIZED, cannot for a moment be doubted, since it is now a fact that he was sent back by them notwithstanding the most unqualified proof of his freedom; and that he had been illegally deprived of his liberty, by going into Maryland, &c.

But I wish again to call your attention to "old Virginia." For some time past she has been letting off no small amount of fury on account of the "frequent escapes," from her dominion. The following specimen, taken from a Richmond paper, is about as moderate and reasonable as any thing I have seen of the sort, and I hope, therefore, you will let it have room in your paper. It reads as follows:

According to this account from the Richmond paper, the "widow lady," "Mrs. Louisa Wke," "has been left penniless" by the "rascality sneewhere," of a "nest of Abolition scoundrels or by the uncommonly intelligent negroes, "who had been raised with the greatest indulgence!" Poor soul she is to be pitied, truly!!

The writer in the Richmond paper forgot or omitted to tell his readers, however, that the very indulgent Mrs. Louisa Wike had once been in the possession of some thirty or more of the well "raised," &c., but had sold one after another until the number had been reduced to these two "uncommonly intelligent $1200 negroes," and that a mortgage of $700 was at the time of escape hanging over the head of one of them. Of course, being so "uncommonly intelligent" it was not a very hard matter for them to calculate how long it would be before their change would arrive.

Now it may be that they have been foolish enough after all, to make away to Canada, on the under-ground rail-road; if so, they should see this and learn the "penniless condition of their "indulgent Mistress. Will they not be moved to return, think you?

Your paper is read here with lively interest, so far as I know, and I have seen and conversed with quite a number on the subject.

Yours truly.

WM. STILL.

BROOKLYN, N. Y. April 12th, 1854.

MR. EDITOR,—Your paper is well received here and I hazard the assertion that in the event of its success for even one year, you will have done more for the slave as well as more to thwart the designs of colonizationist, than all the talk that the stay-here men have done in seven years. I had no idea until lately that there was so many respectable and intelligent colored men, looking Canadaward, I have no doubt but next year you will have an extensive emigration of that class from this state. Several will come out this summer to look, as they did last summer, from the Rochester Convation.

An intelligent and respectable man called on me last evening to get information in relation to Canada. This man told me that he had bought twice, during the past winter, (a house and lot each time) for bout two thousand dollars. But in consequence of the embarassments thrown in the way, he had to give them up, in the last instance, however; he made two hundred and fifty by the operation. He is determined never to attempt to buy again in the States, but is bound for Canada. Another man called on me to-day for the same purpos, who is also bound for Canada.—The class of men whom you may expect in future, will be men of enterprize and intelligence—men who will go to work; principally I think farmers. The old stay-here do-nothing men's objections will have be little weight in the course of a year or two. There are others, and many of them, too, who begin to think and act for themselves.—There was large tract of land sold a few days ago in the nighborhood of the colored settlement, called Wicsville, adjacent also to their cemetery, but they mat abruptly refused to sell to colored persons. As soon as the effect of such refusal is seen by the act of our people's leaving and going to Canada it will produce a change at once in public sentiment in regard to us here. Heretofore we have had no resort but to grin and bear it, but now that we have begun to move, it will cause a change of feeling with them. I mean the whites. A white gentleman who never was known to take any interest in colored people before now, old me that he was going to Canada this summer, expressly to see the fugitives and colored people of Canada, and wanted me to give him letters of introduction to some respectable colored fugitives there. I know of nothing that is ing more good than the general stir about emigration. It is indicative of enterprize, say the hites, and they seem doubly willing to do something for us. They are satisfied that we now mean something more than talk, and that we are really dissatisfied and mean to better our condition.

For the Provincial Freeman.

MR. EDITOR:—A short time ago I had the opportunity and pleasure of visiting several localities West, in some of which I found large numbers of colored people interspersed amongst other asses of her Gracious Majesty's subjects, who, their sobriety, industry and enterprize, are gaining the respect and confidence of all who have any dealings with them, or in any way become acquainted with them, and thereby giving a most practical and palpable contradition to the hypritical cavil of slaveholders and their abettors, who are constantly prating about the incapacity of not only their slaves, but of the colored people as a class. Thus that which has been their sole pretext for perpetuating the accursed system of slavery, is, by such repeated and continued evidences as are daily seen in this Province, and even in the U. S. most demonstrably proved to be without the last foundation in the truth. It is not my purpose however, at the present, to go into an elaborate argument to show how totally false, and basely absurd, such charges are. But I will content myself with giving a brief statement of facts respecting the colored people of this Province, which have recently been within the scope of my own observation. In St. Catharines there is a population of 500 persons; who are doing well, as mechanics and common laborers. Work is abundant and wages good. Many of them are owners of real estate property, and in comfortable circumstances; and the desire and determination of all is to become possessors of the soil or some kind of property. They have two chapels viz. Methodist and Baptist. They have had rather an inferior school, in consequence of a few negrohaters, who a few years ago took the advantage of their ignorance, and against the law and usage of the country, assigned to them an exclusive school. However they understand their rights better now, and the best of all they have the courage to demand them. In Hamilton the colored population number between 600 and 700 persons who are not one whit behind those of St. Catharines. There are several mechanics, several in business, &c. &c. They have two chapels in this place also Methodist and Baptist. They enjoy equal privileges &c. London, there are about 500 colored people in this, the handsomest and largest town in Canada West. The colored people are making most rapid progress in this place. Mr. A. B. Jones, a resident of London himself an owner of some very valuable property there, showed us a very beautiful site of land laid out in half acre lots, many of which have been purchased by colored persons. There is not a better location in London than this site of land. Here, too, the colored people have two chapels, viz: Methodist and Baptist. I suppose that by this time you have concluded that we are all Methodists and Baptists, or that, that is the extent of our religious divisions. It is pretty much the case, I assure you, to which I am quite agreed they should be limited. But I must resume my subject. All that has been said in favor of the other places, may in truth be said of London, and I am disposed to think, that London is a little ahead of either of the other two. But they are all doing remarkably well, when it is remembered that a few years ago the most of them were slaves, and came into this Province penniless, some of them almost naked; who have in a few years by their perseverance and industry, raised themselves to respectability, and if not to affluence, they are to say the least in a way fair to it. I have had the pleasure of seeing several colored farmers owning from 50 to 400 acres of land, many acres of which are now cleared and in a fine state of cultivation. I think that without doubt, our farmers are far excelling every other class amongst us. They have a decided advantage over the other classes; of which we may speak hereafter.

ELEVATOR.

For the Provincial Freeman.

MR. EDITOR: Education, wealth, numbers and unity are always essential to the establishment of a great and prospering people. By education I mean all religious, civil, political, moral, and all other culture of a virtuous nature. With this simple exposition I shall proceed to make a few remarks which I trust will not be altogether uninteresting.

It is a well known, but sad truth, that we are not an educated people; and it is too true that we do not take that pleasure in literature that we should—I speak generally. It is equally true that we do not justly appreciate the indispensable duty which we owe to ourselves, our children, our neighbor, the world and to God, of improving ourselves, cultivating our mental faculties, expanding our minds, and acting an illustrious part in life. We crave to be a great people—desire to cut a conspicuous figure in the world's history, but what is any people without education? Can we conduct our civil and political affairs, carry on an extensive commerce, have proper influence in the legislative halls of the world—estimate the wealth and power of other nations, and thereby endeavor to surpass their prosperity, advance in the social circle, pass along through the wide world, winning the respect of others, or answer the great and wise end for which we were placed here, without education? Let us suppose an uneducated people, possessing wealth, numbers and unity, to exist, what must inevitably be their fate, amid the strife and prosperity of the intelligent and enterprising powers of the earth? Would not a few short years' collision reduce them to the degraded and humiliating condition of the aborigines of this hemisphere, who had wealth, numbers and unity, but no education? What, but the want of mental cultivation, reduced the Indians to their truly melancholy state?

Then, if the want of education can so soon reduce a people to a state of wretchedness, what must it do for those who are so scattered that they can scarcely be called a people? Ever keep them chained in ignorance, degradation and misery, to the earth, cursed for their own stupidity. Then we must educate—we must devote a portion of our time to mental culture; we must become a reading people. But if we sacrifice our literary pursuits at the miser's shrine, we may have bags of gold, and lands, and property of various kinds; yet we shall live fools, and die like brutes, comparatively speaking. Then let us raise the alarm from all quarters, for our people to educate: the public journalist, the itinerant orator, the historian, the poet, the dramatist, the minister of the sacred desk—one and all, labor not merely to dif-fuse knowledge, but to in-fuse an ardent desire in young men and young ladies—children of both sexes—father and mother—all to ameliorate their present condition in a literary point of view—exhibit inducements and show them the advantage to be derived from a well and thoroughly informed mind. I do not wish to be understood to intimate that our people are a parcel of ignoramuses—not by any means; for there never were, I presume, a people who advanced so rapidly, amid so many impediments and obstacles as ours have done, for the last few years. Indeed, it is very gratifying and consoling to know that "March! march!" is new our watch-word, and that our progress is not simply onward, but rapidly onward and upward. Yet there are negligence and slothfulness, which might, to good effect, be superseded by close application, enterprise and research. What would be the result if those who spend their leisure time in liquor-shops—seminaries of vice, crime and corruption—and other places of idle and detrimental amusement, should apply themselves to study, prying into the hidden treasures of knowledge, as the bee extracting the sweetness of the most delicious flowers, and storing it in that repository which is the most capable of retention? Why, in a short time we might see men rising in our midst eclipsing a Sir Isaac Newton and laying an illustrious Franklin in the shade! Poets surpassing a Milton and obscuring the lustre of a Pollock; and thus we should "live down prejudice," and procure fame, that the winds and storms of time should scarcely ever deface, or the assaults of enemies destroy.

Then I repeat it, we must educate—it is not enough for us to merely "read, write and cipher" in the common rudiments, but we must dip or pry into the fine arts and sciences; we must become painters, sculptors, architects; in short, scientific and it must be by our own exertions. When we have ended our collegiate course, we are not truly wise, but must become so by research afterwards. A great many of our people delight to be reputed vile, wretched, ignorant, and everything of a vicious character that tends to reduce and degrade a people—each one, I presume, pleases to make an exception of himself, thinking the "speaker did'nt mean me." I need hardly adduce any instances to prove the reality of that affirmation.

There was, a few evenings ago, a kind of mixed or compounded being of idiocy, lunacy, insanity, self-elation and absurdity, who tried to lecture—judge of the fruit by the tree, and then will be drawn a proper conception of the kind of lecture, or concatenation of absurdities that it was, reputing us as fratricides, cannibals, sodomites,—yet it pleased some persons, among whom—I speak with shame—was one that makes proud pretensions to have founded mighty settlements, and to be a benefactor of his people.

Now I say emphatically, that we have lived, or do live behind the age, to tolerate such measures. We need self-respect, which will impel us to commiserate the inability of some who try to lecture us, and cause us to recoil at their paroxysms. There is no pleasure for me in letters, when I am distressed in consequence of the death of friends, or the infirmities of my family; I resort to my studies as the only alleviation for my grief. So soon as we become educated, we will become great, for "Knowledge is power," is a phrase quite common, yet whenever I repeat it, there seem to be rays of lustre emitted, and it seems to exhibit new and strange attraction. What wealth is so justly appreciated, as that which one gains by the sweat of his own brow? What knowledge is equal to that which one has gained by long and continued research? What men have been so great as the self-made men?

"Lives of great men all remind us,
We can make our lives sublime;
And departing, leave behind us,
Foot-prints on the sands of time."

I must not omit to mention the new addition to our literature, and the almost ecstatic alacrity with which I reviewed those columns that obscure the "star" which formerly shone so brightly, and speak louder, clearer and truer than the Voice of Eurocidon!

I solicit the generous and prompt patronage of one and all, in behalf of this new addition—for the more extensive the patronage, the more interesting will be the Provincial Freeman.

HARVEY C. JACKSON.

Speech of Rev. Wm. P. Newman.

The speech below, delivered at the TEA MEETING, recently held in this city, is published by request.

MR. CHAIRMAN:—The public notice of this entertainment indicates that a "short and spicy" speech would be made this evening, by me, in common with other speakers. But I assure you, sir, after what has been said by the gentlemen who have addressed us, it embarrsaes me to attempt even to utter a syllable on the present occasion; and, sir, my embarrassment is increased, from the fact, that my remarks will not be 'spicy, as expected, though 'short.' They will be but a mite. They will be given, however, as a mere unisonous adjunct to the speeches of the gentlemen who have preceded me. And, sir, it is deeply regretted that what I say, must be like the wine set forth first at the marriage in Cana of Gallilee, when it should be like that sent to the governor at the last of the feast.

But allow me to say, sir, that I am highly pleased with the uniform and salubrious influence of this entertainment,—notwithstanding there are objections to entertainments of this kind, especially when they are held in places consecrated to the worship of our good, great Creator. But, sir, it is to be hoped, that the good arising from such a blending of caste and color in social unity, as we have to-night, will never be regretted. I say social unity, because sir, sociability is a blessing of the highest order when properly used, and is ordained of God, to bridge foorver, the unhappy gulf that divides the several nations, and I can but hope that the Toronto part of that bridging has begun to-night, by our mutual mingling.

Sir, when I speak of different nations, it presupposes, as body does space, their inherent equality as to consanguinity, sociability, personal identity and immortality. Such data, sir, seem to me to be the true basis of social life; and such life, the key-stone of that magnificent and blissful arch that spans the ocean of true happiness. To me sir, our life on earth is such, chronologically, as to enable us to become one now, that we may be one forever; and since sociability belongs more to spiritual than to our animal nature, what is more reasonable, than that immortal beings should be connected by social ligaments, in time and for eternity?—Nature would teach us this lesson. We find no chasm in her kingdom.—Her mineral, her vegetable, her animal, her intellectual and her spiritual kingdoms all unite, and form one symmetrical and beautiful whole, and fill their inhabitants with happiness beyond expression. We should adhere to nature; hence it does seem to me, sir, that minds clothed alike in white and black habiliments—that spirits cast in the same mould—that the virtuous and various classes and colors of our good and common country—a country nourished and protected by our Gracious Majesty, Queen Victoria—a sovereign who is inimitable, and more than loved, should be socially united. Sir, our true well-being needs it—the safety of our country demands it, as the safety of the universe requires a union of the archangel of glory and the mote in the sunbeam. And now, sir, as such union does not properly exist among us, it seems but duty that we should begin to do something to fill up that baneful gulf—the abyss of Satan, and that we may do somewhat by our often meeting, as to-night, on terms of sociability, and equality. To do so would be God-like and is duty; God-like on your part sir, but duty my own. Reason urges, and elevation attests the necessity of descent and ascent on the part of the higher and lower classes of men, in order to consolidate them and to make them one lovely and happy whole; and if this generation of men will not do this work, then another must; for reason is right; revelation is true, and humanity is no lie.

We exist, then sir, as social creatures, and our existence not only indicates the cause, but also the end, for which we exist, and the end the means to attain it in co-relation herein, sir, we cannot break away from the orbit of humanity and be guiltless. Indeed, sir, our unity is stamped even by our very additions and divisions—herein we find the reasonable use of the couplative and disjunctive cojunctions, when expressive of human nature. Thank heaven, sir, let us go where we may, we must find ourselves within the circle of humanity, and whether we have sociability or not, we cannot be truly happy without it! I would not go to extremes on this subject; but sir, to me sociability is the connecting link between heaven and earth. And a social reformer is a benefactor of his race: he does a great and good work—a work next to that of Him who came into our world and suffered and died, that he might socially unite man to man, and the finite to the infinite.

But, sir, I am admonished that my remarks must be short, hence, I conclude by adding, with much pleasure we confess our thankful indebtedness to the ladies who have prepared us this entertainment—a feast rich, invigorating to our physical, intellectual and moral natures. Sir, this evening's work deeply impresses me with a sense of woman's worth. Truly her vocation is responsible; her destiny high. Oh! sir, though somehow through woman, man fell, yet thank God, in some sense by woman is man to be redeemed. She is yet to control our world, and may the day soon come, sir, when she shall ascend her proper throne and in triumph reign!

And, sir, on behalf of the ladies of this church I would acknowledge their gratitude to you, sir, and others who have honored them with your presence and favored them with you aid. Such manifestation of disinterested regard and kindness we, as a people, never forget. Injuries received from enemies, we write on the sand; but such marks of distinguished consideration, and honor and love, from friends, we engrave now and forever upon the table of our hearts.

The "City of Glasgow".

As our readers are aware, this fine vessel, running between Liverpool and Philadelphia, has now been out very much beyond her usual time. Serious apprehensions are entertained respecting her fate. It is barely possible that her engines may have become disabled during the voyage, and that she may yet be heard of as having reached her distination or gone back to some English or other European port. The following paragraph from the Philadelphia Daily Register of the 24th ult., is intereesting:

As day passes by and no tidings reach us from this vessel, the hope that she may be safe grows more faint. In these times of speedy inteligence from all parts of the world, it is barely possible that she may yet be safe. Many have hoped to hear from her when a vessel should arrive from the Azores. On Saturday that hope was dissipated by the arrival of the bark Ithona at New York, fom Antwerp. She was obliged to put into Fayal in distress, from whence she sailed on the 3d of the present month. She brought no tidings of the missing steamship. The thirty-three days that had intervened from the time of the sailing of the City of Glasgow from Liverpool up to the time the Ithoria left Fayal would have been entirely sufficient for to reach that port, unless completely disabled or icebound.

The dates from Liverpool are now up to the 8th inst, and it would it seem hardly possible that she could have put back to an English port. The awful suspense of those having friends on board cannot be portrayed. We have been made acquainted with two cases, in which men of this city have wives and families on board, and such is the horrid suspense that they are entirely incapacitated for any business. Almost any news would be preferable to such suspense; but the mind will long cling to the hope that the vessel and her precious burthern of over four hundrhd human beings, may yet be restored. It is barely possible; it would be folly to pretend that it is probable.

To the Canada Company's Settlers.

We beg to draw the serious attention of the settlers on the lands of the Canada Company, to the annexed notice. The desire of the Company, and the anxious wish of the commissioner in Canada, is, that the original lessee may be enabled, by timely exertion, to secure the freehold of the lot on which he has toiled for years. Some there are, who, from different causes, neglect to make the necessaay provisions to meet the small yearly payments promised to the Company; and, when the lease is about to expire, find that the arrears of from six to ten years, amount to more than they can procure, without disposing of their interest in the lease. Thus a large number of farms have, within the past year, changed hands in the Huron tract.—Old settlers, from the eastern portion of the Province, or emigrants direct from Europe, with considerable means, purchase the improvements of the tenant, in some instances giving from £150 to £400, not so much on account of the improvements on the land, as in consideration of the general advance of al real estate in Upper Canada. The departing tenant penetrates farther into the wilderness, with a thorough knowledge of the country, its hardships, privations and advantages, taking with him a sum of money greater than he could have realized had he not become a tenant on the lands of the Canada Company, while supporting his family comfortably in the meantime:—

"The Canada Company takes this opportunity to again call your most serious attention to the conditions of the lease issued to you, particularly to the covenant which requires, after all others are fulfilled, that you should, on or before the expiration of the term of ten years, pay the amount of purchase money mentioned in the lease, if you desire to exercise the right reserved to you; if you do not punctually do this, all your rights and interests in the property will cease absolutely, and be at an end. If you cannot yourself furnish the requisite purchase money, we would urge you to find some persons—and there are plenty of them whose business it is to do so—who would advance the required money, or purchase your improvements, so that you may secure the benefit of them: but you must take care that no transfer is attempted without the Company's consent, and that it must be completed before the expiration of the term of lease."—Prototype.

A CHARMING LOCALITY.—A correspondent of the Saginaw Enterprise writing from the far South says:

I am now spending a few days at the mouth of Red River—and few I hope they will be. As a general thing there is sufficient variety of scenery along the the banks of the rivers, to create pleasing emotions in the mind of the beholder, especially if an admirer of the delicate or rugged architecture of nature, as seen in green fields, undulating groves, majestic waterfalls, craggy rocks and mountains; but in this place there is no such variety, and in fact nothing to admire but a majestic river and a monotonous wilderness of mud and water. When the river is high I know of no place more gloomly—then being some ten or twelve feet above the banks, and extending back in many places from twenty to fifty miles, only leaving hear and there a small island on the bank of the river. Although this appears sufficiently dismal, still at midday, perhaps, a thick fog shrouds the whole country in night; huge bullfrogs utter their deep guttural, like muffled drums beating the farewell dirge of time. This state of weather may remain several days.

When the river falls within its banks, then the lazy alligator may been seen basking in the sun, with the upper jaw thrown back, inviting all the flies in the vicinity to partake of its bounty. Also the black-snake is suspended from its limb, awaiting the approach of some unhappy victim; whilst the sluggish buzzard more foul, if possible, then the Harpies sent by Juno to plunder the tables of Phineas, gorges itself on dead frogs, snakes, and everything filthy. The air too, is literally alive with musquitoes, which must and will have a living. This is but a faint picture—my pen cannot paint the realities of this place. When man, really becoming sick of the busy cares of life, or the lover, having failed in wooing his intended, thinks to find charms in solitary life, let them spend a few months in some beautiful (?) island in the Mississippi swamps, and they can return and find charms in society, never seen or felt before.

CUSTOMS RETURNS.—The statement of the imports for the quarter ending on the 5th inst., shows an increase over the corresponding quarter of last year, of about 96 per cent. The increase of duties is about 60 per cent. On goods paying specific and ad valorem duties, the amount is £32,648; on those paying 30 per cent duty, £2,592; on 20 per cent, £460; on 12½ per cent, £34,856; and Free goods, the amount of imports is £20,764—making the total value of imports £243,909. The increase this quarter over the corresponding one of 1853 is £119,472.

STRIKE ON THE GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.—We are sorry to say that this strike is not at an end. It appears that having been brought out by the Company, upon indentures, binding them to work 60 hours per week, and having hitherto been allowed to leave their work two hours in advance of the regular time on Saturdays, they have lately been required ro keep to the strict letter of their bargain. This they have declined to do; and have sought to create sympathy in the minds of the mechanics and other working men of the city by calling a public meeting on Saturday afternoon. Now, doubtless all working men, like all other men, have the right to make the best bargain they do for their labor, but a bargain once made should be complied with. Besides it must be evident to everybody, that there is only a certain price that can be given for anything. If the market is overstocked, the thing in the maket will not be disposed of at all. We suspect the margin is pretty closely approached already in railroad matters; but this is altogether a matter for the judgement of the parties interested, when they are free, without previous contracts to do as they like. But it is not worth while for all parties to consider this matter; for out of door work lasts only a few months in our climate, and if the summer is passed in idleness, the loss cannot be repaired in the winter. The meeting on Saturday afternoon was a very poor affair.—Montreal Herald.

THE CROPS.—We hear complaints from the farmers of this county, of the state of the Winter wheat, which they say appears to have been much damaged by the severe frost and absence of snow.—Kent Advertiser.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Wednesday last, a young man about 18 years of age, named Corrigan, was killed by the falling of a tree while at a "bee" held near Valcartier. He lingered for about two hours after the accident.—Quebec Gazette.

Parliament Buildings Totally Destroyed by Fire!

QUEBEC, May 3—11 P. M.

This evening, at half-past 10 o'clock, by some unaccountable fatality, the handsome and capacious edifice situated on Cote-a-Coton, built as a Church for the Sœurs de Charite, which was neatly fitted up temporarily at an immense expense for the meeting of Parliament, is this moment in one sheet of flames. The cupola at one end and the handsome spire at the other are wreathed in smoke, and the flames are rushing out over Mr. Dean's house on the one side and bursting forth through the lofty gothic windows all round.

The firemen are adjusting their hose. The commandant is at the scene of destruction, and thousands of people are looking on, and doing what they can in the way of saving property, but the building is doomed. Only to-day a carpet for this building, costing £150, was bought and paid for, but, no doubt, it is covered by insurance. All particulars will be given as they become known.—Colonist.

GRAFTING CURRANTS.—The Gardiner's Chronicle recommends for the pretty appearance presented, as well as for improved flavour, to graft currants of different colors, as the red, black and white, variously intermixed, on stocks trimmed up the single stem three or four feet high. The tops may be headed down to a compact head, or trained as espaliers in the horizontal or fan method, the two latter modes of training, by the free exposure to the sun and air, much improving the quality of the fruit. The importance of trimming the bush up to a single stem to improve the fruit and facilitate clean culture, instead of suffering two hundred and fifty suckers to shoot up all round into a dense brush heap, is very obvious to those who have tried both.

The Superior Court has refused to set aside the verdict rendered against Mr. James Patton, for £1000, for breach of his promise to marry Miss Caroline Ferguson, and condemned the defendant to pay the amount awarded by the Jury, with all costs.—Quebec Gazette.

CANADIAN CREDIT.—It is just twenty years since the province of Canada first borrowed money of this country. The loan was for twenty years and the time being up on Saturday last, the 1st of April, 1854, the whole sum due was paid in full out of the surplus revenues of the province. This fact speaks volumns for the progress of the of the colony.—London Times.

ARRIVAL.—We are glad to learn that Mr. Jame Sykes the leading partner of the firm of Messrs. Sykes, Du Bergue & Co., has arrived in this city. It is understood that he has brought with him large credits on a London Banker, and that the contract which he has undertaken of the Brockville and Ottawa Railroad, will be commenced immediately on the opening of navigation, and prosecuted with considerable vigour.—Montreal Gazette.

A GREAT FACT.—At a meeting of the City of London Ragged Schools, held on Friday evening in the institution in Foster-street, Bishopsgate, Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Wire said, that the ragged schools juvenile crime had diminished 50 per cent.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him. Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon raise, or any other of the one great humrn family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. WARD, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony.—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B GRIBBLE, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. THOMAS JAMES, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number.

Miscellaneous.

Look at the Bright Side.

BY MRS. SARAH T. BOLTON.

Where'er your lot is cast
In the fair ivy of man,
Whether esteemed the first or last,
Do the best you can.
Though most obscure and poor,
Maintain an honest pride,
And, laboring to increase your store,
Look at the brightest side.

Strive, strive, with might and soul,
To win the good you crave,
And if you cannot reach the goal,
Show your spirit brave.
Far better aim too high
And fall, it fall you must,
Than to remain, as life goes by,
Grovelling in the dust.

If friends should recreant prove
When most the aid you need,
Trust in Heaven—poor human love
Is but a feeble reed;
But pause before you take
Revenge for wounded pride—
Perchance there must be some mistake,
Look at the brightest side.

When midnight gloom enshrouds
The valley and the hill
Far up beyond the envious clouds
The stars are shining still;
So present troubles may
A smiling future hide—
Waiting till they pass away,
Look at the brightest side.

Lend not a listening ear
To slander's whispered tale—
To make a neighbor's fault appear
Can be of no avail.
If he has done a wrong
That cannot be denied,
He may have had temptation strong—
Look at the brightest side.

As nature has not dealt
Equality between,
You cannot feel as he as felt,
Nor see as he has seen.
Some mote may dim your sight,
Or intercept your view,
Till what appears to him but right
Seems only wrong to you.

Judge not another's sin
Till you have scanned your own;
And when your heart is pure within,
Then cast at him a stone;
Perhaps your reckless tracks
Did his frail feet misguide—
Then if you disapprove his acts,
Look at the brightest side.

From Chamber's Edinburgh Journal.

The Man who does the work and the Man who takes the pay.

Wherever there is what business language calls a "good thing, you may be tolerably certain there is "a party." The function and vocation of "the party" is to advance a little needful money to carry on the concern, receiving the great bulk of the profits in return. Be it some little shop speculation, some new mode of supplying an old want of the public, a successful periodical work, a clever and widely serviceable invention, or whatever else, the originator falls naturally into the hands of "a party"—so naturally, or as a matter of course, that he would probably feel his position to be somewhat eccentric were it otherwise. When we see, then, any apparently good thing, or any man to all appearance conducting a large and lucrative concern, it would be rash to take it all as it seems. We need to know the secret arrangement with "the party" before speculating on the subject. It is like looking over the landlords of an Irish county, where we see only the nominal owners, living or not living on the acres, while the real proprietors are the owners of mortgages—men who derive all the sweets of property, without any duty to perform or state to keep up.

It is the part of any honest blundering fellow to keep a shop from morning till night, to tax his brain in writing, in order to keep up some literary undertaking, or to negociate and realize some adroit piece of mechanism or some useful and chemical compound; it is easy to be the ostensible, toiling, meritorious man in all these cases. But to be "a party," sitting calmly in the rear, making a small sum of money, judiciously applied, serve the purpose usually supposed to be served by talent and diligence, thus to pocket proceeds with little risk, no responsibility, no work—that requires a truly clever person. The nominal man is like a hand; "the party" is as the head. The former is human and work man like; the latter is a master and a kind of deity. No one knows what it is to be "a party" till he has become one himself, or fallen into the hands of one. "The party" sees his fellow creatures flocking around him, begging to be saddled, bridled, ond to be ridden by him. He feels like the Evil One, buying up human souls. In the English commercial world, it is scarcely worth while to be anything but "a party." In literature, to be an author of name is to be a slave; to be "a party" even it be only the stationer who supplies the paper, and you are in comparison as one who sits on Olympus, and shakes the spheres.

Many years ago a demand arose among the ladies for a particular kind of lace work, applicable to various articles of dress, and which could be almost entirely manufactured by machinery. The machines required were expensive, and as only a single pattern could be executed on one, the variety in the descriptions of goods produced did not for a long time at all keep pace with the continued and increasing demand. It happened, owing to the illness of the maker of the original, machines which were always kept closed against the prying eyes of visitors, that a young Lancashire machinist was called in to repair one which had suffered fracture. The young man studied its structure well, made drawings of the various parts, and in the leisure of his evenings at home pondered over them, with a view, if possible, of effecting some valuable improvement. After a twelve-month's thinking and experimenting, and the laborious construction of a working model, he hit upon a new plan, by which it was practicable to work any number of patterns by a single machine, and that, too, one of a much less complex description, and therefore less liable to need repairs than any then in use. Had he been wise, he as was ingenious, he would have held his peace, and taken measures to secure for himself the advantage of his invention. But the thing got wind, and came to the ears of "a party," who flew to the inventor, bought up the entire property in the new machine, at a cost of less than £100, got it rapidly constructed and into work, and has pocketed from that time to this—a period extending over a quarter of a century—an income sometimes amounting to tens of thousands annually, arising solely from that single bargain. The inventor continued a working machinist to the last day of his life, and died lately, leaving his family to maintain themselves by their own labor.

At the late grand show in Hyde Park, were a multitude of ingenious contrivances by men of no previous reputation and of little or no capital. Many of these which were more clever than useful, died a natural death; and many more through the attention they there excited, have been brought into use, and have added to the perfection of our means of manufacture, or to the efficiency of our domestic implements or arrangements for home comfort. But if the question could be answered—who has reaped the profit arising from their dissemination? we are persuaded that in the majority of instances that smart business practitioner, "the party," would be found to have swallowed the lion's share. Among many examples, is that of a maker of musical instruments, in a small way of business, who, by a simple mechanical application, so much improved the power of an instrument in common use, as to effect in those which he produced a very marked superiority over those of rival makers. He was, with reason, sanguine as to the ultimate results of his invention—but wanting the means to make it generally known, he unavoidably fell into the hands of "a party," who offered to advance the necessary capital under certain conditions. The conditions were—that the inventor should bind himself under a ruinous penalty, to surrender every instrument he should make for the next seven years to his patron at a specified price above the cost of material, and should pledge himself not to make less than a certain number per month. This bargain was agreed to, and signed and sealed under legal direction. The result is that the inventive genius, from being a small manufacturer, has become a large one, inasmuch as he now makes twenty instruments where he formerly made two—but he declares, and we believe truly, that he has not a penny more to spend upon himself, owing to the extremely minute fraction of profit which comes to his share—while he has the anxiety and responsibility of a large establishment to add to his former grievances. Meanwhile, "the party" derives a benefit of forty to sixty per cent. upon every instrument produced, and will continue to do so for five years longer by the end of which time he will have amassed, at the present rate of demand, a net gain little short of £17,000. We might parallel this case of the music-instrument maker by a tale of a printer of paper hangings, whom another "party" beguiled into a similar predicament; and again by that of a gun-maker, who was no better off till he put an end to a contract of the same kind by slipping into his coffin.

In cultivating what he calls the "legitimate use of capital," the "party" has no exclusive tastes. Give him only a concern involving small outlay, little risk, and no trouble, and he is ready to go into it. We have to imagine him in all possible spheres. Say he has fallen in with an improvident artist of rising talent, he has engaged all his pictures for the next seven years, and perhaps makes the modest gain of five hundred per cent. by the speculation. We must view him even entering into the sacred walks of science. Several years ago, a scientific man of high character and attainments, in the course of his experiments in relation to the subtilest and strangest of all natural agencies, had fallen upon the germ of a new discovery, which was destined to operate a mighty change to the advantage of society in all its phases, whether political, commercial or domestic. In partial ignorance of the grand results to ensue from his discovery, and in total ignorance of the natural history of "the party," he admitted a specimen of that genius into his confidence, and entrusted him with the practical demonstrations of the mechanism before the public. "The party" soon felt the importance and value of his position; and, as usual, came to consider the inventor a mere subordinate. When, by and by, it was proposed to form a joint-stock company for the purpose of working out the discovery, "the party" conducted the negociation, and having obtained the offer of upwards of a hundred thousand pounds, proceeded to arrange with the inventor, that he should accept about a fifth of that sum, and then put the remaining four-fifths in his own pocket. This was, perhaps—take it for all in all—the most brilliant stroke of work ever performed by any "party."

Gentle reader, when you see a fine shop with an appearance of good custom, do not hasten to think that the owner is a prosperous man—wait to learn whether he has "a party" sitting like a buttery spirit in the backroom, eating up the profit. Where you see a clever, active publisher bringing out great numbers of capital books, and making himself no inconsiderable fame, don't rashly conclude that he must be making a fortune. Perhaps "a party," in the form of a wholesale stationer, who supplies all his paper at not more than 15 per cent. above market prices, saves him from all the cares of increasing wealth. If you find the world going distracted about a particular writer and if buying his books in scores of thousands, don't think, if you are yourself a poor author, that he, as a rich one, may be able to lend you fifty pounds till your history of the Lower Empire comes out. Perhaps his publisher acts towards him as "a party," and cannot though he wished it, be very merciful, seeing that he is in the hands of "a party" in turn. In short, wherever there is an appearance of thriving, suspect there may be "a party" and you will seldom be wrong; for the fact is, where the spoil is, there will the eagles be gathered together.

The Legislature of this country is very rigorous in imposing restrictions upon a set of poor tradesmen calling themselves pawnbrokers, from an idea that it is necessary to protect the public against their practices. With "parties" who are to pawnbrokers what tigers are to ferrets, it takes no such trouble. Happy fraternity! unseen, unknown, irresponsible, a continued feast of the kind which Sancho liked—namely, behind backs—is yours.

You have nothing to do but to fix a spiggot in a neighbour's heart, and sit enjoying the crimson stream. How intense must be your sense of triumph over the poor fools who take front places in the world where there is nothing but responsibility, hard work and the mockery of a little honor! How you must hug yourselves on the sagacity which is contented to sit in a back seat, and suck unnoticed! How supreme must be your contempt for work and duty!

ALWAYS DO WHAT IS RIGHT.—The truly great are those who always do what is right. To be withheld from acting wisely and conscientiously, by motives of temporary policy or fear, is to behave not only like a coward, but like a traitor to the principles of justice. A man should think less what may be said of his conduct at the time, than of the verdict that may be pronounced a few years in advance. It is by neglecting this, by sacrificing principle to expediency, that character is lost; and character once lost, is with difficulty regained. Besides, the first decline from right leads to others. It is like the start in sliding down a hill.

But there is a worse feature than even this, in succumbing to baseness meanness or wrong. Habit soon dulls the moral perceptions, so that, in time, men come to perpetrate, without a remorseful pang, acts at which originally they would have been astounded. "Is thy servant a dog that he should do this thing?" is the indignant exclamation of many a person, who eventually commits the very deed he abhorred. Arnold's treason grew up in his mind by slow degrees, nurtured by extravagance and supposed neglect. Washington, by always being rigidly correct, left behind a name that will never cease to be reverenced.

To say merely that "honesty is the best policy," and thus appeal to the selfish part of our nature, is a poor way to induce men to do right conscientiously. Better the nobler and higher ground that right should be done for right's sake.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Poor Child's Grave.

He sleeps as calmly there,
Within his green grass grave,
As peacefully as where
Ten thousand banners wave.

Still softly o'er the green,
With hush'd and hallowed tread:
A little mound is seen—
It is a poor child's bed.

And side by side it lies
Where marble gleaming fair
Bespeaks a youth of praise—
A rich man's titled heir.

What is the pride of birth?
It dwells not in the tomb:
There earth returns to earth,
And lowly lies in gloom.

He sleeps as calmly there,
Within the green grass grave,
As peacefully as where
Ten thousand banners wave.

LITTLE CHARLIE.

I am one of that persecuted class, denominated "old maids." By going quietly about the world, taking care not to jostle my neighbors, or hit against any of their rough angles, I manage to be cheerful, contented and happy. In my multitudinous migrations I have had some opportunity to study human nature. Lately, I have become a temporary inmate of a crowded boarding-house. My little room has already begun to look homelike. The cheerful sun has expanded the fragrant flowers I love so well to nurture; my canary trills his satisfaction in a gayer song than ever; and my pictures, books and guitar, "drive dull care away," and beguile many a pleasant hour. And now my heart has found a new object of interest. I've noticed on the staircase, and in the hall and lobby, a lovely child, who seemed wandering about at his own sweet will; sometimes sitting wearily on the stairs, almost asleep; then loitering at the kitchen door, watching the operations of the cook; then peering into the half-open doors of the different apartments. As by a rule of the house, "no children were admitted at the table," it was some time before I could ascertain who claimed this little stray waif.

One morning, attracted by the carol of my canary, he ventured to put his little curly head inside my door. He needed little urging to enter; for he read, with a child's quick instinct, his welcome in my face. An animated conversation ensued about birds, flowers and pictures—his large blue eyes growing bright, and his cheek flushed with pleasure, as story followed story, while he sat on my knee.

At length I said to him, "Charlie, won't mamma be anxious about you, if you stay so long?"

"Oh, no," said he, "Lizzie don't care."

"Who is Lizzie?"

"Why, my mamma! She don't care if I'm only out of the way. "Lizzie made me this pretty dress, said he, holding up his pretty embroidered frock; "but Lizzie don't know any stories, and she says I'm a bore."

"What is a bore?" said the sweet child, as he looked trustingly in my face.

"Never mind now," said I tearfully; "you may stay with me whenever you like, and we will be very good friends."

The dinner-bell sounding, a gaily dressed young thing vociferated, in a voice anything but musical, "Charlie! Charlie!" When I apologised for keeping him, she said, carelessly, as she re-arranged her bracelets, "Oh, t don't signify, if you can have patience with him, he's so tiresome with his questions. I've bought him heaps of toys, but he never wants to play, and is forever asking me such old-fashioned questions. Keep him and welcome, when you like, but take my word for it, you'll repent your bargain!" and she tripped gaily down to dinner.

Poor little Charlie! Time in plenty to adjust all those silken ringlets; time to embroider all those little gay dresses; time to linger till midnight over the last new novel; but for the soul that looked forth from those deep blue eyes, no time to sow the good seed; no time to watch lest the enemy should "sow tares."

From that time, Charlie and I were inseparable. The thoughtless mother, well content to pass her time devouring all sorts of trashy literature, or in idle gossip with her drawing room companions. The young father, weary with business troubles, contenting himself with a quiet "good night," and closing the day by a visit to the theatre and the concert-room. Poor Charlie, meanwhile, put to bed for safe keeping, would lie hours, tossing restless, from side to side, "with nothing but his head," as he innocently said to me. What a joy to sit by his side and beguile the lonely hours! There I learned to understand the meaning of our Saviour's words, "For of such is the kingdom of heaven."

In his clear, silvery tones, he would repeat after me, "Our Father," asking me the meaning of every petition; then he would say, "Why don't you tell Lizzy? Lizzy don't know any prayers!"

One night I sang him these lines:

"Sweet fields beyond the swelling flood,
Stand dressed in living green —

he raised himself in bed, while the tears trembled on his long lashes, and said, "O, sing that again—it seems as if I saw a beautiful picture." Then, taking my guitar, I would sit up by his bedside, and watch the blue eyes droop and grow heavy with slumber, as I sang to him.—And she, whose duty, and joy, and pride it should have been to lead those feet to him who biddeth "little children come," was indolently and contentedly bound in flowery fetters of her own weaving, unmindful that an angel's destiny was entrusted to her careless keeping.

Little Charlie lay tossing in his little bed with a high fever. It is needless to tell of the hold he had on my heart and services. His childish mother, either unable or unwilling to see his danger, had left me in charge of him—drawn from his side by the attractions of a great military ball. I changed his heated pillows, gave him the cooling draught, bathed his feverish temples, and finally, at his own request, rocked him gently to quiet his restlessness. He placed his little arms carelessly about my neck, and said, feebly, "sing to me of heaven." When I finished, he looked languidly up, saying, "Where's Lizzie? I must kiss Lizzie" and as the words died upon his lips, his eyes drooped, his heart fluttered like a prisoned bird, and little Charlie was counted one of the heavenly fold. As I closed his eyes, and crossed his dimpled hands peacefully upon his little breast, his last words rang fearfully in my ears—"Where's Lizzie?"

Romance of Real Life.

Mr. C———, assuming the name of Jones, some years since, purchased a small piece of land, built on it a neat house on the edge of a common in Wiltshire. Here he long resided, unknowing, and almost unknown, by the neighborhood. Various conjectures were formed respecting this solitary and singular looking stranger; at length a clergyman took some notice of him and occasionlly inviting him to his house he found him possessed of intelligence and manners which evidently indicated his origin to have been in the higher stations of life. Returning one day from a visit at the clergyman's he passed the house of a farmer, at the door of which was the daughter employed at the washing-tub. He looked at the girl a moment, and thus accosted her: "My girl would you like to be married because if you would, I will marry you." "Lord, sir! these are strange questions from a man I never saw in my life before."

"Very likely," repled Mr. Jones "but however, I am serious, and will leave you till ten o'clock to-morrow to consider upon it. I will then call on you again, and if I have your father's consent, we will be married the following day."

He kept his appointment, and meeting with the father, he thus addressed him:—"Sir, I have seen your daughter; I should like her for a wife, and I am come to ask your consent." "This proposal," answered the old man, "is very extraordinary from a stranger. Pray, sir, who are you?" "Sir, you have a right to ask these questions. My name is Jones; the new house on the edge of the common is mine, and if necessary, I can purchase yours and half the neighborhood," replied Mr. J.

Another hour's conversation brought all parties to one mind, and the frindly clergyman afore-mentioned, united the happy pair. Three or fours years they lived in this retirement, and were blest with two children. Mr. J. employed the greater part of his time in improving his wife's mind, but never disclosed his own origin. At length, upon taking a journey of pleasure with her, while remarking the beauties of the country, he noticed and named the different gentlemen's seats as they passed; coming to a magnificent one—"this my dear, is B———house, the seat of the Earl of E., and if you please, we will ask leave to go in and look at it; it is an elegant house, and probably will amuse you," said he.

The nobleman who possessed this mansion was lately dead. He once had a nephew, who, in the gaieties of his youth, incurred some debts, on account of which he had retired from fashionable life on about £200 per annum, and had not been heard of for some years. This nephew was the identical Mr. Jones, the hero of our story, who now took possession of the house, title, and estate, and is the present Ecarl of E———!!!—English Paper.

The Head and the Heart.

The Head is stately calm and wise,
And bears a princely mien,
And down below, in secret, lies
The warm, impulsive Heart.

The lordly Head that sits above
The Heart that beats below,
Their several office plainly prove,
Their true relation show.

The Head erect, serene and cool,
Endowed with Reason's art,
Was set aloft to guide and rule
The throbbing, wayward Heart.

And from the Head, as from the higher,
Comes all-directing thought;
And in the Heart's transforming fire,
All noble deeds are wrought.

Yet each is best when both unite
To make the man complete—
What were the heat without the light?
The light without the heat?

MORAL EVIL MAN'S OWN CREATION,—Man brings upon himself a thousand calamities, as consequences of artifices and pride, and then, over looking his own follies, gravely investigates the origin of what he calls evil:—he compromises every natural pleasure to acquire fame amongst transient beings, who forget him nignly in sleep, and eternally in death; and seeks to render his name celebrated among posterity, though it has no identity with his person, and though posterity and himself can have no contemporaneous feeling. He deprives himself and all around him of every passing enjoyment, to accumulate wealth, that he may purchase other men's labor, in the vain hope of adding happiness to his own. He omits to make effective laws to protect the poor against the oppresions of the rich, and then wears out his existence under the fear of becoming poor, and being the victim of his own neglect and injustice. He interdicts the enjoyment of all other creatures, and regarding the world as his property, in mere wantonness destroys myriads on whom have been bestowed beauties and perfections. He forgets that to live and let live is a maxim of universal justice, extending not only to his fellow-creatures, but to inferior ones, to whom his moral obligations are greater, because they are more in his power. He afflicts himself that he cannot live for ever, though his forefathers have successively died to make room for him. He repines at the thought of losing that life, the use of which he so often perverts; and though he began to exist but yesterday, thinks the world was made for him, and that he ought to enjoy it for ever. He desires to govern others, but, regardless of their dependence on his benevolence, is commonly gratified in displaying the power entrusted to him by a tyrannical abuse of it. He makes laws which, in the hand of mercenary lawyers, serve as snares to unwary poverty, but as shields to crafty wealth. He acknowledges the importance of educating youth, yet teaches them anything but their social duties in the political state in which they live. He passes his days in questioning the providence of Nature, in ascribing evil to supernatural causes and in feverish expectations of results contrary to the necessary harmony of the world,

Art. 3. The committee on Manual Labor School shall procure funds and organize said School in accordance with the plans adopted by this National Convention, with such modifications as experience or necessity may dictate to them. The committee shall immediately incorporate itself as an academy under "The General Committee of the State of———," and shall constitute the Board of Trustees of the Manual Labor School, with full power to select a location in the State designated by the National council, to erect buildings, appoint or dismiss instructers in the literary or mechanical branches. There shall be a farm attached to the School.

Art. 4. The committee on Protective Unions shall institute a Protective Union for the purchase and sale of articles of domestic consumption, and shall unite and aid in the formation of branches anxiliary to their own.

Art. 5. The committee on Business Relations, shall establish an office, in which they shall keep a registry of colored mechanics, artizans and business men throughout the Union. They shall keep a registry of all persons willing to employ colored men in business, to teach colored boys mechanical trades, liberal and scientific professions, and farming; and also, a registry of colored men and boys, seeking employment or instruction. They shall also report upon any avenues of business or trade which they deem inviting to colored capital, skill, or labor. Their reports and advertisements to be in papers of the widest circulation. They shall receive for sale or exhibition, products of the skill and labor of colored people.

Art. 6. The committee on Publication shall collect all facts, statistics and statements, all laws and historical records and biographies of the colored people, and all books by colored authors. They shall have for the safe keeping of these documents, a Library, with a Reading Room and Museum. The committee shall also publish replies to any assaults, worthy of note, made upon the character or condition of the colored People.

Art. 7. Each committee shall have absolute control over its special department; shall make its own by-laws, and in case of any vacancy occurring, shall fill up the same forthwith subject to the confirmation of the council. Each committee shall meet at least once a month or as often as possible; shall keep a minute of all its proceedings, executive and financial, and shall submit a full statement of the same, with the accounts audited, at every regular meeting of the National council.

Art. 8. The National council shall meet at least once in six months, to receive the reports of the committees, and to consider any new plan for the general good, for which it shall have power, at its option, to appoint a new committee, and shall be empowered to receive and appropriate donations for the carrying out of the objects of the same. At all such meetings, eleven members shall constitute a quorum. In case any committee neglect or refuse to send in its report, according to article 8th, then the council shall have power to enter the bureau, examine the books and papers of such committee; and in case the committee shall persist in its refusal or neglect, then the council shall declare their offices vacant, and appoint others in their stead.

Art. 9. In all cases of the meetings of the National Council, or the committees, the traveling expenses (if any) of the members shall be paid out of the respective funds.

Art. 10. The council shall immediately establish a bureau in the place of its meeting: and the same rooms shall, as far as possible, be used by the several committees for the various purposes. The council shall have a clerk, at a moderate salary, who will keep a record of their transactions, and prepare a condensed report of the committees for publication; and, also, a registry of the friends of the cause.

Art. 11. The expenses of the council shall be defrayed by the fees of membership of subsocieties or councils, to be organised throughout the States. The membership fee shall be one cent per week,

Art. 12. A member of the council shall be member of only one of the committees thereof.

Art. 13. All officers holding funds, shall give security in double the amount likely to be in their hands. This security to be given to the three first officers of the council.

Art. 14. The council shall have power to make such By-Laws as are necessary for their proper government.

[The following resolutions having direct bearing upon the plan of organization were adopted by the Convention and are therefore appended to the Council's Constitution.]

Resolved That the Council shall be delegated to select its various Committees.

Resolved, That the Council shall have power to offer a premium for prize essays on different subjects agreed on by Council.

Resolved, That the said Council shall hear and grant petitions and be governed by the rules of legislative bodies, and their decisions shall be final.

Resolved, That any State applying for admission into this Union, shall be admitted on such terms, as may hereafter be agreed upon.

Resolved, That in establishing a National Council for our own special improvement, and a Manual Labor School for the education of our children in science, literature and mechanical arts, this Convention do this, not to build ourselves up as a distinct and separate class in this country, but as a means to a great end, viz: the equality in political rights, and in civil and social privileges with the rest of the American people.

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the colored people, in offering a plan for the organization of the school, beg leave to state,

1st. That the location of the school, which is to be within one hundred miles of the town of Erie, Pennsylvania, will be selected as soon as three thousand dollars are paid in; the school building and work-shop will be commenced as soon as ten thousand dollars are paid in; and the school commenced as soon as fifteen thousand dollars are paid in; and that in no case will a contract be made beyond the sum of money actually paid in. The site of the school will be at least two hundred acres of land, one hundred and fifty of which shall for ever be used as a farm for agricultural instruction.

2nd. In accordance with a vote of the Rochester Convention, the teachers are to be selected for, and pupils admitted into, the school without reference to sex or complexion.

3d. Special provision will be made to make this, from the beginning, an industrial school for females as well as males; a prominent principle of conduct will be to aid in providing for the female sex, methods and means of enjoying an independent and honorable livlihood.

6. The School shall be organised and conducted entirely by a board of fifteen trustees.

7. Six of these trustees shall be the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the People of Color; and nine of the trustees shall be elected by the Stockholders when three thousand dollars shall have been paid in by them, (the stockholders) and annually thereafter. Each share of stock shall count as one vote at all such elections. And stockholders may vote by proxy, on affidavit made and acknowledged before a Commissioner of Deeds.

THE GOSPEL TRIBUNE.

PROSPECTUS.

The first number of a monthly paper, to be known as above indicated, is proposed to be published in Toronto within a few months, and not later than the First day of July, 1854. The work in size and appearance, to be at least equal to the Missionary Record or Christian Observer; and as much superior to either in style and execution as the subscription list will warrant.

DISTINCTIVE OBJECT:

To enlarge the limits of Communion and Church-Membership, among Christians, to the greatest possible extent; and to circumscribe those bounds to the exclusion, if possible, of all other characters, without otherwise disturbing the Membership of existing Churches; till acknowledged Christian Character shall constitute the only passport, at any time, and the perfect passport at all times, to every Communion and Church worthy of the Christian name; "that the world may believe" in Christ, even as he prayed.

GENERAL OBJECTS:

The promotion of Religious, Moral, Intellectual and Social Improvement, under the guidance of Divine Revelation, submitting every move and measure to the test of Gospel Principles.

SUPPORTERS:

The distinctive and general objects of the work are such, as to claim for it the patronage of all classes of men, excepting those wedded to other pre-requisites of Communion and Church-membership, than acknowledged Christian Character; and here it is recorded with great pleasure, that the encouragements tendered, thus far, are in strict accordance with the above general claims.

ORIGIN AND PROGRESS.

This movement has long been contemplated. For twenty years the subscriber has made the distinctive object of the GOSPEL TRIBUNE his special study: examining carefully and personally the denominational aspect of Religious Societies,—their reciprocal bearings, their mutual relations, and the nature of their combined influence on the evangelization of the world. Latterly, his position as Publisher of the Sabbath Visitor has probably afforded him more than ordinary facilities for personally seeing the working of these institutions, and for the attainment of certain important information, but little of which he had previously been able to obtain. All may rest assured, however, that no undue advantage will ever be taken of the frankness and candor with which Christians of every name, as well as skeptics of every class, have freely expressed their convictions in the presence of the Travelling Corporteur; the capacity in which the Publisher is still extending his observations through Canada and the neighboring States.

CO LABORERS:

Of distinguished worth and of well-known literary ability, are already secured in the several sections of Canada, and in the States of the American Union; and arrangements are now in progress, to obtain from living responsible writers in Britain, important assistance in the development of the TRIBUNE'S Mission.

TERMS AND NOTICES:

The Terms are One Dollar per Annum in advance,—otherwise Two Dollars; it being found that one half of the Subscriptions, not paid in advance, are worse than lost. Editors—friendly—will render assistance by noticing this Prospectus. All parties willing to aid, may at once commence soliciting the names of Subscribers. Two books—the Scripture and Laconic Manuals—fully suited, and the Paper one year will be forwarded to the person who first sends the names of ten Subscribers; and one of either of the books, in substantial leather binding, or the Paper one year to every one who sends ten names. Subscriptions and all other communications for the Paper to be sent, post-paid, marked Money, (if inclosed) and addressed, ROBERT DICK, Box 311, TORONTO.

Sermons and Lectures, promotive of the TRIBUNE'S object, will be delivered by the Publisher throughout the Province as frequently as shall be found compatible with his other duties.

(Signed) ROBERT DICK.

Toronto, March 25th, 1854.

CALL FOR A NATIONAL EMIGRATION CONVENTION OF COLORED MEN,

To be held in Cleveland, Ohio, on the 24th, 25th and 26th of August, 1854.

MEN AND BRETHERN:—The time has now fully come, when we, as an oppressed people, should do something effectively, and use those means adequate to the attainment of the great and long desired end—to do something to meet the actual demands of the present and prospective necessities of the rising generation of our people in this country. To do this, we must occupy a position of entire equality, of unrestricted rights, composing in fact, an acknowledged necessary part of the ruling element of society in which we live. The policy necessary to the preservation of this element must be in our favor, if ever we expect the enjoyment, freedom, sovereignty, and equality of rights anywhere. For this purpose, and to this end, then, all colored men in favor of emigration out of the United States, and opposed to the American Colonization sheme of leaving the Western Hemisphere, are requested to meet in CLEVELAND, OHIO, on TUESDAY, the 24th DAY of AUGUST, 1854, in a great NATIONAL CONVENTION, then and there, to consider and decide upon the great and important subject of emigration from the United States.

No person will be admitted to a seat in the Convention, who would introduce the subject of emigration to the Eastern Hemisphere—either to Asia, Africa, or Europe—as our object and determination is to consider our claims to the West Indies, Central and South America, and the Canadas. This restriction has no reference to personal preference, or individual enterprise; but to the great question of national claims to come before the Convention.

All persons coming to the Convention that have not been properly authenticated, or have no assistance to the Committee on Correspondence, appointed for the purpose of their delegation, must abide by the decisions and regulations set forth in this Call, as the Convention is specially called for the benefit of emigration and NONE OTHER—and no opposition to it will be entertained.

The question is not whether our condition can be bettered by emigration, but whether it can be made worse. If not, then, there is no part of the wide-spread universe, where our social and political condition are not better than here in our native country, and nowhere in the world as here, proscribed on account of color.

We are friends, too, and ever will stand shoulder to shoulder by our brethren, and all our friends in all good measures adopted by them for the bettering of our condition in this country, and surrender no rights but with our last breath; but as the subject of emigration is of vital importance, and has ever been shunned by all delegated assemblages of our people as heretofore met, we cannot longer delay, and will not be further baffled; and deny the right of our most sanguine friend or dearest brother, to prevent an intelligent enquiry to, and the carrying out of these measures, when this can be done, to our entire advantage, as we propose to show in Convention—as the West Indies, Central and South America—the majority of which are peopled by our brethren, or those identified with us in race, and what is more, destiny, on this continent—all stand with open arms and yearning hearts, importuning us in the name of suffering humanity to come—to make common cause, and share one common fate on the continent.

The Convention will meet without fail, at the time fixed for assembling, as none but those favorable to emigration are admissable; therefore no other gathering may prevent it. The number of delegates will not be restricted—except in the town where the Convention may be held—and there the number will be decided by the Convention when assembled, that they may not too far exceed the other delegations.

The time and place fixed for holding the Convention are ample; affording sufficient time, and a leisure season generally—and as Cleveland is now the centre of all directions—a good and favorable opportunity to all who desire to attend.—Therefore, it may reasonably be the greatest gathering of the colored people ever before assembled in a Convention in the United States.

Colonizationists are advised that no favors will be shown to them or their expatriating scheme, as we have no sympathy with the enemies of our race.

All colored men, East, West, North and South, favorable to the measures set forth in this Call, will send in their names (post-paid) to M. R Delany, or Rev. Wm. Webb, Pittsburgh, Pa., that there may be arranged and attached to the Call five names from each State.

We must make an issue, create an event, and establish a position for ourselves. It is glorious to think of, but far more glorious to carry out.

The Dominican Republic.

We reported recently the discovery of a plot for the assassination of Gen. Santana, the President of the Republic. We learn from St. Domingo, under date of the 23d of February, that the Government has proceeded with great leniency toward the guilty; some have been exiled, and others banished to places in the interior.

A correspondent of a London journal, writing under the above date, says—

"A conspiracy of a still more formidable extent has just been discovered in Santiago, the principal town of the Northern Provinces of the Republic. There is perhaps no country inhabited by a mixed population where, as in St. Domingo, the negroes enjoy in such a general respect the same liberties and privileges like the rest. All Government offices are open to them, and the great portion of the highest military grades are in their actual possession. Nevertheless a few of the designing and dissatisfied of that race conceived a revolt for the massacre of the whites and colored, sparing only the young of the female sex for their lusts; and after having pillaged and burnt Santiago, they proposed to carry flame and sword to the neighboring places, it being their ultimate intention to fraternize with the Haytians, and to proclaim Emperor Soulouque their chief. The plot, which had already far advanced, was providentially revealed by a woman, in whose house some of the conspirators used to meet. Martial law has been declared in Santiago, and five of the ringleaders are now before the court, the finding not being as yet known in St. Domingo. There are upward of forty persons that are implicated under arrest.

"The revision of the Dominican Constitution, for which an extraordinary session of Congress had been convoked, is now completed, and will be promulgated on the 27th of February, the tenth anniversary of the Dominican Independence. It is conceived in a liberal spirit, and its distinguishing features are a considerable increase in the number of the Representatives and Senators, and in the creation of a Vice President, eligible like the President, who, in the absence or death of the latter, is to act in his stead.

"If report speaks true, the British Consul at St. Domingo used every influence he legitimately could exercise, to instil a liberal spirit toward foreigners, and to ameliorate some of the clauses that referred to them; hence the term at which foreigners, after naturalization, become eligible as representatives and Senators, has been changed from ten to three years in the first case, and from fifteen to five with regard to the latter.

"The period that the President and Vice President remain in office is four years, but General Santana, the actual President, as a proof of the confidence the nation has in him, is to enjoy two terms of office, and leaves the Presidential chair in February, 1861.—Great preparations are being made to celebrate the coming 27th of February with all solemnities. The Dominican Republic is now recognized by treaties with Great Britain, France, Denmark, and Holland; and is in negociations for similar compacts with Sardinia and the Hanseatic Towns. General Casneau, a personage who, it is said played an important role in the Texan annexation affair, is now here from the United States, but whether he arrived only on private affairs, or as an especial agent of the United States, is not known. He is probably to watch 'coming events.' St. Domingo remains healthy, but quarantine regulations are very burdensome to commerce. The communication with St. Thomas, the packet port of this city, is still interrupted, and very few vessels are loading on the coast. The fine British vessel Medoro was lost while leaving the harbor of Porto Plata. The cargo has been saved."

The Expedition to Central Africa.—Communications from Dr. Vogel, dated, "Shimotetsen, November 18, 1839," have arrived in London. At that place, which is apparently situated near Bilma, in the Tibbu country, Dr. Vogel and his companions had safely arrived after a difficult and dangerous march of about three weeks from Teggery, the southernmost place of Frezzan. "The country now behind us," says Dr. Vogel, "is a most dreary region, consisting entirely of sand and black sandstone rocks, without a trace of vegetation for 600 miles, but which I am happy to say, we have successfully traversed without injury to our own health, and without losing any of our camels. Here our eyes were gladdened by the first green trees since we left Teggery; and here we shall make a halt of three days for the purpose of a general rest of the caravan, and for collecting provisions of flour and butter. We are now only 17 days journey from the shores of Lake Tchad. I have been able to continue my observations in the same way as in the early part of our journey. My Barometers tell me that we are still on a table-land having an average elevation of 1,300 feet above the level of the sea. It is the great table-land of North Africa, which commences on our route at Sukna and the Black Mountains, and extends, at a nearly uniform level, and with scarcely any interruptions or inequalities, to where we now are. It is intersected only once, under the 22nd parelel of north latitude, by a range of hills attaining the height of 2,400 feet (this is probably the range crossed by Oudney, Denham, and Clapperton, at the pass of El Wahr). But Eastward of us, in Tiberly, there must be high ranges of mountains, as the wind coming from that quarter is very cold." Dr. Vogel speaks very favorably of the great kindness to the travellers, and solicitude for their safety and comfort, of Hayje Aksen, the Bornouese Prince, under whose protection they were performing the journey across the desert. They had also been so fortunate as to make friends with the Sultan of the Tibbus, and arrange with him about the transmission through his territory of their future communications from Central Africa.—Athenæum.

Expense of Tobacco.

If tobacco is useful or necessary to health, we need not be scrupulous as to the amount we expend upon it. If it were simply for the gratification of an animal appetite, without adding to or detracting from the sum of our health or happiness, to lay out expense on such an article would seem to us all, at best, a childish folly. But if it can be shown to be positively hurtful, prejudicial to the vital functions, endangering health and shortening life, then to expend money on it is worse than folly—it is madness, and should be classed with what is expended on the cups of the drunkard—an expense to which he is impelled by a depraved appetite, while he knows it is hurrying himself to ruin, and preparing beggary for his children. We are all stewards of possessions, greater or less, which God has entrusted to our care, and which we are allowed to use for our own good and the good of others; but never have we the right to use a farthing to our own hurt, any more than we have for the injury of our fellow men.

The young are apt to make very little account of small sums which they expend for their own gratification, or to comply with the fashions of the day. But in what is expended on tobacco, they should remember that there is likely to be a daily and constant demand upon them, which, in course of years, must necessarily swell to a considerable sum. Some expend but little at the outset; but the appetite once formed, no one knows to what extent it will carry him. It is a very moderate cigar smoker who spends only 6 cents a day; and yet it amounts to $21.90 a year, a sum which would be called an enormous tax, if laid on a young man for the purposes of government, or for the support of religious institutions. The same trifling sum, if put to annual interest, would, in thirty years, amount to $3,520,30; and who does not wish that cigars were banished from the world, when he thinks in how many hundred ways this sum might have contributed to the real comfort and improvement of a man in moderate circumstances; or how much good it might have done, if laid out in educating and elevating his children? Or what man would not like such a sum to leave as a legacy to his children, instead of leaving to them his own miserable, filthy, tobacco habit, kept, perhaps, by the father, within moderate bounds, but often, in the son, running beyond all bounds, without regard to expense.

But how many thousands on thousands are there in the land who spend on cigars 12½ cents a day, $45 a year, or more than $7,000 in thirty years! This is the sum which every free negro in Cuba is said to expend on this degrading luxury; which alone is sufficient to bind that class down to ignorance and degradation in all future time. Many, too, there are among us, not rich, who devote 25 cents daily to cigars; and some are miserable if they do not have 50 cents' worth to soothe their aching and distracted nerves. Let us remember, too, that this amazing tobacco taxation does not fall mainly on the rich; it falls equally on the middling and lower orders of society; on multitudes of hard-working men, who have to struggle with privation and poverty; who cannot afford their children the facilities of schools and academies, in this day of education; who cannot purchase even a moiety of the rich literature with which genius is filling every enlightened land; it falls on the hardy soldiers, and on the wandering sailor who puts his way over the ocean. It falls heavily, too, on students in every department of learning. "The cigar bill" we are told, "of many a student, clerk, and stripling, exceeds his board bill. The students of some of our colleges are estimated to pay annually from $6,000 to $8,000 for this vile luxury." It should be added, too, that tobacco is the great generator of idle habits in the world, and what is lost by idleness is always estimated higher than the money expended.

If we now turn to the expense of smoking in some communities, we shall be astonished at our statistics, and wish to call in question the operations of arithmetic. The consumption of cigars alone, in the City of New York, in 1851, was computed at $10,000 a day; while the whole city paid but $8,500 a day for bread; this would be $3,650,000 a year, for cigars alone. The Grand Erie Canal, three hundred and sixty four miles long, the longest in the world, with its eighteen aqueducts and eighty-four locks, was made in six years, and cost over $7,000,000. The cigar bill of New York city would have paid the whole in two years. If a line of Atlantic steamers, the pride of the ocean, were all sunk, how soon would the cigar-money of that one city rebuild the whole! The annual cost of tobacco in the whole United States is computed at $30,000,000. This sum would scarcely cover the labor of one and a half million men who are engaged in the cultivation of it; nor would it include all the idle days and hours of tobacco-consumers. Is there a benevolent man in the world whose heart will not be pained at the thought of such immense wealth expended on an unnatural, artificial, and absurd appetite—an appetite which can do nothing less than injure, to some extent, all who use it; and which on some falls with a blighting power, unnerving the body and stultifying the mind!

Tobacco broods like an incubus over every chewer and smoker; it is a curse to the whole nation just in proportion as it is used. With the single exception of intoxicating drinks, what is there that would do more to change and deteriorate a nation's character than the universal use of tobacco?

If the tobacco consumption in the United States goes on in future, increasing as it has for twenty years past, have we not reason to fear that the nation of active, inventive, enterprising, efficient Yankees, flying all over the world, will be actually smoked down into a nation as phlegmatic and stationary as the smoking Dutchmen of Holland!—Rev. Mr. Dwight's Essay.

The Wool Trade in England.

Some persons who are engaged in the production of wool in this country are apprehensive that the business may be overdone, and the market ruined. The same class of timid people expressed the same fears in England many years ago, but the business there is not yet ruined; but the interest of the manufacturers would have been injured, if it had not been for the importations of large quantities of cheap wool from other countries.

A large portion of this supply came from Australia, but owing to the absorbing interest of mining, there has been less attention paid to the flocks of sheep. Disease too, prevails to a considerable extent among the sheep, and we learn that the future prospects for wool from that quarter are far from assuring a fair supply.

The Cape of Good Hope wools are exported in a miserable condition, and rank low in market. The people in that region do not pay much attention to their flocks, or the preparation of the wool for sale. German wool has been declining in England, while it has greatly increased on the Continent, and prices rule higher than Colonial wools; and the Germans, Belgians and French are now regular buyers in the English markets, and their purchases at the last Colonial wool sales, were little short of £200,000. The consumption of Spanish wools has been smaller than Portugal wool of late years. Importations from the United States have been small, but the imports of wool from Buenos Ayres and the river Plate have been very large. The flocks there are improving, and the wool commands high prices in the English market. The growing of wool forms a large part of the occupation of the people in that quarter.

The receipts of Peruvian and Alapacha wools were also large last year. An attempt has been made to introduce the breed of these animals into Australia, but a favorable result is doubted.

There has been a very large increase in the consumption of East India wool. In 1850, the import was less than 10,000 bales, while for the last year it has exceeded 35,000. The receipt of wool from China is increasing; upwards of 1,000 bales arrived in England last year. Russia has also contributed largely to the supplies of the English market, and the quantity received last year far exceeded that of the previous year.

The Turkish provinces on the Danube and the surrounding States of Servia, Bosnia, &c., furnish large supplies to the English markets. The quality of the Egyptian wool is said to be deteriating, because it is not prepared for the market with the same care as formerly.

There has been a very considerable increase in the receipts of Mohair, or Turkey Goat's wool, and the Angora Goat is about to be introduced into the Cape of Good Hope Colony, and favorable results are expected; some parts of the Colony being peculiarly suited to that animal.

The import of wool from Iceland has been increasing for many years. In addition to these sources of supply, we may add Ireland, where the growth is greatly increasing, and the quality improving. But notwithstanding all these sources of supply, and notwithstanding the annual rental of land in England is greater than the fee simple of some of the best sheep walks in this country, the English farmer produces wool at a profit greater, certainly, than is made by the woolgrower of this country. The reason is obvious to every man who thinks. That is a manufacturing country which protects the interests of its own people; this is a free trade country governed by men who advocate the system of exporting all raw materials, and importing all manufactured articles. There the farmer has a home market for his meat, as well as wool, in every village, as well as every other article of farm produce. Here the farmer strips off the fleece, and unless contiguous to some great metropolis, or near some railroad leading thither, he must feed the carcase to the swine, and many thousands have been thus disposed of. Other thousands have been thrown into steam vats, the oil extracted, and the remainder thrown into Lake Erie.

Although we believe that exporting wool is better than exporting wheat, yet we do not believe this country will grow rich at either, but when we look to all nations for a supply, as England does now, then will woolgrowing become profitable both to individuals and to the nation at large.

Interesting from Europe.

We have private advices from reliable sources in London, Paris and Hungary, which convey intelligence of a good deal of interest in regard to the movements of the revolutionary party in Europe. Without vouching for the strict accuracy of all their statements, we present a resume of their contents as well as their comments.

The revolutionary committees in London display the greatest activity, and with the most marked prudence. Movements have been organized in all continental countries, but with the advice to the people not to stir until war has struck some blows which put peace out of the question, or except the improbable case of a return to protect negotiations, with a sort of armistice. The Polish section of these revolutionary committees in London, has, however, (some say in consequence of government intimations,) thought that it could begin its action without waiting for further developments, and that it need not be so cautious as the exiles of other nations, the outbreak of an insurrection in Poland being not likely to displease the western cabinets. Accordingly, a democratic rising throughout Prussia, Poland, and particularly in Warsaw, has been decided upon, and our informant adds, "It will have broken out before you receive these lines, unless some unexpected event should occur to prevent it." We hope for such an event, because we believe that the movement is premature and can do nothing but mischief.

One of the Hungarian exiles in Paris, on a temporary visit, or perhaps mission, in London, having spoken to Lord Palmerston, the noble viscount is reported to have said, "I wish that the czar may succeed in gaining over, and the sooner the better, both Prussia and Austria. We should be much stronger without this German alliance than we shall be with it. The best you can do at present is to keep perfectly quiet. Austria approaches the scene of war; she must soon take a part. Then, but then only, you may, if you think it advisable, do something. It is not impossible that you may be called upon to do so. But once more I tell you, 'ne bougez pas' for the time being. Your country's cause might be retarded for an indefinite period, should you be too hasty on the present occasion." We should remark that the Magyar gentleman to whom those words were addressed, has not yet lost his faith in Lord Palmerston.

From Paris we learn that faith in the Austrian alliance is by no means so great as it is ostentatiously asserted to be in official and semi-official papers. Persons intimately connected with the Tuilleries make no secret of their belief that the Vienna cabinet will ultimately take the part of Russia In the different diplomatic notes and queries exchanged between the governments, one of the latest made an inquiry about the French emperor's intentions in respect to the results of the war. The Vienna government wished to know whether the court of the Tuilleries would be satisfied with the restoration of the "status quo ante bellum," and whether there is any foundation for the views ascribed to the French emperor, about a reduction of the Russian empire to less formidable dimensions. The answer of the French government was, we are assured to the point that, war having been declared, and hostilities commenced, the results, mainly depending on the fortune and duration of this war, cannot be circumscribed in any way, nor can the limits and conditions of the pacification be delineated. The Emperor of the French has no designs of conquest. He entered the war reluctantly; it was not his choice; but after having been forced to enter it, he cannot give assurances as to the end of a struggle, the eventualities of which cannot be foreseen at all. Such is the purport of the answer, which declares, of course, the emperor's entire satisfaction with the course followed by his Austrian majesty's government.—N. Y. Times.

Toleration in Turkey.—England, France, Turkey and Russia are now engaged in a bloody war. When it will end, no mortal can tell. How it will be prosecuted, few are so dull as not to see. It may be short but it will be terribly severe. Thousands and tens of thousands of human beings will be sacrificed in the contest. That good will ultimately come out of it, we have no doubt, but how much good, or what kind of good it is difficult to say. One thing however is evident, that the principle of religious toleration will be by this war, pretty effectually settled throughout Europe; whereby the principle will be recognized, that the religious belief of all men shall be respected, and so far protected, that they may worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, without let or hindrance from the government, so far as such worship does not interfere with the rights of the others.

As one of the signs of the healthy progress, we see it stated that Lord Clarendon recently read in the British House of Lords a portion of a despatch, received by him a few months before he entered the house, in which extract the British Ambassador at Constantinople says—

"I have much satisfaction in reporting to your lordship that the firman for establishing Christian evidence on an equality with Mussulman throughout the Turkish empire is complete, and that it received the Sultan's sanction shortly before I had the honor to receive your lordship's instruction relating to the question, which it has now settled once for all on a broad and firm basis. I have reason to hope that this great act of long withheld justice will be followed by other proofs of the Sultan's comprehensive beneficence, and of the improved spirit prevailing among his Mahomedan subjects. The haratch is no longer levied in a manner vexatious to individuals; but it is an unjust and degrading tax, for the complete abolition of which I shall continue to employ my strenuous exertions."—Christian Witness.

Discussion in the House of Lords.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

Lord Brougham moved the second reading of the Bill, "to permit the registration of dishonored bills of exchange promissory notes in England, and allow execution thereon." He said that the system he proposed to introduce had prevailed in Scotland for upwards of a century and a half, greatly to the benefit of the trader, of the suitor, and the mercantile interest. Scotland was far better situated than we were in this particular, and we might very advantageously take a leaf out of their book to guide us on this subject in our legislation. The law there was as follows:—A protest of a dishonoured bill or note became a judgment against parties whose names were on that bill or note. This protest must be registered within six months from the date of the instrument: and then, within six days after its being recorded, a judgment and summary execution might at once issue. If the party from whom payment was sought had a defence, there was full and ample opportunity allowed him for urging it. He might come forward and stop execution by what was termed a suspension. He might suspend the process of law altogether if he was not liable, or he might suspend it until it was ascertained whether he was liable or not. He had only to apply to a Judge, who at once examined into the grounds alleged for staying execution, and, if they were such as would be incompetent in law, the petition was at once dismissed. When the grounds, however, were such as, if proved, would entitle the debtor to resist payment, the prayer of the petition was granted, and execution stayed till the grounds of suspension were discussed, in which both parties were allowed an opportunity of deliberately making good their pleas and averments; and upon the proof and argument thus submitted, the Court finally determined whether execution was to issue or not; but, in general, no suspension was granted without security given by the party applying for it to pay the debt, if it should be found due, and the costs of suit. The bond into which the securities were required to enter, became, if the holder was successful in the suit, a warrant for instant execution against the sureties. This system he could assure their Lordships, was found to act most admirably, and had, for many years, the most beneficial effects. It was originally introduced very many years ago, when the trade of Scotland lay in a very narrow compass: but till the reign of George III, did not apply to promissory notes; nor, except in certain cases, to drawers and acceptors. Since then the benefits arising from it had been very great; for though not, of course, the only, it certainly was one great cause of the prodigious increase in the Scottish trade. Look at the river dues on Glasgow. Forty-five years ago the lessee paid £500 a-year for the harbor dues. By the last return they were £80,000; an increase which, he would venture to say, was unexampled in any other part of Europe. He called their Lordships' attention next to the number of protested bills, as compared with the number for the non-payment of which there was any legal defence. In 1845 (he said) there were in all Scotland 3600 bills protested. Of these there was not one per cent, on which any attempt was made to dispute the liability, and of the few attempts so made, not above one-tenth were successful; so that if there were one thousand protested, not above one per cent. of that number were the subject of a suspension; and of the ten contests which did take place, this defence was successful in only one. He would not stop to dwell upon the obvious advantages of this system, which took from the debtor the possibility of pleading defences for the mere purposes of embarassment and delay, at the same time that in requiring security, it tested his solvency and position.—Either he must provide acceptable securities, who would be liable for debt, interest, and costs, or he could pay the money into Court merely by way of security, and then try the cause and decide which party was in the right. It was his intention to propose that the Bill should be referred to the Committee on the Common Law procedure Bill.

Lord Campbell entirely approved of the course proposed to be taken. He regarded the practice of the law of England, which gave the acceptor of a bill of exchange the opportunity of contesting his liability when there was no shadow of excuse for so doing, as unnecessary, and not only contrary to the custom of Scotland, but also of Europe. It was no hardship upon the debtor that the protest of a dishonored bill of exchange should only be enforceable by an action at law. It was very desirable to introduce this improvement into our law, and he thought it expedient to refer the Bill to the same Committee as the Common Law Procedure Bill.

The Bill was then read a second time, and ordered to be referred to Committee on the Common Law Procedure Bill.

Justice among the Chivalry.—Last Friday, Matthew F. Ward, who had, for what he conceived an insult to his brother, a school-boy, armed himself to the teeth, sought the school-room of Professor Butler, called him "a scoundrel and coward," and shot him dead, was acquitted by a Kentucky jury. He was rich, belonged to a powerful family, and, according to the morality of Kentucky society, was not to be blamed for taking the life of a school-master What! hang a Kentucky gentleman for killing a pedagogue! Ridiculous!

Last Monday, a man, the property of a Mr. Street, of Charleston, South Carolina, was strung up by the neck and hung with as little ceremony as boys would string up a trapped rat. His crime was having struck a white woman. He had been duly convicted of it by a jury composed of magistrates and freeholders! In view of these facts, we ask what the life of a poor man is worth in those States? Free, a rich man shoots him down as he would a squirrel, and their is no punishment; enslaved, he is hung up if he dare resent a blow. Life is hardly worth having there unless accompanied by a good income and aristocratic position. An improvement in the Kentucky code would be the law of the Dark Ages which affixed a fine for murder in proportion to the rank of the victim. The Kentuckians should enact that any chivalrous gentlemen may kill a young negro for a dollar, a grown up one for ten, a white laborer for fifteen, a mechanic for fifty, and a schoolmaster for one hundred. We should then have some hope of progress in the dark and bloody ground.—Philada. Daily Register.

RAMAYABABA,

THE NATIVE HINDOO REFORMER.

We mentioned in our last year's volume, a native reformer who had appeared in the Mirazapore district, and was preaching a crusade against the god's idol worship and caste distinctions.

During the last month, we have had a visit of several days' duration from our newly enlightened friend, and have learned from his own lips the story of his conversion, and the object contemplated in his present movements. He says that he is a Bluihar in caste, (considered tantamount to a Brahmin;) that he was, up to a late period, a Hindoo, in the observance of all national customs; that he saw a dream, in which God appeared to him, and informed him that all India would become Christian. His impression is, that, being honoured with such a dream, he has virtually received a commission to destroy idolatry. He has drawn up a form of confession, which he reads before the people, and requires all who are his disciples to adopt, and act accordingly. The nature of it is, that God has formed all men, but that they have forsaken him, and worshipped idols; but that they should now repent, and ask for mercy and forgiveness.

His first idea was, that the East India Company would employ him as a demolisher of Hindooism; and, with a view to this end, he wrote to several of the Company's civil servants. On not receiving a reply, he was very much disconcerted, and had resolved to proceed to Calcutta, when certain Zemindars suggested to him, that instead of applying to magistrates and judges, he should write to the missionaries. This advice he adopted, and wrote to the Rev. C. Leupolt, which led to the interview with that gentleman, of which we have made mention. Mr. Leupolt pressed him to receive Christian instruction first, but he declined to become a disciple in the usual way. Such are still his sentiments. At this place, he made a request to be baptized, and seemed to wish to be employed in connection with the mission, although not wishing to receive any salary; but it was impossible to get him seriously to listen to the great doctrines of the Gospel, without the knowledge and general belief of which, baptism would be a mere profanation. Still, he said if we would send a christian catechist to be with him, he would learn of him, and they conjointly would do the work.

He has entirely abandoned the distinctions of caste, cordially repudiates the worship of gods; and on these subjects, he speaks with such power, that even Pundits are unable to withstand him. He has, moreover, great facility in native versification, and recites and chants his productions with great vehemence. He is, however, at present, quite unacquainted with the truth. When asked by a Khatri, who is in sentiment a deist, and alike opposed to Hindooism, Mahommedanism and Christianity; as to what his own creed was, he replied, he had no creed—only has repudiated his own creed. When the Khatri again pressed him to the consideration, whether it was not a foolish thing to pull down the old house, before he had sketched the plad of the new one, he was somewhat staggered, and made obeisance to his interrogator, thus virtually acknowledging him as his teacher; he subsequently made the same to the missionary.

While in Mirzapore hundreds of persons have been to see him; and on one occasion the whole town presented the aspect of a mela He appear also to be comparatively indifferent to money as on one occasion a present of 200rs. was made him but he would only accept half of it.

Doubtless the man possesses influence and power to do much in refuting and destroying Hindooism. To what extent he will be allowed to prosecute its mission, without violent interference on the part of the Hindoos is yet to be seen; at present the people generlly consider him an Aghor Panthi; and that sect has been too long tolerated to be now interfered with. His boldness is remarkable: and, among the mass, it is entirely successful. But, besides the mass, he cherishes the ambition to influence the native princes. To several or them he has addressed letters, in the form of command, requiring them to submit to the will of heaven, in respect to the spread of Christianity, and the abolition of idolatry and demon worship; and it is said that the Rajah of Benares has given him a considerable portion of land at a small rent, on which he has built a house, and proposes to establish a Christian colony.—Friend of India.

A NEW ERA IN NAVIGATION.

We have already noticed the project of building a monster steamer, in regard to which occasional brief paragraphs have appeared in the English Journals from time to time during the past year; and we now learn that the scheme is in process of actual execution. The constructors are Messrs. Russell Scott & Co.; Mr. Brunel, the eminent engineer who built the Thames tunnel, is the designer; and the Eastern Steam Navigation Company are to own the ship, which is intended to run from England to Calcutta. It is to be built on a principle similar to that of the Britannia bridge, with double sides—in fact one ship enclosed in another—with the space between them partitioned into air-tight cells. The frame will be stiffened internally by two bulkheads running the entire length of the hull, and dividing the vessel lengthwise into three compartments. Twelve similar water-tight partitions will cut her cross-wise, adding to her strength as well as safety, for a leak would thus only affect the compartment in which it occurred, which might be filled with water without seriously demimishing the buoyancy of the ship.

The keel is to be 680 feet in length, beam 83 feet, depth of hold 58 feet. From these figures we estimate the real capacity of the vessel to be at least 20,000 tons. There is to be storage for 10,000 tons of coal—enough for about 40 days' steaming without stoppage—and 5,000 tons of cargo. The motive power is to be composed of sails, paddle-wheels and a screw. The engines are to be of 2,800 horse-power in the aggregate, weighing about 3,000 tons, leaving 2,000 tons for passengers, stores and other matters. To form an approximate idea of the performance of this ship, let us compare it with a known standard.—The dimensions of the Collins steamers are: Length, 277 feet, beam, 45 feet, depth of hold, 32 feet; power, calculated by the English method, 800 horses. The draft when loaded is 20 feet, and the area of the immersed section, 779 square feet. This gives 1,16,100 horse power for each square foot of immersed section. For the new ship we will suppose a draft of 35 feet.

The immersed section will then be 2,400 square feet, and each square foot will be impelled by 1,16,100 horse-power. The consequence is, that if the model of the new vessel be no better than that of the Collins steamers, she will have in smooth water exactly the same velocity. In a rough sea the large ship will of course have the advantage, and this, perhaps, to a much greater extent than will generally be imagined.

Common experience is, however, instructive on this head. We all know that there are days in winter when owing to the violence of the wind and waves, a row-boat on the East River might be an hour in crossing, despite the most animated exertions of the oarsmen. In the same boisterous weather one of the large ferry-boats will cross in five minutes, with scarcely any motion from the sea, for the reason that its length is such as to extend at once over several waves, whose effect upon the vessel is to counteract each other, leaving her still, when a small boat is tossed about without mercy, and greatly delayed and endangered. It is certainly possible to build a vessel of such dimensions that it will bear to the waves of the Atlantic the same relation which the ferry-boat bears to those of New York Harbor. When those dimensions are reached, the ocean may be navigated as pleasantly and safely in winter as in summer. Whether the length of 700 feet be sufficient for this purpose, is a question that we may hope to have solved ere long by the new Brobdignag of Mr. Brunel.—N. Y. Tribune.

Opening of Japan.

From the Overland China Mail, Feb. 25.

We have very important intelligence from Japan, to the effect that that country will shortly be opened to the commerce of all the world. The visit of Commodore Perry in July last, has no doubt hastened the event, which his return would probably have accomplished; but the actual achievement is due to the Russians, not to the Americans.

While Commodore Perry deemed it the wisest course, after delivering the letter of the President of the United States in due form at Uraga, to allow six months to elapse before requiring an answer, Admiral Pontiatine, without dictating the place where he should hold intercourse with the Japanese authorities, went as directed to Nangasaki, and has succeeded in negotiating, apparently without any sacrifice of national dignity, and with the sort of success which the world was more prepared to expect from the practical republic than from the Russian autocracy.

According to the information we have received from an authentic source, some time after the Russian Admiral intimated his presence and objects at Nangasaki, two high officers arrived, and after entertaining him at a feast on shore, entered upon the objects of the visit in a friendly and even cordial manner. In substance, they stated very candidly that the Japanese government, seeing the earnest desire of foreign nations to hold intercourse with them, and their own people being anxious to trade, it had been resolved to open the commerce of Japan to all nations. In this spirit, all the ports of Japan might at once be considered as open to foreigners requiring to refit or take in supplies of wood and water; but, to avoid disturbances, the crews must not be allowed to land. This, however, is only confirming what foreigners have already enjoyed, without always fairly acknowledging. With regard to commercial intercourse, the Japanese officers stated, that after centuries of seclusion, some preparation was necessary, and a year must therefore elapse before any treaty or privileges to trade could come into operation.

We have no doubt as to the accuracy of this information, and are farther inclined to believe that a similar result might have been effected long ago by Great Britain, if she had ever been fortunate enough to have entrusted her interests in that part of the globe to any one who did not look steadily and exclusively to his own fortunes, and how to obtain honors without deserving them. Dr. Bowring may not be insensible to either, but he is less likely than any of his predecessors, or any Admiral we have seen on the station, to overlook the opportunity of achieving a lasting reputation for himself.

Seven years ago an expedition on a large scale was projected under Sir John Davis, but was considered of so little importance, that Sir Thomas Cochrane preferred removing the squadron to earn hard money in Borneo; and the scheme was never resumed. Subsequently a sloop of war has visited Japan, but without any important purpose in view, or any one likely to accomplish it. Our intercourse, in short, since 1808, when Capt. Pellew, in the Phœton, "excited a fierce hatred in the minds of the Japanese," having had a tendency to confirm rather than remove prejudices against our country. Now, however, that Japan is likely to be opened without aid, whether or not England may be excluded from the arrangements, we trust those upon whom they devolve, will enter upon such stipulations as shall best secure the true and enlarged interests of commerce with the least chance of creating misunderstandings with the Japanese; and to that end many of the one-sided and selfishly abused provisions of the China treaties ought to be avoided.

Loyalty of Canadians.—Meeting in Montreal.

On the evening of the 4th inst., a large and enthusiastic meeting was held in Montreal to give expression to a general sympathy of feeling for Great Britain and France in the war which they have now entered upon with Russia. Some of the most respectable inhabitants were present, and took an active part in the proceedings. The Mayor presided and delivered an effective speech, in which he declared that if Great Britain required the troops now in Canada elsewhere she might withdraw them from us, as we are prepared to defend our country. In this his worship is right. England need have no fears for Canada. We will stand throughout the struggle, however long that may be, to the cause of truth and loyalty and freedom. If there are any mad enough to fancy that the war will afford them an opportunity to disturb the peace of Canada, it is better that their mistake should be corrected at once. It is better that they should know, whatever may be our feelings towards the Queen and mother country, which certainly now are those of loyalty, that we never will be craven enough to take advantage of England's hour of need to do her harm. On the contrary our feelings and best wishes are with her and in the cause for which she has taken up arms—to fight the battle of the weak against the strong oppressor. There are few things our American republican neighbors have done that serve to lower them more in the estimation of the Canadians than the tone of a portion of their press in relation to this war; but we hope, however, that the press in this instance does not give a true reflex of the feelings of the people. They always cried aloud against the grasping tyranny of the Czar, and seemed to pant that Great Britain and France should chastise him, and even spoke of the assistance which they would give. This, of course, we knew to be "bosh;" as they would term it themselves, for they neither had the inclination or the power to assist. But when the war was found to be inevitable, then they raised the cry of Washington's warning to keep clear of entangling alliances—that European affairs could give them no concern—that the Monroe doctrine should be enforced, and that Canada would form a fine addition to the North Western States. Everything considered, all this was the most dastardly conduct that could be well imagined, and it is long before Americans will regain the good opinions which they have thereby lost in the estimation of Canadians. It is quite true that there are only a few of their papers that have adopted this ungenerous course, and these few journals have always pandered to the vilest passions of the vilest people. It is refreshing to observe that the tone of the respectable press is altogether different; and respectably educated Americans feel on the matter as we do in Canada—and their sympathies are with England. They will not countenance any plan to molest her, either through Canada or otherwise. However Canada is in a position to defend herself without a single British soldier, as all Americans who know us must be aware. In England they may have exalted notions of the power of the United States, but if so it must be because "distance lends enchantment to the view;" for here in Canada, where we are near them and know them well, we have no such opinion. When we were young and weak, and torn by divisions and factions we gave them some examples of Canadian bravery that they never will forget as long as they remember Queenston Heights and Lundy's Lane; and if we were able to make a stand against their hordes in those, our days of greatest evil and darkness, there need be no apprehension but we can do so now with infinitely greater certainty and success when we will act as one man. In any remark we have made we have no desire to provoke offence, but merely to assure England that she need not have any anxiety on our part, and to assure all whom it may concern, that we are able and willing to take upon us the defence of Canada, and allow England to withdraw her armies from us if she should require to do so: and we will engage to retain her this splendid Province in all its glory.

But we wish to live in peace with all our neighbors, and we have no doubt all good Americans have the same feeling as regards us; therefore we regret to see the writings of the Herald and Times, as being calculated to make enemies of those who, for all reasons, should desire to be friends, and who will be friends, at least we shall do nothing to impair the friendship. But if an attack should be made upon us, we shall show to the world what Canadians are made of.—Colonist.

Bloomerism Reversed.—The ladies of Louisville, Baltimore, and other southern cities it is said, now promenade the streets with long trains to their dresses borne by a negro boy.

Australia as it is.

We have received the Sydney Empire and Morning Herald to the 21st of February. A destructive fire took place at Hobart Town, January 21st. Property to the amount of from three to five hundred thousand dollars was destroyed. Crown lands in certain localities appear to command a high price. In the township of Gladstone, land, the upset price of which was £10 per acre, brought £518, and on the price brought was over 200 per cent. over the government upset. We take the following paragraph from the Melbourne Herald:

"I'm off for Callao!" Such is the exclamation which greets the ear in passing through the crowds of diggers who now daily throng our wharves. True or false, the rumored discoveries of the precious dust near Callao, have induced many to abandon the Victoria mines, and ship at once for that port. The Melbourne packet, a small schooner lately employed in the Hobart Town Trade, sailed on Thursday, full of passengers, and the Gipsey steamer on the same day took two hundred on board the Launceston, a ship of one thousand tons, bound for the same port. Most of the vessels laid on, are filling up fast, and a change in the aspect of affairs has taken place at the steamboat landing-places on the river. Diggers' swags, straw mattrasses, tin pannikins, dirty blankets, double barrelled guns and savage bulldogs, half choking themselves at the end of long chains, are the things you are likely to tumble over now as you walk along; while the former obstructions, such as half frantic men and screaming women, squalling children, stout carpet bags, rickety boxes, and all the heterogeneous mass composing the outfit of the "new chum," have almost entirely disappeared.

In the Legislative Council, the qualification of electors for the Upper House was fixed at £1000 freehold, or £100 a year, or £300 leasehold. Barristers, physicians, ministers of religion of every sect, officers of the army and navy, and schoolmasters were also enfranchised. The clause relating to the qualification of members of the upper house was discussed. The Speaker proposed that the qualification for members should be the same as that for electors, but withdrew his amendment in favor of one proposed by Mr. Griffith, that the qualification for members of the Upper House should be the same as that for members of the Lower House, which was negatived. It was then successively proposed that the property should be £5,000, £6,000, £7,000, £8,000 and £10,000. All were lost except the last. The division showed majorities of three against £5,000, two against £6,000 and one against £8,000.

Throughout the colonies the mining interest is reported as generally good. The correspondent of the Argus says, "The celebrated Monster Nugget, upon the fruits of which the lucky finders are now probably enjoying their otium cum dignitate in old England, and which gained for them an interview with that sovereign whose profile is now probably impressed on the greater part of the fruits of their labor, hardly produced a greater sensation than that produced in these diggings on Tuesday last. In an old hole, situated in a part of the old Eureka, and opposite Messrs. Hassell & Moneton's London store, a place now almost totally deserted, there was found by Thomas Cordwant, Wm. Smith, and a party of five others, a nugget weighing fifty-two pounds and one ounce. Strange coincidence! The other monster was also found in a deserted hole. The nugget is nine inches long by about seven broad, has a striking resemblance to a tortoise, and is composed of pure gold, almost wholly unmixed with quartz. So strange is it that one should go to bed poor, and proceed to the Commissioners a comparatively rich man in the morning. The price of gold ranges from 77s. to 77s. 4d. The total amount shipped from Melbourne for London, from the 1st of January to the 11th of February, was 279,916 oz. 5 cwt. The rate of interest at Sydney has been increased from four to five per cent. The rates of exchange at Melbourne have been altered; banks purchasing drafts on London at par and selling at two per cent. The total amount of gold brought into Sidney during the week previous to the 2d of February, was seven thousand ounces. The yield of the various gold fields was as great as formerly. The establishment of railways throughout the colony was being discussed with a commendable spirit. The American brig Ida arrived on the 3d of February, from Newcastle, Eng. The Akbar sailed for Melbourne same day.—Panama Herald, April 22.

Paying the Militia in the Slave Catching Service.—When the alleged fugitive Glover, was put in the Milwaukie jail, the U. S. Deputy Marshal called upon the officers of the militia to order out the troops to prevent the rescue of the slave-catcher's property from the jail. But the militia men would not come out unless all the forms of the law were complied with, and some authoritative guarantee given that they should be paid. The forms were finally complied with, and the U. S. District Attorney signed the requisite certificates, that the United States should pay the troops. Two companies, consisting of 111 men, were then ordered out, and required by the Deputy Marshal to hold themselves in readiness at their armory "till further orders."

Three days after Glover had escaped, the commander of the troops waited upon the Deputy Marshal to know how much longer the troops would be required to remain at the armory. The Deputy Marshal in great surprise, replied, "You havn't kept the troops at the armory all this while have you?" The commandant replied, "Certainly; you gave directions to keep them there till further orders." The slave catching officers found that the letter of their orders had been faithfully obeyed by the troops, and finally paid the men eight dollars each, eight hundred and eighty eight dollars in all, for watching to prevent the escape of the fugitive, three days after he had left the jail for Canada. This is the way the people of the United States are made to foot the bills for slave catching.—Commonwealth.

The Maine Law in England.—By our English papers we see that the Maine Law movement is rapidly extending throughout the kingdom. Leading and influential metropolitan and provincial papers assign regular a page of every issue to this subject

The London Atlas, of March 15 contains a page of extracts from charges to juries, and other opinions of English Judges, to the effect that almost all the crimes and outrages are the effect of intemperance; we give some extracts in another column. The Atlas, of April 1, contains a letter from Mr. Dow, addressed to the United Kingdom Alliance, for the Supression of the Liquor Traffic," al o reports of numerous meetings held in different parts of the kingdom. The Glasgow Christian News, a very able congregational paper, contains many excellent articles on the general Subject of temperance and on the Maine Law; they are very refreshing to us, whe are accustomed in this south down East State to a very different influence from our Congregational paper. The News in every number brings the subject prominently and forcibly before its readers, not by way of sneer or reproach or fault-finding, of the working temperance men, but heartily commending the subject to the attention of the people, as one every way worthy of the aympathy and active co-operatian of all good men.

A movement is commenced there, to raise funds for a vigorous campaign (for the war) against the liquor traffic, and annual hundred pound ($500) subscriptions are rapidly coming in. The Maine Law movement is now fairly before Parliment under very favourable auspices.—Maine Journal.

Tradition of Nations.

The nations of the earth which have longest possessed a knowledge of letters, have given to the world the most distinct tradition of the great facts in the Bible history.

The Chaldeans, several hundred years before the Christian era, talked and wrote about the flood—the destruction thereby of the primitive race of man—the new peopling of the earth by the only family that was preserved. They spoke of the father of this family as having been warned in a dream, concerning the destruction which awaited the world, and that he built a ship, and went into this with his family, that when the flood began to abate, this man whom they called Xisinthrus, let out the bird, which at first returned to the ship, finding no resting place—that when the flood was fully abated, the ship rested on a mountain, when he went forth to offer sacrifices and strayed from the rest of the company or family, who went and settled in Babylon. Xisinthrus of the Chaldeans was evidently Moses' Noah. The Chaldeans reckon ten kings before the flood; while Moses counts ten generations.

The Chinese traditions, if they do not absolutely refer to the same persons under the name of Fohi as Moses' Noah; are, indeed most singular. They describe their first king as having lived at a time which would make him a cotemporary of Noah, or so nearly so, that the difference is a matter of no real moment.

They connect with the life of their first king Fohi, so much that Moses connects with Noah, that it appears among the greatest singularities that two nations so disconnected and so unlike, should have preserved the same matter of history or tradition from the ancient date which they have, if indeed no such peculiar circumstances, as they relate had taken place.

The Chinese say their first king had no father; that his mother conceived him encompassed with a rainbow, which is an evident allusion to the rainbow's appearing to Noah; with other circumstances similar to the Mosaic account. The Chinese history supposes the residence of Fohi to have been in the north west province of Ararat, where the ark rested after the abatement of the waters.

The fact that the Chinese may claim to be descended from Noah, or to have had him for their first king, by no means militates against the Mosaic account; in as much as all living have descended from Noah.

The Greeks, in ancient times maintained a belief in the fact of a flood, which had long before destroyed the human family for its wickedness, with the exception of one man whom they called Deucalion, who on account of his piety was preserved and became the father of a new race.

They reported that Deucalicon had a large chest into which he put his family and numerous beasts and floated safely on the water, until the flood was over.

On the first settlement of Mexico by the Spanish, they were surprised to find in the Mexican Manuscripts, which they obtained, an account of the fall of the mother of mankind, accompanied by a serpent, together with an idea of the flood, and a single family escaping on a raft. Among them the observance of every seventh day was maintained.

Familiar traditions have been found among other nations where the Scriptures had never been known, where the Gospel had never been published. Upon what imaginary ground can these traditions be accounted for, except upon the acknowledgement, that the grand items of Bible history had their origin in facts of existing traditions;

Property in Man.—The Nebraska Bill is not our only danger from the slave power. There is an organised and determined effort being made to have property in slaves placed upon the same basis as any other property. If they can obtain such a recognition under the Constiution of the U. S., they expect to be able to hold slaves in all the territories, and to be at liberty to carry them into any of the States. Hitherto the decisions of the U. S. Courts have been that property in slaves is dependent upon local, positive law, and the title is invalidated the moment the slave is taken beyond the jurisdiction of that law. But Mr. Calhoun and all of his school claimed that what the Constitution recognized as property in one State, was in law and equity property everywhere under the national jurisdiction. That doctrine is becoming universal at the South, and is advocated by many at the North. In the Lemmon case, which is pending before the courts, slaveholders expect to get an endorsement of this doctrine, and there is danger that they will succeed. If they do not now, we know not how soon the courts may be in the hands of men who will give such a decision. A majority of the judges are from Southern States, as is usual in the distribution of power. And as the Judges from the North are removed by death, their places are sure to be filled by the most pro-slavery men that can be found. It is the glory of every administration to out-strip all their predecessors in serving the slave power. It would be wonderful if we should for years to come get an administration which dared to do anything for freedom. Hence as new Judges are appointed from time to time, it is more han probable that a majority will soon be found who will assert the right of the master to hold his slaves in any territory of the nation, and hold them in transitu, in any State. When that is done, we shall be powerless to resist, except by a civil revolution. From the decision of the U. S. Courts there is no appeal. We shall be obliged to submit, or resort to arms in defence of Liberty and Justice.—Morning Star.

Object of Plowing.

The object of plowing is not fully understood and considered by a majority of those who perform the work; if it were it would be done more faithfully and thoroughly. It is not alone to kill weeds and grass, nor even to furnish a seed-bed of fresh-turned soil for planting or sowing—nor anything which looks merely to the invertion of the sod—which constitutes good plowing.—Large plows, turning a wide and shallow furrow, will show a large day's work, but the work imperfectly accomplished, when the true object of plowing is considered. The chief value of plowing is the preparation it gives the soil for producing vegetation—for giving to the plants sown or planted, the elements of growth and fruitfulness. It should thoroughly pulverize and "loosen the texture of the soil, and thus admit a free circulation of air and moisture, which, by chemical action, disintegrates or breaks down the stony or mineral portions of the same, so that they may be more readily dissolved and taken up by the roots."

In a soil thus plowed—thus prepared for yielding its support to vegetable life—plants can appropriate from afar and near, the nutriment needed for their growth. It is dissolved and ready for their use—not hidden in unbroken clods or slumbering in an undisturbed subsoil—but awaits their action in a friable and penetrable state, where every hungry rootlet, sent out to gather nourishment for its parent plant, may find and appropriate it. It is truly wonderful how full of minute roots the soil of the cornfield becomes, and if that soil is fine and deep, the deeper and closer together will the fibres permeate and intersect it. This is true of all other crops, and while the leaves and fruit depend so intimately on the vigor and extent of the roots, these facts should always be taken into consideration among the objects of plowing.

Fineness and depth of soil are requisite in order to receive the full benefit of the manures applied. It is not fertilizing food in its crude state which assists vegetation—it must first become intimately mixed with, or in fact, a part of the soil. Barn-yard manure especially, seems of little worth, while forming visible layers between the clods of a half plowed soil—it is often dry and coarse—and rather shunned than sought by the roots sent out to forage for suitable food.—If a well prepared soil has any strength and virtue it will yield it readily; and poor land in good tilth is often more productive than better soils less perfectly prepared. The influences of air and moisture have freedom to work, and they are no laggards in gathering means to supply the wants of vegetation.

With those hints on the object of plowing we might connect others on the process—the best means of accomplishing that object—but prefer to leave it for other pens.—Will our practical farmers, who have thought and experimented upon the subject, tell us what plow and what depth of furrow, taking also, soil, season, team and time into consideration, most thoroughly loosens, pulverizes and inverts the soil? This information would be of much value to every farmer, and is especially needed in the present state of agricultural progress, for taking the country at large into account, plowing is more imperfectly performed than any other part of farm husbandry.—Rural New Yorker.

The "City of Glasgow."

As no news of this long missing vessel has come to hand, and as there are many interested in her fate and many enquiries made regarding her, we copy the following letter which was addressed by Richardson Brothers to the Liverpool Times, and which contains many interesting particulars concerning her. It will be seen by the date of the letter 21st April, no apprehensions were felt by the agents in regard to her safety.

"Many enquiries being made at our office as to any particulars we can furnish of the City of Glasgow steamship, which left Liverpool on the 1st March, and had not arrived at Philadelphia on the 8th April, and some anxiety being felt for her safety, we consider it our duty to lay the following particulars before the public, for the benefit of those who may have any friends on board that vessel. The vessel was in a state of perfect efficiency at starting, her compasses having been adjusted within five days of sailing. The number of persons on board was 373 souls, including infants, being equal to 339 statute adults, and 74 officers and crew, the vessel being 1087 tons register. The water on board was the Government allowance for forty days, besides which there is a power of obtaining condensed water.

The provisions on board were 1lb per head of fresh and salt meats per day for 46 days for every person on board, and of bread, flour, &c., 1lb for each person each day for 54 days, besides rather more than 6 tons of potatoes and vegetables, and 3¼ tons of tea, coffee, and sugar, as well as other small stores, &c. These provisions, with economy, are calculated to last 60 or 70 days. The coals on board, were for a passage of 25 or 26 days. We believe the vessel to be detained in the ice on the banks of Newfoundland, and unable to make her way out of it, in corroboration of which view the Baltic steamer was three days in it, the Charity screwsteamer was nine days in it, and a sailing vessel some years ago, in the same place, was thirty days in it without being able to move. The steamers of our line have been before tried under canvass (and this steamer having been for several days under it against adverse winds,) are capable of going to the westward under it, and the commander is aware that it is our wish that, whenever necessary and practicable, such a course should be adopted, in case of any derangement of the machinery, whe we do not anticipate. Sailing vessels which left this port a month before the City of Glasgow han only just arrived. For these reasons we ourselves feel no anxiety for her safety.

Offer of a Polish Legion to the British Government.—A proposal has been made on the part of the Poles to form a Polish Legion, which being supplied with the munitions of war, shall fight side by side with the English and French troops against the common enemy. An address to that effect was sent to the Right Hon. the Earl of Aberdeen, First Lord of the Treasury for his approval; the following is the noble earl's reply:—

Downing street, April 13,

"Sir,—I am desired by my Lord Aberdeen to acknowledge the receipt of the letter you addressed to him on the 3rd inst., in which, adverting to the declaration of war by England and France against Russia, you express a hope, on behalf of yourself and your countrymen residing at Portsmouth, that her Majisty's government will allow you to form a Polish Legion, which being supplied with munitions of war shall fight side by side with the English and French troops against the common enemy; and I am to acquaint you that your letter has been referred for the consideration of the Secretary of State for War and the Colonies—I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

Our Covetous Neighbors.

For some weeks past we have been experiencing a sort of surface excitement, growing out of the rumored designs of John Mitchel, and others on Canada

Tell-tale papers, and papers in sympathy with the scheme, have pretty liberally supplied Canadians with much that they desired, and more than they really knew on the subject; the result has been that a reply has been sent back to the U. S. by Canada papers and persons formerly thought to sympathise with Annexationists—sufficiently explicit, and we had thought satisfactory, to both enemies and well-wishers of both countries.—However, in this as in many other things, it seems that we are mistaken

We can, to a certain extent, excuse the miserable, inflated, mischievous crew, who with Mitchel for their leader, would aim to make Canada a part of their confederacy, and Canadians subordinate to such "Impartial Citizens," as themselves—we say their besotted ignorance and self-concert is their excuse. But we see no excuse for a similar greedy, gnawing, covetousness, respecting this country and her citizens, which we find by their writings and speeches, to be cancer-like—eating out the vitals of men long thought to favor freedom, and to respect the rights of nations to their own possessions.

John Mitchel's pitiful desire for a piece of British America, is not to say the least worse than Hon. Wm. H. Seward's desire for the same. The advocacy of the same, through the columns of his Citizen is as proper as through those of Dr. Bailey's National Era. It will be an easy matter to dispose of Mitchel, but not so easy, unless begun in time, to destroy the subtle workings against Canada, of men professing to be right on the subject of national honor, human freedom, and moral progress. Trust none of them after you get a sight of the fangs. The National Era, speaking of the Union, and the Cost of the Union," says in illustration of his views, and bearing directly on this point:

"The whole history of the country, from its first settlement to its Colonial organization, from that time to the Revolution, and from the Revolution to our own times, shows that Northern People have been as intent upon territorial extension as home-development. The vigor of one has but quickened the appetite for the other. Did not the articles of the Confederation make express provisions for the accession of the Canadas? Was not their acquisition a favorite object with Northern People during the last war—an object that might have been accomplished but for the imbecility of the Federal Administration? Were not the People of New England ready to go to war for a mere slip of territory claimed by Maine; and the People of Vermont and New York restrained with difficulty from joining with the patriots, a few years since, for the revolution of the Canadas? Is not their annexation still a popular idea in the North and West? And yet, we talk of the policy of the North looking to the improvement of what it has, not to the acquisition of what it has not!

Here then we have the views of political anti-slavery men, so-called, touching their aims and desires in respect to this country. Could the U. S. ever furnish any political body of men, or any number of individuals who have remained true to their professions of freedom; or were Canadians in doubt as to the measure of freedom enjoyed by the white citizens of the two countries—the one owing allegiance to a crown, the other professing, though it does, Republicanism, a degree of charity might be exercised towards those whose zeal, not according to knowledge, had prompted them to volunteer Yankee protection to benighted Britishers; but as it is, what but ineffable self-conceit—something indigenous in an American hot-bed, could perpetrate anything like it, barring John Mitchel and his disciples? Annexation to the United States, of these Provinces—to the Northern States if you please, is by interpretation, Yankee domination—Canadian subjugation. There is Mexican annexation after the manner of the snake and toad—swallowed whole. So it will be we fear, of every project of that sort.

Men talk of a North and South. Further than the lines that divide the country, geographically, there is no North and South now: the great effort is to make one; by people in the Northern section for more silver, by those South for more negroes, but like the rest of such work it is sadly awry.

No, in this work of Northern annexation, as of Southern, are to be found Yankees of the two extremes in opinion as to speculative matters, but singularly at one on the idea of National domination. They are told by these annexationists in so many words: "Your government cannot compare to ours, you are not, therefore, so free as we are." In the true style of remark about their slaves: "You cannot, politically speaking, take care of yourselves, we will care for you when you come under us." And that is it. Canadians may banish the idea of partnership, should they go under their protection, whatever we now hear of similar origin.

National antipathies, national jealousies, national litleness, originated and fostered by slavery, are too strong for independent freemen to remain under them in peace. Canadians of the better class of mind and morals, and these we believe to be a majority, and increasing, must conclude to submit to much that is humiliating, or revolt from a Northern confederacy even. If annexation must be, why not annex them to Canada? But Dr. Bailey, the leader of the Free Soil Abolitionists, or any other exponent of his party on that subject, shows but little knowledge of the true wants of Canadians, by such views, at the same time that he is carving out a deal of trouble here, and confusion for his sympathisers. The same leader says:

"Suppose the Union dissolved, the North and West would be in possession of all the elements of national power—population, diversified industry, and commerce. With sixteen million of freemen, receiving annually vast accessions of hardy foreign races, they could supply their wants, and would continue a formidable power, expanding and growing stronger every day. Lying generally in the great basin of the Lakes and the river St. Lawrence, the natural attraction between them and the Canadas would have full play, and identity of commercial interests and of race, with sympathetic ideas and institutions, would in due time lead to a political confederation, to which, under such circumstances, Great Britain would feel little disinclination. But these Provinces, it must be remembered, comprise a larger area than that occupied by the slave States.

Meantime, the new empire would bear sway from the Atlantic to the Pacific, possessing an extent of Territory far greater than belongs to the present Union, and pervaded, as the present Union is not, by homogeneous social and political institutions, without any great exceptional interest, seeking to oppress and enslave other interests.—Of the greatness, the impregnable strength, the unrivalled prosperity, of such an Empire, no intelligent mind can entertain a doubt."

We fear the writer will "err by taking things for granted," in this case. Such munificence on the part of Great Britain, for it would be nothing else, has no counterpart in United States' history so far, and certainly nowhere out of that world.

It would seem that all the anxiety, care, protection and kind offices of Great Britain for her Provinces, had no other object than to prepare materials for American goaheadativeness to try its infant hand upon a colossal empire with.

We have heard of castles in the air, but never saw the realization of the conception so nearly as in the above extract, except in the Broadway palaces, also of Northern growth, and which, like all such grand creations, tumble down and crush their originators. *

Even-Handed Justice.

About thirty negroes came down on the Frankfort train yesterday from Lexington. They are on their way to Liberia, and were emancipated by parties in Fayette. The railroad companies carried them free of charge.—Louisville Journal, 20.

A friend calls our attention to the above. It has been going the rounds of the papers on both sides of the line for some time, and like much of the same sort, has elicited approbation of the chivalry from many who do not make the case of the Negroes their own. We are told that Yankees are not so bad, after all, that we are too severe on them for their conduct to the colored people—that we should do them justice, when as, in the above instance, they deserve it.

Now we beg to say that we do not think we can be too severe on the negro-haters, slaveholders and colonizationists of the United States; their deeds are ugly and evil, and any half way expressions of ours would be ridiculous. White men would not resort to them when treating of their enemies, and we shall not. If there is one lesson more easily learned from them than another it is the most fitting time to speak of, to talk to, and act towards an enemy. A keen sense of the amount of justice due them provokes the proper course. We know that to please them, we could not be two forbearing—too mealy-mouthed—we could refine the expression until nothing could be heard, from sheer delicacy, but that is not our forte, and in doing them justice now, we shall try to be guided by the realities of the case.

Thirty human beings made in the image of God have been kept in chains by these chivalrous Yankees, until whatever of his likeness remains, is in spite of their efforts purposely made to obliterate it. These thirty peices of skin and bone, are either unfit for labor from age, disease, hard usage, or unnecessary to their masters in a pecuniary point, or some moral coward, having the fear of "torment" before him, wishes to buy off Satan by giving him the offal; so a deed of emancipation is made, provided they will consent to go his house in Africa. They consent, of course. Who would hesitate, when the choice was between Hell in Kentucky, and the same place in Guinea if he could get a free passage? It may reasonably appear a gain, as it is leaving a certainty for an uncertainty. But the railroad companies give them a free ride! yes, but when did Kentucky free negroes get a free ride on the cars, unless going to Liberia? Does any one suppose that these men would have been liberated at all, if they had not consented to leave their native home? We do not. And what sort of gratitude for such favors must the poor creatures have felt to their considerate and liberal minded railroad benefactors? A free ride to the penitentiary—to the gallows or to the stake would be suggestive of like regard to the mind of a freeman. Free coloured people are called a nuisance by the promoters of colonization in the United States,—a "festering sore on Society;"—nuisances and festering sores generally get particular attention, and this case is not an exception. Poor wretches! God made them men, but Yankee institutions defeat his purposes for a time. But enlightened Yankees framed their own institutions, and foul and revolting as they are, they are but a reflex of the minds that originated them. How long their despicable conduct to their free and slave population will continue we know not, and have no means of "guessing;" judging from the colonization, Nebraska and other efforts, at present, however, we think it is a small matter. The duty of their coloured people is in our opinion quite clear. Our duty we know to be, to give credit only where it is due,—there is not any due to Yankees of the class we are now dealing with.—Some honest upright men there are in the States, but we would not go to Kentucky to find them, nor to any of the slaveholders or apologists for the institution in the land.

One hopeful sign of the times, however, is in the degree of sensitiveness, their conduct induces. Big as is the United States, the people outside are yet invested with some importance to Yankees; Even hence, efforts to make brutal conduct look excusable. We are outside, and mean to stay, and shall aim to increase the wholesome outside sentiment, so that when they take up their second abode, with their battered and scarred victims "down below," they shall not lay our silence on their conduct as a flattering unction to their souls. *

Anti-Slavery Society of Canada.—The Annual Meeting of this Society is expected to be held about the 19th inst. It is understood that the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, of New York, and Frederick Douglass, of Rochester, and other distinguished speakers, will be present. So says the Globe

To Travelling Agents and Subscribers.

Henry Van Dosen writes to us from Chatham, that his paper, subscribed for on the late visit of Rev. W. H. Jones, has not been received. We have not received the name nor funds of Mr. Van Dosen, from Mr. Jones, so we could not send him the paper, but will attend to it at once. We trust our agents will see the propriety of carefully writing the names of those who subscribe for the paper, and pay them; and that subscribers will be careful to take the agent's receipt for the same. In this case, a subscriber complains bitterly against us, and ends by making us pay his postage, so certain is he that we knew he was being deprived of his paper, when we did not know, so far as our agent is concerned, that such a man lived; less that he had paid for the Freeman. Agents will please be careful, and subscribers will please pay their postage and speak with less bitterness, unless certain that we are disposed to defraud them. *

The Queen's Birthday.

Preparations are being made to celebrate Her Majesty's birthday in a manner more in keeping with the growing greatness of the Province, than heretofore. The greatest enthusiasm prevails as the period approaches. This speaks well for the loyalty and patriotism of Canadians in general. We hope the colored citizens of Toronto and other places, will give evidence of their respect for the great occasion, by uniting heartily with the rest of the community, on whatever plans may be proposed for the day. *

GLEANINGS.

—Ward, the murderer of Mr. Butler, of Louisville, Kentucky, has been acquitted. Universal disgust prevails against the unjust verdict, and Ward and his relatives have been obliged to flee the State, at the dictation of an infuriated mob. A specimen throughout of slaveholding justice, law and order.

—Capt. Rogers, of Amherstburg, was drowned on the 5th inst., while fishing in the Detroit.

—The Aliened American is about to change proprietors, but the present able Editor, Mr. Day, will continue to fill the editorial chair.

—No news yet, of the "City of Glasgow."

—A fire at Hobart Town, Australia, destroyed property valued at $500,000. Great quantities of gold are taken out at Melbourne—one nugget weighing 52 oz.

—Parliament is to meet at Quebec on the 13th of June.

—Fears are entertained that Capt. Collins, one of Capt M'Clure's party in search of Sir John Franklin, is lost. Parties are in search of him, as well as of Sir John.

—The Galveston (Texas) News says that several slaves have escaped from that State to the North recently. Wonder that they should be so discontented!

—A man named Leonard Housiet, living near Cincinnati, shot himself lately in a fit of anger, because some candle-moulds that he was using, leaked!

—The gallery of the Catholic church at Erie, Pa., U. S., gave way on the 7th inst., killing one person and injuring several.

—A riot between the Catholics and Protestants took place on the 7th, at Chelsea, near Boston. The window and cross of the Catholic church were demolished, and other mischief was done. The rioters were dispersed by the authorities.

—The friends of the Nebraska Bill are in fine spirits just now. The average vote to lay aside other bills it. Committee of the Whole, in the House, to reach "Bill Nebraska," was 99 against 34; and the vote by the Committee to consider it, stood ayes 85, nays 105.

—The depot of the Buffalo and Brantford railroad at Brantford, was recently destroyed by fire.

For the Provincial Freeman.

Windsor C. W., 1854.

Dear Freeman:—Business and another matter have prevented me from writing to you since the last time. The other matter is your unceremonious way of dealing with correspondents "in general," and Benjamin "in particular." After reading your cross-grained remarks at what you are pleased to call my verdancy, I felt like standing on my dignity, and not giving the paper one moment of my time; but as in many other things, on sober second thought the right prevailed—I said to myself, the paper should not suffer because of its present captious Editors—it will be a paper, soon—Rev. Ward will take it in hand, and then there will not be such fire-flashes against modest people, as myself for instance, who is willing to do the best, but is frank enough to confess his short-doings. Animated by these thoughts, I went to work, and as you know have done a little, and my purpose is to do on.

The underground has done but a small amount since I wrote, though I see a large freight list bulletined. I will give my items from actual observation and experience on the road soon, and so for the present another subject.

Emigrants on the above ground come in fast, but speedily journey to Chatham or thereabouts.

I do not think much of the disposition they show to squat there only. Is there no other place than Chatham in Canada? Men from Chatham, say, landowners ask enormous prices for their lands; so they will at any point, when they see a disposition to settle there and no where else.—One old "Cannuck," says, we who live in Kent and Essex are just on the door-sill of Canada, and I am of his opinion. The emigrants should scatter. Benjamin has been "up and down," hunting and fishing, and can say on his own good authority, that the Sydenham is as fine a river as the Thames, and on either her branches, land is as good and a 'sight' cheaper. The same is true of lands in other parts. I begin to think with my old neighbor that we should not stay on the door-sill but go in the house. There are, in the Queen's Bush, fine lands, good Christians, and all else wanted in the way of social privileges. The Ontario District with good lands; but I'm tired of talking; it will not "pay." Some of those emigrants ask advice, but take their own way, when they know nothing about the country, and then grumble when they get cheated. It is true of the same people when they condescend to settle in our little Sandwich.

While on this land business, what ails the land in Rawleigh, Maidstone, Tilbury, and other townships between here and the great Chatham? One folly often perpetrated by the new-comers, is to give a high price for lands because some sharper asks it, who sees they know but little about their value here, and so raise the price of land for miles. Emigrants should not to be in a hurry to buy at this season, I think the land will not run away; the danger to them is their "tin" will, if they pay the Chatham people their price as soon as they come; or if they decide to crowd in there to jostle one another. But Benjamin is off the subject. No matter now, as there was none; your Chatham correspondents will not take offence at his procivity to use their "thunder," if the good Queen's Bushers do not. No offence is meant towards the emigrants; they are as fine a class of men as you'd wish to know, but like other good people, they do not know everything about Canada, and Canada lands. If no offence, what do you meddle for? I hear you say. Why you know ——— will be meddlers.

BENJAMIN.

For the Provincial Freeman.

LONDON, C. W., April 22, 1854.

DEAR FREEMAN,—Permit me, through the medium of your columns, to say a few words about our people in London, C. W.

It is highly encouraging to witness the efforts of our people here to prove themselves men, in the strictest sense of the word. They have groceries, bakeries, drug stores, &c., and are patronized by ladies and gentlemen of all classes of society. They are not the poorest—they are not the meanest people in Canada, by a good deal. The Temperance Society is, as was Gideon of old, sometimes faint, but always pursuing. Those who are peculiarly fond of the good creature, give no aid, neither do we expect it from such; while many of those who despise both bottle and dram-drinker, stand aloof, for causes worthy of neither naming nor notice.

The Baptist society has been growing of late; which growth is owing to the gradual accessions to our number of citizens. The pastor is a good, moral man, though unable to labor as regularly and ably as some owing to the severity of a former illness, the effects of which he will probably feel for many years to come. The Methodist body are no doubt proud of the efficient gentleman whose labors they now enjoy; and it is gratifying to be able to state that things may be heard from that pulpit, other than those ridiculous phrases, once prevalent, but now vanishing from Canada.

The public schools are accessible to the colored children, and they don't stay away. The writer received, about two weeks ago, a communication from a gentleman of this town, and on perceiving the hand to be a lady's, made bold to ask whose pen had done credit to that paper. The reply was that F—— W—— did the writing. That writing is not common, and ten amongst twelve of our school teachers, irrespective of color, would blush were the same shown them as a scholar's writing.

T. H., of London, has labored amongst the brethren of the Baptist body, for three weeks past, and I need scarcely say that a sermon will please that body, whether read, spoken or preached, if it be a sermon. Success to the good people of London! I congratulate their praiseworthy efforts, and trust they will go forward; and they may, under and by the blessing of "the good one," as Jehovah was called by the Saxons, set an example to Christians and moralists, and urge on the go ahead system, as does the model city Toronto.

PHILANTHROPIST.

ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS REWARD.—Ran away last evening, about 4 o'clock, Sarah Marshall, a light mulatto girl, about 20 years of age, with blue eyes and black hair, and might pass for white if not closely inspected. She is of medium size and well dressed, wearing some jewelry. Captains of ships, steamboats, &c. are cautioned against harboring her. The above reward will be paid to any person returning her to No. 133 Baronne street, or lodging her in any of the city jails. THOS. J. FRISBY.

GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD.—It is the intention of the directors, about the 10th instant, to withdraw all freight trains off the line for a short period, in order to allow of several repairs being made along the road. The temporary suspension bridge, near, the Falls, is to be taken down, and replaced by the large, massive, permanent one, for the passage of trains across the river. This will, for a short time, cause some little inconvenience to parties in the transit of freight; the work, however will be hurried on as speedily as possible, and in a few weeks all will be right again. This arrangement will not interfere with passenger traffic; on the contrary, an extra train will be placed on the road, we believe during the present week, for the increased accomodation of the public, to run in the night.—Prototype.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO FRANCE.—Orders have been received at Portsmouth to expedite the Queen's yatch, Victoria and Albert, and the painters and decorators are to work from six a. m. to eight p. m. to hasten her progress. She is to be ready by the 10th of May, on which day it is expected Her Majesty and family will embark for a visit to the French capital.—Morning Chronicle.

PRACTICAL PROHIBITION.—The women of Winchester, Ind. have turned practical prohibitionists A man died in that place recently from excessive drinking, and the women, to the number of forty or fifty, called on the liquor seller, made him sign a pledge not to sell any more rum, paid him for all the liquor in his store, and then turned it into the gutter. The woman, whose husband died, has entered suit against the liquor dealer for damages for the loss of her husband.

THE NORTH TO THE WALL.—A while after the passage by Congress of the Missouri Compromise Act in 1820, the late John Randolph, of Virginia, used the following language on the floor of Congress:

"We of the South know what we are doing.—We are always united from the Ohio to Florida; and we can always unite; and you of the North are divided. We have conquered you once, (in the recent admission of Missouri with slavery,) and we can, and will, conquer you again. Ay, gentlemen, we have driven you to the wall, and when we have you there, we mean to keep you there, and nail you down like base money."

☞ The following is a necrology of those, who in a comparatively few years, have sacrificed their lives in attempts to penetrate the mystery of the African continent.

Ledyard died at Cairo, in 1788.

Harneman died of fever, in Central Africa, between 1802 and 1818.

Mungo Park was killed at Boussa, 1805.

Ritchie died at Mourzuk in 1819.

Bowditch died of exhaustion in 1824.

Major Laing was killed near Timbuctoo, in 1827.

Oudney died at Nurmur, from a cold in 1824.

Clapperton died of dysentery, at Siccatoo, in 1827.

A PORTRAIT OF SIR CHARLES NAPIER.—A farmer looking man with a fat face, thick lips, and a tremendous nose covered with snuff, large ears like the flaps of a saddle, and like "Uncle Ned" in lyric history, with no wool to speak of on the top of his head, although his parenological developements displayed an extensive surface where the wool ought to grow; the head placed on the body of a stunted alderman, whose clothes appear to have been pitch-forked on his back, with one shirt collar up and the other down, his waistcoat buttoned awry, and his shirt front smeared with snuff—and you have the portrait of Sir Charles Napier. If there is a thirst for further or more minute particulars, it may be added that the Admiral wears Blucher boots and takes snuff with three fingers.—

TOBACCO CHEWERS BEWARE!—Beside the poison contained in the weed itself, many of our tobacco chewers are absorbing into their systems an oxyde of lead,—the same which kills so many painters, and paralyzes others. Lead foil is cheaper than tin foil, and some of those who put up tobacco for chewing, use the latter instead of the former. The counterfeit may be known by its dark blue or bluish color, whereas tin foil is nearly white. Tobacco chewers who do not wish to absorb two poisons at once, will do well to profit by this caution.—N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

☞ Rev. Mr. Bonson of Prairie du Chien, says that a tea of black ash bark will cure the bite of a mad dog, or of poisonous reptiles.

THE FATE OF CANADA.—There is no part of the United States, or of Great Britain, that we know of, in which the elements of strength, wealth and growth are more rife and more active than in Canada. Her internal improvement policy, her immigration, revenue system, agricultural interest, banking interest, and her home trade, all conduce to her developement.—Her taxes are light, and public burdens, of all kinds, are easy. Her cities are filling up to such a degree, that in Toronto, London, Hamilton, &c., a house or business stand can hardly be had.—These cities are full of fine, noble blocks of buildings, both of a public and private character, of seminaries, manufactories and schools. Mechanics' services are in active demand, and well remunerated, and everything betokens life, zeal and prosperity. This state of things has not existed very long, and is in truth in direct contrast with the past history of the provinces. It has been the result of self-dependence, on the part of the people. The rationale of all these facts points to the distinct and palpable conclusion, that ere many years the Canadas will become separate from, and independent of, the mother government. The fact is just as certain, as that the two Provinces continue to exist. Whether she will become annexed to the United States, is a question admitting strong doubts. We think not, for the reason that the utter repugnance in which the Canadians hold slavery, will for ever prevent it, so long as slavery lasts, while upon the other hand, the South holds the same repugnance toward the annexation of a powerful and rich territory where slavery cannot come. May she not be independent?—Detroit Tribune.

ENGINE BUILDING IN GALT.—The thing that mekes a town, is what it can do, what it exports, or in other words, what it manufactures and sends abroad. A recent visit to the celebrated foundry establishment of Messrs, Cromby & Co., of this town, amply convinced us of this fact.—Here amid the busy din and constant whirl of swift machinery, are forged, fashioned and finished, and endless number of substantial articles of world-wide utility, displaying alike the progressive character of mechanical talent, and the credit, wealth and renown which ever attend untiring diligence and laudable perseverance. No less than 17 steam engines are in various stages of progress in this establishment at this moment, and more orders are pouring in than the enterprising proprietors can possibly execute, notwithstanding a great increase of hands and extra hours of work! But the most prominent attractive monument of skill now to be seen in the finishing room by visitors, is a large engine on the horizontal system, of forty horse-power—intended for Mr. William's Car Factory, Hamilton.—All the patterns, &c., were got up expressly for this dainty giantess, by the aforesaid firm. It presents a very massive appearance, with much polished brass and clear work of a first-rare character. It is also fitted with Stevenson's patent cut-off, for working steam expansively, to which are added, some ingenious improvements by Mr. Andrew Scott, the presiding spirit of the practical department. The fly-wheel alone weighs over three and a half tons, and altogether, will well repay the curious for a visit of inspection.—Dumfries Reformer.

AN ENGLISH FARM HOMESTEAD.—There were few houses which wore more completely the outward show of comfort and prosperty than the Great Farm at Atherton. It was a large, square, substantial building, with fine fruit covering the upper part of the walls, and jessamine, honeysuckle and China roses clustering round the windows. The green court, which divided the house from the road, was gay during nine months of the year with flowers and flowering trees; and boasted still some lingering spikes of hollyhock, a stray blossom of clover and scarlet, geranium, and bunches of that most fragrant of roses, which is called "of the four seasons." The mignionette too and the violet mingled their delicious fragrance. We see this in the poorest cottages, and here was no poverty to contend with. On one side of the court was the most affluent of all territories, an immense orchard, a perfect grove of fruit trees, cherry, apple, pear, plum, and walnuts at their tallest hight and fullest bearing.—Behind was a large kitchen garden; and on the side opposite to the orchard a magnificent farm-yard and rick-yard, horse-pond and duck-pond, barns, stables, cart-houses and cow-houses, dovecots and pig-sties, with all their inhabitants, biped and quadruped, feathered and unfeathered, of every denomination.—They who talk of the quiet of the country, can hardly have been in a great farm yard, towards sunset on a wintry day, when the teams are come back faom the plough and the cattle from the field, and the whole population is gathered together for the purpose of feeding. I would match it for noise and dirt and jostling against Cheapside, and taking into account the variety of creatures, and the different keys combined in that wild chorus, I should have little doubt of winning.—"Atherton," and other Tales, by Miss Milford.

WHEN SHOULD TIMBER BE CUT.—What is the proper season for cutting timber, to ensure its greatest durability is a question of considerable importance to the farmer, who would avoid unnecessary labor, as it makes a great difference to a farmer if his fences have to be removed once in five years when by cutting his timber in a proper season, they would last ten.

The time settled on by tradition, appears to be in the month of February. Perhaps the reason is the winter is the most convenient season for doing such work, there being more leisure then than in summer, and because it has been generally done at that time, it is supposed to be the right one.—But if any one will be at the trouble of cutting a tree in the winter or spring, and one in June or July, and making them into rails and then see which will last the longest, he will not need any other argument to convince him that tradition is at fault, in this case at least. Perhaps the case may be different with some kinds of timber, but hickory, ash, basswood, beech, and maple, and some other kinds cut in the winter, when the bark is tight on the tree, becomes saprotten and wormeaten before they have time to season, and fall to pieces: in the summer, the bark being loose, and the sap near the surface, can easily be peeled, when it dries immediately, and becomes as hard as bone, and will not doubt last. Trees cut down in summer, and left with the tops on, may be worked up at leisure with very good advantage.—Ohio Farmer.

☞ An impression exists among the ship-builders of London, almost amounting to moral certainty, that there is a Russian spy in every one of the English dock-yards.

RAILRODS IN RUSSIA.—The Czar Nicholas has been a great railway builder. In 1836 he first began by having one made between St Petersburg and Sarkoesls, a distance of seventeen miles. He next undertook to open the great road between the Capital and Moscow—a distance of 400 miles. In this work, Major Whistler, the American was employed, along with several other of his countaymen. The track was completed in 1851, and the passage is now made in twenty-two hours. At present thousands of laborers are employed on a road 568 miles long, which shall connect St. Petersburg and Warsaw. A company has been formed at Riga to make a road of 128 miles, connecting that port with St. Petersburg and Warsaw. Another road is contemplated to connect Moscow with the capital of Poland. In Poland, workmen have been for years, at a road from Warsaw to Mrsolvitz, in Prusian Silesia. This line, of 200 miles in length, would put Warsaw in communication with Vienna, Berlin and Paris. When the road from Warsaw to St. Petersburg is complete, as it will be in three years, four or five days journey will carry a man from Paris to the Roman Capitol, and when these lines of railway connecting the latter with the Capitals of Austria and Prussia are in operation, the influence of Russia over Central Europe will be extremely powerful. Those three monarchies will form a military union which nothing can break—unless the present storm should tend to prevent the future league of despotism so formidable.—Sat. Eve. Mail.

A BEAUTIFUL THOUGHT.—Margaret Fuller somewhere beautifully says:—"It is a marvel whence this perfect flower (the waterlily) derives its loveliness and perfume, springing as it does from the black mud over which the river sleeps, and where lurk the slimy eel and speckled frog, and the mud turtle, whom continual washing cannot cleanse. It is the very same black mud out of which the yellow lily sucks its obscene life and noisome odor. Thus we see, too, in the world, that some persons assimilate only what is ugly and evil from the same moral circumstances which supply good and beautiful results—the fragrance of celestial flowers—to the daily life of others."

HANNIBAL'S TREATISE ON THE ROOSTER.—De rooster am de he hen; and aldo he lay no eggs nor hatches no chickens, enny body would tink, by seein' him strut round de barn yard, dat he laid all de eggs and brought up all de chickens. He does de best to make you tink he does it all, for no sooner does a hen drop an egg dan he sets up as loud a cacklin' as de hen herself, in order to pull the wool ober de eyes ob us silly fellers, and make us believe he did it, when he am no more capable ob doin' de same dan I am. How much like some lazy husbands in dis kongregation I could menshun, wso let der wives do all de work, and take car' ob de family, while dey do all de cacklin'!

TOMATO CULTURE—Very few gardeners understand the proper mode of cultivating this wholesome and delicious vegetable. Let the seed be sown in a box in the middle of winter—let the plants grow in your bed-room, for it is wholesome—they will suck in the carbonic acid which is generated by the stove and your breathing, while they will drive off oxygen, the life-giving principle for man and all animals. Remove them in the spring, when danger faom frost is over, and set them at a regular distance of four feet apart.

When they are two feet high, put stakes to them, fresh cut young shoots from the woods with boughs on which you can train the branching vines of the tomato. Trim the lower branches, and keep the vines from the ground either by trellis-work or by strings interlinking, or by placing the branches on the boughs of the shoots. After the plants have been in the ground about three weeks, hoe up the ground around, destroy every weed and manure the roots. By this means you will secure a supply of rich tomatoes constantly.

HORRIBLE.—A large wine dealer in London recently, on his death-bed, going in great distress of mind, acknowledged to his friends that his agony was occasioned by the nature of the business he followed for years. He stated that it had been his habit to purchase all the sour wines he could, and making use of sugar of lead and other deleterious substances, restore the wine to a palatable taste. He said he did not doubt he had been the means of destroying hundreds of lives, as he had from time to time noticed the injurious effects of his mixtures on those who drank, where the unconscious victims of his cupidity, after waiting and declining for years, despite of the best medical advice, went to their graves, poisoned by wines he had sold them.

During the last year there was expended something near $30,000,000 for intoxicating drinks in this State; $20,000,000 of this was expended in New Orleans alone. There were made about 16,000 arrests, directly and indirectly, for drunkenness; in the city and State about 400 deaths by delirium tremens; about 75 murders, besides a host of other crimes.—Over 1,000 have been reduced to vagrancy and pauberism; the resources of the State have crippled; thousands have been kept out of employment; society at large ..as been seriously, deeply damaged in all its relations; the health and energies of some of our best citizens have been

ONE OF THE BOYS.—When Henry Ward Beecher visited this city to deliver some lectures a year or two since, he rode from Waterville on the box, when Sam, a young but favourite driver, was in charge of the team. Sam drove the team through at the rate of twelve miles an hour, anticipating by two or three hours the usual time of arriving. The proprietor of the line inquired of him the next day how he came to drive so fast. "Oh," said he, "I tell you I had one of the boys on the box, and he wanted to see' em go, and I put 'em through!"—Bangor Mercury,

IS FRIDAY UNLUCKY?—The whaleship Hillman, which arrived here on Friday, seems to disapprove the old superstition that Friday is an unlucky day, most materially. We learn from the first officer of the vessel, that the Hillman sailed from this port on Friday, that she took the first blackfish on Friday, first whale on Friday, made first port out on Friday, and finally arrived here on Friday, with 3500 barrels of whale oil, 180 barrels of sperm oil, and 61,000 lbs. of bone on board and sent home. Is Friday unlucky? The owners of the Hillman, we presume, are inclined to the opinion that it is not.—New Bedford Standard.

THE POPE'S CLEMENCY.—An English paper mentions the following as an instance of the Pope's clemency: "His Holiness the Pope would not allow the Christmas feast to pass without an act of mildness towards the political prisoners in the Apostolical Hospital of San Michele. All of them were taken on Christmas eve from their prison into larger rooms, and were allowed to converse for half an hour with their relations, under observation."

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ord nary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now trimuphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon raise, or any other of the one great humrn family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. WARD, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony.—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B GRIBBLE, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. THOMAS JAMES, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number.

TALFOURD.

Ere the war clouds, darkly closing,
Shudder to the rending flash,
Ere a world holds breath to listen
To the opening thunder-crash,
Hear, from yonder seat of judgment,
Words of peace—the true, the best;
Ah! the noble words are stilled,
And a noble heart hath rest!

Dead? He should have died hereafter,
Time had come for such a word,
When the day of fight was over,
And the triumpa bells were heard.
Statesman—Minister of Justice—
Friend of all who needed friend—
Poet,—might he not have tarried,
Seen our conflict to an end?

Had the Statesman marked his nation
Check and crush invading might;
Had the upright Judge, rejoicing,
Watched the victory of the Right;
Had the oppressed one's Friend beheld us
Raise the weak, dash down the strong,
Then, perchance, the Poet's utterance
Had awaked in glowing song.

Other was the dread decretal—
Life and death obey their Lord,
And the golden bowl is broken,
And unloosed the silver cord.
In the very hour when duty
To her dearest task was wed,
Pleading for the poor and needy,
Talfourd's gentle spirit fled.

What is left to those who mourn him,
When the last sad rite is said,
When—but not with hopeless sorrow—
Earth in earth is numbly laid.
Call his image from the marble,
Let the rich memorial tell
How he earned the love we bore him,
That we loved him long and well.

Let it speak of kindliest nature,
Of the large, yet subtle mind,
Of a heart all overflowing
With affection for his kind.
Speak of honor, trust and frankness,
Of a hand preventing need,
And of whisper from the river,
Making bounty rich indeed.

Then record how he, undaunted,
Fought through faction's wild turmoil,
To uphold the thinker's title
To the earnings of his toil.
How low cant and selfish cunning
Barred his onward course in vain,
Till he felled and chained the plunderers
Of the Labor of the Brain.

Speak of eloquence, beguiling
Foes themselves to own its sway,
Rich with many an ancient jewel,
Touched with Art's all-kindling ray.
Then inscribe his Poet-honors—
Nay—that record be his own—
Little recks true bard of memory
Passing with a sculptured stone.

Ire lucet! Battle's signal
Sullen booms o'er sea and plain;
Wake ye at the fatal summons,
Fabled Choosers of the Slain!
Who, beside our red-cross banner,
Falls, its foremost champion there—
Flinging down a life, and winning
Name that time himself shall spare!

Gallant heart! But happier, nobler,
Hold the doom 'twas his to meet,
Who, declaring Heaven's own message,
Died upon the judgment seat.
On his lip that holy lesson
All his life had taught, he cried,
"Help the humble, help the needy—
Help with Love." So Talfourd died.

The Longest Night in a Life.

BY CHARLES DICKENS.

It was one of these old fashioned winters, in the days of the Georges, when the snow lay on the ground for weeks, when railways were unknown, and the electric telegraph had not been dreamed of save by the speculative Countess of Loneon. The mails had been irregular for a month past, and the letter bags which did reach the post-office had been brought thither with difficulty.—The newspapers were devoid of all foreign intelligence, the metropolis knew nothing of the doings of the provinces, and the provinces knew little more of the affairs of the metropolis; but the columns of both were crowded with accidents from the inclemency of the weather, with heatrrending accounts of starvation and destitution, with wonderful escapes of adventurous travellers, and of still more adventurous coachmen and guards. Business was almost at a stand still, or was only carried on by fits and starts; families were made uneasy by the frequent long silence of their absent members, and the poor were suffering great misery from cold and famine.

The south road had been blocked up for nearly a month, when a partial thaw almost caused a public rejoicing; coaches began to run, letters to be despatched and delivered, and weatherbound travellers to have some hope of reaching their destination.

Among the first ladies who undertook the journey from the west of Scotland to London at this time, was a certain Miss Stirling, who had, for weeks past, desired to reach the metropolis. Her friends assured her that it was a foolhardy attempt, and told of travellers who had been twice, nay three times, snowed up on their way to town; but their advice and warnings were of no avail; Miss Stirling's business was urgent, it concerned others more than herself, and she was not one to be deterred by personal discomfort or by physical difficulties from doing what she thought was right.

So she kept to her purpose, and early in February took her seat in the mailcoach for London, being the only passenger who was booked for the whole journey.

The thaw had continued for some days; the roads, though heavy, were open; and with the aid of extra horses here and there, the first half of the journey was performed pretty easily, though tediously.

The second day was more trying than the first; the wind blew keenly, and penetrated every crevice of the coach; the partial thaw had but slightly affected the wild moorland they had to cross; thick heavy clouds were gathering round the red rayless sun; and when on reaching a little roadside inn the snow began to fall fast, both the guard and coachman urged their solitary passenger to remain there for the night, instead of tempting the discomforts and perhaps the perils of the next stage. Miss Stirling hesitated for a moment, but the little inn looked by no means a pleasant place to be snowed up in, so she resisted their entreaties, and gathering her furs more closely around her, she nestled herself into the corner of the coach.—Thus, for a time she lost all consciousness of outward things in sleep.

A sudden lurch awoke her; and she soon learned that they had stuck fast in a snowdrift, and that no efforts of the tired horses could extricate the coach from its unpleasant predicament. The guard, mounting one of the leaders, set off in search of assistance, while the coachman comforted Miss Stirling by telling her, that as nearly as they could calculate, they were only a mile or two from "the squire's," and that if the guard could find his way to the squire's, the squire was certain to come to their rescue with his sledge. It was not the first time that the squire had got the mail-bags out of a snow wreath by that means.

The coachman's expectations were fulfilled. Within an hour, the distant tinkling of sledge bells was heard, and lights were seen gleaming afar; they rapidly advanced nearer and nearer; and soon a hearty voice was heard, hailing them. A party of men; with lanterns and shovels, came to their assistance, a strong arm lifted Miss Stirling from the coach, and supported her trembling steps to a sledge close at hand; and almost before she knew where she was, she found herself in a large hall, brilliantly lighted by a blazing wood fire. Numbers of rosy glowing childish faces were gathered round her, numbers of bright eager eyes were gazing curiously upon her, kindly hands were busied in removing her wraps, and pleasant voices welcomed her and congratulated her upon her escape.

"Ay, ay, Mary," said her host, addressing his wife, "I told you that the sleigh would have plenty of work this winter, and you see that I was right."

"As you are always are, uncle," a merry voice exclaimed. "We all say at Hawtree, that Uncle Atherton never can be wrong."

"Atherton! Hawtree!" repeated Miss Stirling, in some amazement, "and uttered in that familiar voice! Ellen, Ellen Middleis it possible that you are here?"

A joyful exclamation and a rush into her arms were the young girl's ready reply to this question as she cried, "Uncle Atherton, Aunt Mary, don't you know your old friend Miss Stirling?"

Mrs. Atherton fixed her soft blue eyes on the stranger, in whom she could at first scarcely recognize the bright haired girl whom she had not seen for eighteen or twenty years; but by and by she satisfied herself, that, though changed, she was Ellen Stirling still; with that same sunny smile and the same laughing eyes that had made every one love her in their school days.—Heartfelt indeed were the greetings which followed, and cordial the welcome Mrs. Atherton gave her old friend, as she congratulated herself on having dear Ellen under her own roof; more especially as she owed this good fortune to Mr. Atherton's exertions in rescuing her.

"It is the merest chance, too, that he is at home at present," she said; "he ought to have been in Scotland, but the state of the roads in this bleak country has kept him prisoner here for weeks."

"And others as well," Ellen Middleton added: "but both children and grown up people are only too thankful to have so good an excuse for staying longer at Belfield."—And then laughing, she asked Aunt Mary how she meant to dispose of Miss Stirling for the night, for the house was as full already as it could hold.

"Oh," said her Aunt, "we shall manage very well. Belfield is very elastic."

She smiled as she spoke, but it struck Miss Stirling that the question was, nevertheless, a puzzling one, so she took the first opportunity of entreating her to take no trouble on her account; a chair by the fire was really all the accommodation she cared for, as she wished to be in readiness to pursue her journey as soon as the coach could proceed.

"We shall be able to do better for you than that, Ellen," Mrs, Atherton answered cheerfully. "I cannot, it is true, promise you a 'state-room,' for every bed in the house is full, and I know you will not allow any one to be moved for your convenience; but I have one chamber still at your service, which, except in one respect, is comfortable enough."

"Haunted of course, ?" said Miss Stirling, gaily.

"Oh, no, no, it is not that; I had fitted it up for my brother William, when he used to be here more frequently than of late, and it is often occupied by gentlemen when the house is full."

"Oh! is that be all, I am quite willing to become its first lady tenant," said Miss Stirling, heartily. So the matter was settled, and orders given to prepare the Pavilion for the unexpected guest.

The evening passed pleasantly; music, dancing and ghost stories made the hours fly fast. It was long past ten—the usual hour of retiring at Belfield—when Miss Stirling, under her hostess' guidance took possession of her outside chamber. It really was a pleasant, cheerful little apartment. The crimson hangings of the bed and window looked warm and comfortable in the flashing firelight; and when the candles on the mantlepiece were lighted, and the two easy chairs drawn close to the hearth, the long parted friends found it impossible to resist the temptation of sitting down to have, what in old days they used to call a "two-handed chat." There was much to tell of what had befallen both, of chequered scenes of joy and sorrow, deeply interesting to those whose youth had been passed together; there were mutual recollections of school-days to be talked over; mutual friends and future plans to be discussed; and midnight rang out from the table-clock before Mrs Atherton said good night. She had already crossed the threshold to go, when she turned back to say, "I forgot to tell you, Ellen, that the inside of this door is not very secure, and that the key only turns on the outside. Are you inclined to trust to the bar alone, or will you, as William used to do, have the door locked outside, and let the servant bring the key in the morning. William used to say that he found it rather an advantage to do so, as the unlocking of the door was sure to wake him."

Miss Stirling laughingly allowed, that though, generally, she could not quite think it an advantage to be locked into her room, still she had no particular objection to it on this particular occasion, as she wished to rise in seasonable time.

"Very well; then you had better not fasten the bar at all, and I will send my maid with the key at eight precisely. Good night."

"Good night."

They parted; the door was locked outside; the key taken out; and Miss Stirling standing by the window, watching her friend cross the narrow black path, which had been swept clear of snow to make a dry passage from the house to the pavilion. A ruddy light streamed from the hall door as it opened to admit its mistress, and gave a cheerful friendly aspect to the scene; but, when the door closed and shut out the warm comfortable light, the darkened porch, the pale moonlight simmering on the shrouded trees, and the stars twinkling in the frosty sky, had such an aspect of solitude as to cast over her a kind of chill that made her half repent having consented to quit the house at all, and let herself be locked in this lonely place.

Yet what had she to fear? No harm could happen to her from within the chamber; the door was safely locked outside, and strong iron stanc..eons guarded the window; there could be no possible danger. So drawing her chair once more to the fire and stirring it into a brighter blaze, she took up a little Bible which lay on the dressing table and read some portions of the New Testament.

When she laid down the book she took out the comb that fastened up her long dark silken tresses—in which, despite her five-and-thirty years, not a silver thread was visible—and, as she arranged them for the night, her thoughts strayed back to the old world memories, which her meeting with Mary Atherton had revived. The sound of the clock striking two was the first thing that recalled her to her present life. By this time the candles were burned down almost to the socket, and the fire was dying fast. As she turned to fling a fresh log of wood into the grate, her eyes fell upon her dressing glass and in its reflection she saw, or least fancied she saw, the bed curtains move.

She stood a moment gazing at the mirror expecting a repetition of the movement; but all was still, and she blamed herself for allowing nervous fears to overcome her. Still it was an exertion, even of her brave spirit, to approach the bed and withdraw the curtains. She was rewarded by finding nothing save the bed-clothes folded neatly down, as if inviting her to press the snow white sheets, and a luxurious pile of pillows, that looked most tempting. She could not resist the mute invitation to rest her wearied limbs.—Allowing herself no time for further doubts or fears, she placed her candle on the mantle piece, and stepped into bed.

She was very tired, her eyes ached with weariness, but sleep seemed to fly from her; old recollections thronged on her memory; thoughts connected with the busiuess she had still to get through, haunted her; and difficulties that had not occurred to her till now, arose up before her. She was restless and feaverish; and the vexation of feeling so, made her more wakeful. Perhaps if she were to close the curtains between her and the fire she might be better able to sleep—the flickering light disturbed her, and the moonbeams stealing between the window curtains, cast ghostly shadows on the wall. So she carefully shut out the lights on that side, and turned again to sleep. Whether she had or had not quite lost consciousness she could not well remember, but she was soon thoroughly aroused by feeling the bed heave under her. She started up, and awaited with a beating heart a repetition of the movement, but it did not come. It must have been a return of the nervous fancies which had twice assailed her that night. Laying her head once more on the pillow, she determined to control her groundless terrors.

Again she started! This time there could be no doubt; the bed had heaved more than once, accompanied by a strange gurgling sound, as if of a creature in pain. Leaning on her elbow, she listened with that intensity of fear, which desires, almost as much as it dreads, a recurrence of the sound that caused it. It came again, followed by a loud rustling noise, as if some heavy body were dragged from under the bed in the direction of the fire. What could it be?—She longed to call out for help, but her tongue clave to the roof of her mouth, and the pulses of her temples throbbed until she felt as if their painful beating sounded in the silence of the night like the loud tick of a clock.

The unseen thing dragged itself along until it reached the hearthrug where it flung itself down with violence. As it did so, she heard the clank of a chain. Her breath came less painfully, as she heard it, for it occurred to her that the creature might be nothing worse than the house dog, who having broken his chain, had sought shelter beneath the bed in the warm room. Even this notion was disagreeable enough, but it was as nothing to the vague terror which had hitherto oppressed her. She persuaded herself that if she lay quite quiet, no harm would happen to her, and the night might soon pass over. Thus reasoning she laid herself down again.

By-and-by the creature began to snore, and it struck her feverish fancy that the snoring was not like that of a dog. After a little time, she raised herself gently, and with trembling hands, drew back an inch or two of the curtain and peered out, thinking that any certainty was better than such terrible suspense. She looked toward the fireplace, and there, sure enough, the huge creature lay—a brown hairy mass, but of what shape it was impossible to divine, so fitful was the light, and so strangely was it coiled up on the hearth rug. By-and-by, it began to stretch itself out, to open, its eyes which shone in the flickering ray of the fire, and to raise its paws above its hairy head.

Good God! those are not paws! They are human hands; and dangling from his wrists hang fragments of broken chains!

A chill of terror froze Ellen Stirling's veins, as a flash of expiring fire showed her this clearly—far too clearly—and the conviction seized upon her mind, that she was shut up with an escaped convict. An inward invocation to Heaven for aid rose from her heart, as with the whole force of her intellect she endeavoured to survey the danger of her situation, and to think of the most persuasive words she could use to the man into whose power she had so strangely fallen. For the present, however, she must be still, very still; she must make no movement to betray herself; and perhaps he might overlook her presence until daylight came, and with it possible help. The night must be far spent, she must wait and hope.

She had not to wait long. The creature moved again—stood upright—staggered toward the bed. For one moment—one dreadful moment—she saw his face, his pale pinched features, his flashing eye, his black bristling hair; but, thank God! he did not see her. She shrunk behind the curtains; he advanced to the bed, slowly hesitatingly, and the clanking sound of the broken chains fell menacingly on her ear. He laid his hands upon the curtains; and, for a few moments fumbled to find the opening.—These moments were all in all to Ellen Stirling. Despair sharpened her senses; she fonnd that the other side of the bed was not so close against the wall but that she could pass between. Into the space between, she contrived to slip noiselessly.

She had hardly accomplished the difficult feat, and sheltered herself behind the curtains, when the creature flung itself on the bed, and drawing the bed clothes round him uttered a sound more like the whinnying of a horse than the laugh of a human being.

For some little time Miss Stirling stood in her narrow hiding place, trembling with cold and terror, fearful lest some unguarded movement should betray her, and bring upon her a fate she dared not contemplate. She lifted up her heart in prayer for courage; and when her composure had in some degree returned, it occurred to her that if she could but reach the window, she might from that position, possibly attract the attention of some passer-by, and be released from her terrible durance.

Cautiously she attempted her perilous experiment; her bare feet moved noiselessly across the floor, and a friendly ray of moonlight guided her safely toward the window. As she put out her hand towards the curtains her heart gave a fresh bound of terror, for it came in contact with something soft and warm. At length, however, she remembered that she had flung down her fur cloak in that spot, and it was a mercy to come upon it now, when she was chilled to the bone.—She wrapped it around her and reached the window without further adventure, or any alarm from the occupant of the bed; whose heavy regular breathing gave assurance that he was now sound asleep. This was a comfort, and she greatly needed it. The looking out of the window was anything but inspiriting. The stars still shone peacefully on the sleeping earth; the moon still showed her pallid visage; not a sight or sound presaged dawn; and after long listening in vain for any signs of life in the outer world, she heard the table clock strike four.

Only four!

She felt as if it were impossible to survive even another hour of terror such as she had just passed through. Was there no hope? None.

She tried to support herself against the window frame, but her first touch caused it to shake and creak in a manner that seemed to her startingly loud; she fancied that the creature moved uneasily on his bed at the sound. Drops of agony fell from her brow, as minute after minute wore heavily on; ever and anon, a rustle of the bed-clothes, or a clank of the manacled hands, sent a renewed chill to her heart.

The clock struck five.

Still all without was silent. Suddenly, a man's whistle was heard in the court, and the driver of the mail-coach, lantern in hand, crossed the yard toward the pavilion. Would to God she could call to him, or in any way arrest his attention! but she dared not make the slightest sound. He looked up at the window against which he almost brushed in passing; and the light he held, flashed on Miss Stirling's crouching figure. He paused, looked again, and seemed about to speak, when she hastily made signs that he should be silent, but seek assistance at the house. He gave her a glance of intelligence, and hastened away.

How long his absence seemed! could he have understood her? The occupant of the bed was growing every instant more and more restless; he was rising from the bed—he was groping round the room. They would come too late, too late!

But no! steps in the courtyard—the key turning in the lock—the door opens—then with a yell that rang in Ellen Stirling's ear until her dying day, the creature rushed to her hiding place, dashed the slight window frame to pieces, and finding bimself baulked of his purposed escape by the strength of the iron bars outside, turned like a wild beast on his pursuers. She was the first on whom his glance fell. He clasped her throat: his face was close to hers; his glittering eyes were glaring at her in frenzy—when a blow from behind felled him.

She awoke from a long swoon to find herself safe in Mrs. Atherton's dressing room, and to hear that no one was hurt but the poor maniac, and that he was again safe in the hands of his keepers, from whom he had escaped a few hours before.

"A few hours! A life-time, Mary! But Heaven be thanked, it is past like a wild dream!"

It was not all past. One enduring effect remained, ever after, to imprint on Ellen Stirling's memory, and on the memories of all who knew her, the events of that long night. Such had been her suffering, anxiety, and terror, that, in those few hours, her hair had turned as white as snow.—Household Words.

PHANTOMS.—A Parody.

BY RALPH W. HARPER.

All houses wherein rats and mice abide,
Are haunted houses. Through the open doors
The cunning thieves upon their errands glide,
Making a hasty scratching on the floors.

We meet them in the chamber, on the stair,
Along the passages they come and go;
Their twinkling eyes are peering everywhere,
As hurriedly they scamper to and fro.

The house has far more inmates than the hosts
Invited; cellar, pantry, kitchen, hall,
Are thronged with nibblers, which the scent of repasts
Has tempted from their strongholds in the wall.

The stranger at my fireside may not see
The forms I see—and, if strange sounds he hear,
Ascribes them to the wind; but unto me
The real cause is visible and clear.

The garret's dusty, dim circumference
Is where they most do congregate—for there
Rubbish in piles, and cobwebs dark and dense,
Shut out intruders and the daylight's glare.

Their little lives are kept in equipoise
By opposite incentives and desires—
The struggle of the daring that destroys,
And the instinctive cowardice that fears.

The perturbations, the perpetual jar,
That greet me as the evening hours go by,
Come from the attic, where their gambols are Played without fear, and undisturbedly.

And as the moon, from some dark, cavernous
cloud,
Flings down to us a floating bridge of light,
Across whose trembling beams our fancies crowd
Into the vague uncertainty and night—

So from the attic story, there descends
A flight of stairs, connecting it with this,
And racing up and down, my long-tailed friends
Affright the night with antics numberless.

Portland Eclectic.

ARRIVAL OF THE SALT-WATER FUGITIVE. By the following, which we find in the Savannah Journal of the 23d inst., it will be seen that Edward Davis, the fugitive, has arrived at his "Botany Bay." The inference that the family were slaves, and that the "abolition" lawyer (who by the way, was a Maryland slave holder) would not "allow" them to be introduced as witnesses, is all a draft on the imagination of our Georgia cotemporary.

"The fugitive came from Philadelphia in the Keystone State, which arrived this morning, and was taken back to Macon by this morning's train of cars. In conversation with the fugitive, Capt. Hardie learned from him during the passage that he was in the Pennsylvania Penitentiary three years for burglary, came out, and being ashamed—as he reported—to stay at home, went to Maryland, where, for violation of the free negro law of that State, he was afterwards sold to a trader, who sent him to Georgia. It is presumed, however, that he, together, with his mother and sister, now in Philadelphia, are all runaways. The abolition lawyer who defended him at New Castle refused to have them appear as evidence in his favour, which considerably strengthens this presumption. The affair, as it has been conducted by Capt. Hardie, will convince Georgians that this company and its agents are all right on the subject of our peculiar institutions."—Phil. Register.

PROFITABLE FARMING.—A correspondent of the St. Louis Republican, writing a running sketch of his travels in Illinois, gives the following description of an Illinois farm:—

"The cars are now passing an immense corn-field, of fifteen hundred acres, within one enclosure. Think of that! It is owned by Mr. John Alexander, of Sangamon county who has 3000 acres of prairie here in one body, 1800 of which is in corn. His business is stock-feeding. To raise his crops and feed them out, he employs about thirty men and thirty head of horses per year. His sales of stock, the past year, amounted to over $30,000. Eight years since he had about $500 in his pocket, and bought this land. Now it is paid for, and he is worth his thousands. Here is a specimen of Illionis farming."

Constitution of the National Council.

For the purpose of improving the character, developing the intelligence, maintaining the rights and organizing a Union of the Colored People of the Free States, the National Convention does hereby ordain and institute the

"NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE COLORED PEOPLE."

Art. 1. This Council shall consist of two members from each State, represented in this Convention, to be elected by this Convention, and two other members from each State to be elected as follows: On the 15th day of November next, and biennially thereafter, there shall be held in each State, a Poll, at which each colored inhabitant may vote who pays ten cents as poll-tax, and each State shall elect, at such election, such delegates to State Legislatures, twenty in number from each State, at large. The election to be held at such places and under such conditions as the public meetings in such localities may determine. The members of the National Council in each State, shall receive, canvass, and declare the result of such vote. The State Council, those elected, shall meet on the first Monday in January, 1854, and elect additional members to the National Council, in proportion of one to five thousand of the colored population of such State; and the members of council thus elected, to take office on the sixth day of July next, and all to hold office during two years from that date; at the end of which time another general election by State council shall take place of members to constitute their successors in office, in the same numbers as above. The State council of each State shall have full power over the internal concerns of said State.

Art. 3. The committee on Manual Labor School shall procure funds and organize said School in accordance with the plans adopted by this National Convention, with such modifications as experience or necessity may dictate to them. The committee shall immediately incorporate itself as an academy under "The General Committee of the State of——," and shall constitute the Board of Trustees of the Manual Labor School, with full power to select a location in the State designated by the National council, to erect buildings, appoint or dismiss instructers in the literary or mechanical branches. There shall be a farm attached to the School.

Art. 4. The committee on Protective Unions shall institute a Protective Union for the purchase and sale of articles of domestic consumption, and shall unite and aid in the formation of branches auxiliary to their own.

Art. 5. The committee on Business Relations, shall establish an office, in which they shall keep a registry of colored mechanics, artizans and business men throughout the Union. They shall keep a registry of all persons willing to employ colored men in business, to teach colored boys mechanical trades, liberal and scientific professions, and farming; and also, a registry of colored men and boys, seeking employment or instruction. They shall also report upon any avenues of business or trade which they deem inviting to colored capital, skill, or labor. Their reports and advertisements to be in papers of the widest circulation. They shall receive for sale or exhibition, products of the skill and labor of colored people.

Art. 6. The committee on Publication shall collect all facts, statistics and statements, all laws and historical records and biographies of the colored people, and all books by colored authors. They shall have for the safe keeping of these documents, a Library, with a Reading Room and Museum. The committee shall also publish replies to any assaults, worthy of note, made upon the character or condition of the colored People.

Art. 7. Each committee shall have absolute control over its special department; shall make its own by-laws, and in case of any vacancy occurring, shall fill up the same forthwith subject to the confirmation of the council. Each committee shall meet at least once a month or as often as possible; shall keep a minute of all its proceedings, executive and financial, and shall submit a full statement of the same, with the accounts audited, at every regular meeting of the National council.

Art. 8. The National council shall meet at least once in six months, to receive the reports of the committees, and to consider any new plan for the general good, for which it shall have power, at its option, to appoint a new committee, and shall be empowered to receive and appropriate donations for the carrying out of the objects of the same. At all such meetings, eleven members shall constitute a quorum. In case any committee neglect or refuse to send in its report, according to article 8th, then the council shall have power to enter the bureau, examine the books and papers of such committee; and in case the committee shall persist in its refusal or neglect, then the council shall declare their offices vacant, and appoint others in their stead.

Art. 9. In all cases of the meetings of the National Council, or the committees, the traveling expenses (if any) of the members shall be paid out of the respective funds.

Art. 10. The council shall immediately establish a bureau in the place of its meeting; and the same rooms shall, as far as possible, be used by the several committees for their various purposes. The council shall have a clerk, at a moderate salary, who will keep a record of their transactions, and prepare a condensed report of the committees for publication; and, also, a registry of the friends of the cause.

Art. 11. The expenses of the council shall be defrayed by the fees of membership of subsocieties or councils, to be organised throughout the States. The membership fee shall be one cent per week,

Art. 12. A member of the council shall be member of only one of the committees thereof.

Art. 13. All officers holding funds, shall give security in double the amount likely to be in their hands. This security to be given to the three first officers of the council.

Art. 14. The council shall have power to make such By-Laws as are necessary for their proper government.

[The following resolutions having direct bearing upon the plan of organization were adopted by the Convention and are therefore appended to the Council's Constitution.]

Resolved That the Council shall be delegated to select its various Committees.

Resolved, That the Council shall have power to offer a premium for prize essays on different subjects agreed on by Council.

Resolved, That the said Council shall hear and grant petitions and be governed by the rules of legislative bodies, and their decisions shall be final.

Resolved, That any State applying for admission into this Union, shall be admitted on such terms, as may hereafter be agreed upon.

Resolved, That in establishing a National Council for our own special improvement, and a Manual Labor School for the education of our children in science, literature and mechanical arts, this Convention do this, not to build ourselves up as a distinct and separate class in this country, but as a means to a great end, viz: the equality in political rights, and in civil and social privileges with the rest of the American people.

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the colored people, in offering a plan for the organization of the school, beg leave to state,

1st. That the location of the school, which is to be within one hundred miles of the town of Erie, Pennsylvania, will be selected as soon as three thousand dollars are paid in; the school building and work-shop will be commenced as soon as ten thousand dollars are paid in; and the school commenced as soon as fifteen thousand dollars are paid in; and that in no case will a contract be made beyond the sum of money actually paid in. The site of the school will be at least two hundred acres of land, one hundred and fifty of which shall for ever be used as a farm for agricultural instruction.

2nd. In accordance with a vote of the Rochester Convention, the teachers are to be selected for, and pupils admitted into, the school without reference to sex or complexion.

3d. Special provision will be made to make this, from the beginning, an industrial school for females as well as males; a prominent principle of conduct will be to aid in providing for the female sex, methods and means of enjoying an independent and honorable livlihood.

Six of these trustees shall be the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the People of Color; and nine of the trustees shall be elected by the Stockholders when three thousand dollars shall have been paid in by them, (the stockholders) and annually thereafter. Each share of stock shall count as one vote at all such elections. And stockholders may vote by proxy, on affidavit made and acknowledged before a Commissioner of Deeds.

THE GOSPEL TRIBUNE.

PROSPECTUS.

The first number of a monthly paper, to be known as above indicated, is proposed to be published in Toronto within a few months, and not later than the First day of July, 1854. The work in size and appearance, to be at least equal to the Missionary Record or Christian Observer; and as much superior to either in style and execution as the subscription list will warrant.

DISTINCTIVE OBJECT:

To enlarge the limits of Communion and Church-Membership, among Christians, to the greatest possible extent; and to circumscribe those bounds to the exclusion, if possible, of all other characters, without otherwise disturbing the Membership of existing Churches; till acknowledged Christian Character shall constitute the only passport, at any time, and the perfect passport at all times, to every Communion and Church worthy of the Christian name; "that the world may believe" in Christ, even as he prayed.

GENERAL OBJECTS:

The promotion of Religious, Moral, Intellectual and Social Improvement, under the guidance of Divine Revelation, submitting every move and measure to the test of Gospel Principles.

SUPPORTERS:

The distinctive and general objects of the work are such, as to claim for it the patronage of all classes of men, excepting those wedded to other pre-requisites of Communion and Church-membership, than acknowledged Christian Character; and here it is recorded with great pleasure that the encouragements tendered, thus far, are in strict accordance with the above general claims

ORIGIN AND PROGRESS:

This movement has long been contemplated. For twenty years the subscriber has made the distinctive object of the GOSPEL TRIBUNE his special study: examining carefully and personally the denominational aspect of Religious Societies,—their reciprocal bearings, their mutual relations, and the nature of their combined influence on the evangelization of the world. Lately, his position as Publisher of the SCRIPTURE MANUAL, has probably afforded him the best possible facilities for personally testing the strength his positions, and for the attainment of certain important information, but little of which he had previously been able to obtain. All may rest assured, however, that no undue advantage will ever be taken of the frank nessand candor with which Christians of every name, as well as skeptics of every class, have freely expressed their convictions in the presence of the Travelling Colporteur; the capacity in which the Publisher is still extending his observations through Canada and the neighboring States.

CO-LABORERS:

Of distinguished worth and of well-known literary ability, are already secured in the several sections of Canada, and in the States of the American Union; and arrangements are now in progress, to obtain from living responsible writers in Britain, important assistance in the developement of the TRIBUNE'S Mission.

TERMS AND NOTICES:

The Terms are One Dollar per Annum in advance,—otherwise Two Dollars; it being found that one half of the Subscriptions, not paid in advance, are worse than lost. Editors—friendly—will render assistance by noticing this Prospectus. All parties willing to aid, may at once commence soliciting the names of Subscribers. Two books—the Scripture and Laconic Manuals—fully gilt, and the Paper one year, will be forwarded to the person who first sends the names of ten Subscribers; and one of either of the books, in substantial leather binding, or the Paper one year, to every one who sends ten names. Subscriptions and all other communications for the Paper to be sent, post-paid, marked Money, (if inclosed) and addressed, ROBERT DICK, Box 411, TORONTO.

Sermons and Lectures, promotive of the TRIBUNE'S object, will be delivered by the Publisher throughout the Province as frequently as shall be found compatible with his other duties.

(Signed) ROBERT DICK.

Toronto, March 25th, 1854.

CALL FOR A NATIONAL EMIGRATION CONVENTION OF COLORED MEN,

To be held in Cleveland, Ohio, on the 24th, 25th and 26th of August, 1854.

MEN AND BRETHERN:—The time has now fully come, when we, as an oppressed people, should do something effectively, and use those means adequate to the attainment of the great and long desired end—to do something to meet the actual demands of the present and prospective necessities of the rising generation of our people in this country. To do this, we must occupy a position of entire equality, of unrestricted rights, composing in fact, an acknowledged necessary part of the ruling element of society in which we live. The policy necessary to the preservation of this element must be in our favor, if ever we expect the enjoyment, freedom, sovereignty, and equality of rights anywhere. For this purpose, and to this end, then, all colored men in favor of emigration out of the United States, and opposed to the American Colonization scheme of leaving the Western Hemisphere, are requested to meet in CLEVELAND, OHIO, on TUESDAY, the 24th DAY of AUGUST, 1854, in a great NATIONAL CONVENTION, then and there, to consider and decide upon the great and important subject of emigration from the United States.

No person will be admitted to a seat in the Convention, who would introduce the subject of emigration to the Eastern Hemisphere—either to Asia, Africa, or Europe—as our object and determination is to consider our claims to the West Indies, Central and South America, and the Canadas. This restriction has no reference to personal preference, or individual enterprise; but to the great question of national claims to come before the Convention.

All persons coming to the Convention must bring credentials properly authenticated, or bring verbal assurance to the Committee on Credentials—appointed for the purpose—of their fidelity to the measures and objects set forth in this Call as the Convention is specifically by and for the friends of emigration, and NONE OTHERS—and no opposition to them will be entertained.

The question is not whether our condition can be bettered by emigration, but whether it can be made worse. If not, then, there is no part of the wide-spread universe, where our social and political condition are not better than here in our native country, and nowhere in the world as here, proscribed on account of color.

We are friends, too, and ever will stand shoulder to shoulder by our brethren, and all our friends in all good measures adopted by them for the bettering of our condition in this country, and surrender no rights but with our last breath; but as the subject of emigration is of vital importance, and has ever been shunned by all delegated assemblages of our people as heretofore met, we cannot longer delay, and will not be further baffled; and deny the right of our most sanguine friend or dearest brother, to prevent an intelligent enquiry to, and the carrying out of these measures, when this can be done, to our entire advantage, as we propose to show in Convention—as the West Indies, Central and South America—the majority of which are peopled by our brethren, or those identified with us in race, and what is more, destiny, on this continent—all stand with open arms and yearning hearts, importuning us in the name of suffering humanity to come—to make common cause, and share one common fate on the continent.

The Convention will meet without fail, at the time fixed for assembling, as none but those favorable to emigration are admissable; therefore no other gathering may prevent it. The number of delegates will not be restricted—except in the town where the Convention may be held—and there the number will be decided by the Convention when assembled, that they may not too far exceed the other delegations.

The time and place fixed for holding the Convention are ample; affording sufficient time, and a leisure season generally—and as Cleveland is now the centre of all directions—a good and favorable opportunity to all who desire to attend.—Therefore, it may reasonably be the greatest gathering of the colored people ever before assembled in a Convention in the United States.

Colonizationists are advised, that no favors will be shown to them or their expatriating scheme, as we have no sympathy with the enemies of our race.

All colored men, East, West, North and South, favorable to the measures set forth in this Call will send in their names (post-paid) to M. R Delany, or Rev. Wm. Webb, Pittsburgh, Pa., that there may be arranged and attached to the Call, five names from each State.

We must make an issue, create an event, and establish a position for ourselves. It is glorious to think of, but far more glorious to carry out.

The Southern Convention.

The Southern Convention, assembled at Charleston, has at length adjourned. We had a reporter present during its sessions, who dilligently forwarded an account of everything said and done, including the debate with regard to his own exclusion as the reporter of the Tribune, but we have not found substance enough in the proceedings to make them worth inserting in our columns, except as they were indicated by the brief telegraphic dispatches we have published from day to day. But now that the comedy is over, it really seems no more than proper that we should pay a little attention to a body which honored us so much, constituted as it was of so large an array of gentlemen of distinguished ability and eminent worth, and adorned as it was by all the genial hospitality for which Charleston is so justly famous. In so doing, we desire to speak with the gravity and punctilio befitting the solemn assemblage of the chosen representatives of a dozen sovereign States. But this, we are sorry to say, is no trifling task. Really it is hard to discuss with seriousness the proceedings of a body of speech-makers which gave so little evidence of seriousness in itself, as our readers may judge by recalling the propositions harangued upon. Of these the following were among the more important: 1. To exclude the reporter of the Tribune, because we speak plainly of what all northern men think in their hearts, and endeavor to teach the South its duty and interest, not only as touching those frequent epileptic fits of aimless and useless Conventions, but also as regards the great curse of Slavery; 2. To build a railroad to the Pacific by special southern combination—as though the railroad could be helped forward an hour by all the palaver of the score of declaimers of the Convention; 3. To trade directly from the South with Europe—as though such direct trade were not wanting simply because capital is wanting, and capital and slavery cannot go together in sufficient quantities to build up commercial cities—New Orleans forming no exception, being simply an outlet for the great free western valley; 4. To print their own books and make their own tools and machinery—when Arts cannot flourish with Slavery, and inventive genius sickens and dies amid Chivalry,—so that whether it be a Fitch, Evans, Fulton, Whitney, or Blanchard, the inventor must come from the North—the South meanwhile having the monopoly of 'great men,'—that is, politicians with exorbitant influence, growing out of the existence of an ignorant white population; 5. To 'open up' a trade with the region of the Amazon, a river which flows parallel with the Equator, and whose banks are nearer like Dante's Inferno than anything else we know of, except that they are less populous—hot, pestilential, serpent-haunted, insect-infested, death-dealing, nasty, and ridiculous to think of outside of the tropical poetry of a southern Convention; 6. To establish a Commission of Three—composed of General Scott, 'who has more brains than he gets credit for,' and is 'a tall man, taller than the Empetor Nicholas,'—of Millard Fillmore, and Judge Butler, of S. C., to proceed forthwith to Europe to act as mediators between Russia and her opponents, England and France; 7. To hear a scientific exposition from Parson Brownlow of Tennessee,—informing the world why 'young gentlemen chew cloves and cinnamon'—which is to disguise the smell of liquor when they sit next their sweethearts in pews,—and also, a story from the same politico-economical orthodox expounder of a young lady who would not put her arm through a jug-handle, as she called a certain Young America who was intemperate; 8, 9 and 10, &c. To cause water to run up hill,—the Gulf stream to go the back track, the laws of gravitation to cease, the canons of political economy to come to an end, the virtue of the Declaration of Independence to vanish, the value of Industry and the respectability of Labor to be forgotten.

Alas, for human infatuation! We can smile at the absurdities of other countries and other ages, and moralize over political or religious delusions—but here is a Convention which resolves that the South must preponderate! That she must have capital! Must have industry! Must trade directly with Europe! Must build up cities as the North has!. Must trade with distant lands, and especially with Amazonia—that perennial Jack-and-his-bean of the ineffable Lieutenant Maury! Must have a railroad to the Pacific—when her present curse is the want of a concentrated and industrious population! Must annex Cuba—steal it, according to Parson Brownlow!

Well the Convention has met and has parted; has twaddled about capital and trade and progress; and has sworn a new fealty to Slavery, and poverty, and weakness and deterioration. So they will go on. They will meet, and meet, and meet—and Norfolk and Charleston will remain villages; and the 40,000 people just shown by the Virginia journals to exist in that State ignorant of reading and writing will increase; and the people of small means, who must live by labor, will continue to desert the soil of Slavery; and the 400,000 immigrants will pour into the North-west and avoid the South more and more; and the trade of the North-east and West will augment along with their arts and manufactures, and polish and civilization.

Such is the sad and simple truth of this matter, and we utter it accordingly. We are sorry to have so disagreeable a duty to discharge, but it cannot be helped. It is plain what ails the South, but her politicians and journalists and conventioneers refuse to see it. She languishes for want of varied industry—mechanics alongside of farmers, artists, inventors, savans—but such men will not seek a slave-doomed country when liberty beckons them or holds them to free soil. And up to the time that the South seriously prepares to abolish Slavery, she will remain inferior to the North in self-supporting power and all the elements of the progress she would emulate without adopting its conditions. The great secret of the astonishing growth and the immense resources of the free States is nothing else than liberty and democracy. Where they exist, fussy Conventions to encourage and attract trade by long-winded and shallow speeches are not needed; where they do not, a whole nation of orators might spout forever without the slightest effect.

Washington "Liberty"!

The following extracts from letters penned at Washington, give a pitiful picture of the state of representative morality in the capital city of the "model (!) republic." Annexation, indeed! Respectable, liberty-loving, honorable Canadians would doubtless feel themselves highly honored, and their reputation mightily advanced, by becoming identified with, and represented (!!) by such a miserable nest of knaves, sycophants and Maworms, as the Congress of the United States is here shown to be. The idea is only too ridiculous, and is scouted by Canadians of every political caste and complexion, with the contempt that it merits.

The first thing to be remarked and made a note of is, that Washington is a Southern city. The atmosphere is heavy and oppressive with the miasma of the peculiar institution. Free men from the free North, I should think would find it difficult to breathe there. For myself, in some conversation with my fellow boarders, in what I was told was called the "best private boarding-house in Washington," taking leave to differ from from some of the every-day pro-slavery views and statements, and to express with entire freedom opposite opinions, I was shown the cold shoulder from that time forth, and almost the cut direct; and one easy going old gentleman, getting a little warmed, after denying that slavery was ever rested upon the Bible, and saying that they rested it upon their own right—which I suppose here means their might—was good enough to say that they wouldn't "have it discussed;" thus illustrating beautifully the status of the South, and her position as to free discussion relative to the North.

It is also to be jotted down, that what adds very much to the weight of the atmosphere and its oppressiveness, causing almost asphyxia, is the vicinity, and the exhalations from the President's house. Every man here either has an office or wants one, and many of those who are made partially happy by possession, want one which they may hold by a more secure tenure than the pleasure of their constituents. Hence, any one who has any faculty may easily "guess" what kind of independence there is left.

These things being so, and besides any one who witnessed the alacrity with which it was voted on Monday to take up the Nebraska matter, to the prejudice and postponement of all other business, con han have no doubt, however much he may dislike to come to that conclusion, as to the ultimate success of that iniquity.

Washington, April 28, 1854.

Yesterday, Mr. Smith of Virginia, made a most unwarrantable attack upon the character of John Quincy Adams, in the House of Representatives. He also insulted Mr. Giddings, lied about him, twitted him of having been censured by a previous Congress, for advancing outrageous anti-slavery doctrines, which he had never since dared to avow on that floor. This afternoon, Mr. Giddings got the floor to reply to the attack of Mr. Smith, upon John Quincy Adams and himself. He proved that the Virginian blackguard had deliberately uttered falsehoods in reference to himself. Smith is one of Pierce's whippers-in, and was one of the memorable set of scoundrals who voted to censure Mr. Giddings—but did not return to Congress for ten years. Mr. G. reminded the house of this, and gave a true history of the vote of censure, and his re-election to Congress. When he sat down, Smith arose, and made the most insolent, the lowest, meanest, most outrageous speech we ever listened to in our life. He abused the venerable Giddings in language too venemous even to be used in a pot-house; begged the pardon of the House for calling Mr. G. a gentleman; insulted the whole North; lauded slavery to the skies, and himself and his Southern confederates far above the skies. We wished that the freeman of the North could have listened to his insolent remarks. Our blood ran hotly along our veins to hear such a man in the National Congress scoff at Liberty, lie about the apostles of Freedom, and talk about teaching the North decency. And there a little away sat Isaac Toucey, the cold-blooded Connecticut Senator, in clique with such men, conniving at our disgrace, and deliberately licking the dirty feet of the Virginian despot! For our part, we cannot see how it is possible for the North and South to go on together much longer, if the representatives of the latter are determined upon every opportunity to abuse those men in the country, who yet believe in Human Rights. Slavery and Liberty are not compatible upon the same soil—either Southern slaveholders must desist from Slavery-propagandism, or Disunion must and had better come.

The universal corruption which prevails here is astonishing. Said one honest member of Congress to us yesterday:

'If the people knew the rottenness of this Congress—the rascality of nine-tenths of the public officers here—they would rise en masse and tear the scoundrels from their seats." The morality of many of the members, whatever it may be at home, is here below par. Gambling, cheating, licentiousness and hard drinking, are their characteristics. While all manner of fraudulent claims are swindled through Congress each day, there are in Washington to-day, hundreds of poor, honest men, who ask in vain that their just claims be attended to. A rich man with a forged claim stands a far better chance than a poor man with a just one. We know one poor man here, who sold the Revolutionary Army many thousands of dollars' worth of cattle for beef, and who received in pay a certificate, or due-bill, to the amount, from the Commissaries of the Army, and yet that debt, though never denied to be just, has never yet been paid, though the Gardiner fraud was pushed through Congress triumphantly, and Tom Corwin is now enjoying the fruits of his dishonest services rendered Gardiner. It is no wonder, when members of Congress show themselves possessed of no uprightness of character, that a weak and unprincipled President (for alas! he has proved himself to be such,) should attempt to bribe, threaten and cajole them into support of his favorite measures. No President ever yet lived, who would dare try to coax or scold such a man as Chase or Giddings—Gerrit Smith or Tom Benton.

How the Case Stands.

We have now in the States of the North more than seventeen millions of people, and if we should add thereto the population of the British Provinces, the sum would be nearly twenty millions. Annexation of those Provinces can never take place while we continue so busily occupied in extending the area of slavery, to which the people of Canada are so much opposed. They tell us frankly, in the language of the Toronto Colonist, that they will make no connection with us "that will empower the slave-driver to make Canada a hunting ground. Human flesh and blood shall never be bartered in Canada like the beasts of the field. The baying of the bloodhounds shall never echo in our woods. If Mitchel wants 'a plantation of fat negroes to flog,' he will have to seek it in some other place than Canada. If Canada ever becomes a State of the Union, it will not be until its soil is soaked in blood."

Let the South realize its menace and depart in peace, and this difficulty will have no existence, while the advantages of union would be so great to the Provinces that, were the hindrance of Slavery removed, annexation would follow as a necessary consequence.

What, then, would be the real loss resulting from a secession by the South with a view to carry out its now favorite project of the great slave republic, embracing some of the slave States, Cuba, Brazil, and perhaps Hayti, if her people could be re-enslaved? We should lose the companionship of five millions of white men who give seven millions of votes, and thereby deprive the whole free people of the North of all control over their own actions, while taxing them hundreds of millions for the purchase and protection of territory sufficient to enable themselves to hold the reins of government. We should, on the other hand, gain a connection with two and a half millions of free people who sell their own labor, and therefore desire that the "hireling" should be largely paid. We should lose a connection with five millions who differ from us in all our modes of thought in regard to the rights of man, and gain a connection with half that number who agree with us in reference to that important subject. We lose a connection with men who look only to exhausting their land and then abandoning it, and gain one in which every man is cultivating his own homestead, and therefore desirous of improving it for the benefit of himself and his wife and children, and ready to unite with us in every measure tending to that result. We should lose a connection with a dead body and gain one with a living man.

Further than this, after the South had left the North, by pursuing a policy tending to elevate the laborer, by diversifying employment, and thus increasing the demand for labor, would attract twice the number of immigrants we now receive, and would thus add so enormously to our numbers and our wealth, that we hesitate not to express our full belief that, in twenty years from this date, it would be richer and more populous than will be our present Union, if it be so long continued. Stronger it would certainly be, for Slavery is an element of weakness. More respectable it would certainly be, for we cannot command the respect of the world while appearing everywhere as the advocates of Slavery, and the executors of the Fugitive Slave Law. More moral would it be, for we should not covet the lands of our neighbor, any more than we desire to convert himself into a chattel. Examine the matter, therefore, as we may, the balance of profit and loss seems to us to be in favor of permitting our Southern friends to exercise their own judgement as to the time, manner, and extent, of secession.—The Charleston Evening News thus states the question:

"It is vain to disguise it, the great issue of our day in this country is, Slavery or no Slavery. The present phase of that issue is, the extension or non-extension of the institution, the foundations are broad and solid in our midst. Whatever the general measure—whatever the political combinations—whatever the party movement—whatever the action of sections at Washington, the one single, dominant and pervading idea, solving all leading questions, insinuating itself into every polity, drawing the horoscopes of all aspirants, serving as a lever or fulcrum for every interest, class or individuality—a sort of directing fatality, is that master issue. As, in despite of right and reason—of organism and men—of interests and efforts, it has become per se, political destiny—why not meet it? It controls the North, it controls the South—it precludes escape. It is at last and simply a question between the South and the remainder of the Union, as sections and as people. All efforts to give it other divisions, to solve it by considerations other than those which pertain to them in their local character and fates, to divert it, to confound it with objects and designs of a general nature, are rendered futile. It has to be determined by these real parties, by their action in their character as sections—inchoate countries."

Such are the parties to this great question of the enlargement or contraction of the freedom of man—"sections—inchoat countries." How soon they will become really different countries—enemies in war, and in peace friends—depends upon the South, who has for thirty years threatened dissolution, and has thus far been conciliated only by the concession of almost unlimited power to buy land and create poor slave States with small population as offsets to the large, populous and wealthy free States of the North. The cup of conciliation seems now, however to have been drained; and if the Missouri Compromise be now repealed, even the dregs will scarcely we think be found at its bottom.—That the monstrous Nebraska bill can become a law we do not now believe, nor do we believe that Southern gentlemen will generally be found advocating such an extraordinary violation of faith; but should they be so found, and should the failure of this new attempt at the enlargement of slave territory and extension of slave power be followed by a determination on the part of the South to insist on their right of secession, why, the only reply that should be made is that of Senator Fessenden: "they need not put it off a day on our account."—Tribune.

The Glorious Rescue.

The Kenosha Telegraph proposes that either Mr. Watkins, Mr. Booth, or some one occupying a similar position, should be chosen as the next Representative of the Milwaukie district in Congress. We heartily second the suggestion.

Washington, March 23, 1854.

My Dear Friend and Brother:

God bless you, and He will bless you.—Your letter, this morning, has filled me with joy. You are aware what a responsible part I took in the rescue of Jerry. I determined, from the first, that, were I indicted, I would not give bail—I would go to jail.

I trust that you will not give bail. I trust you will avow the whole extent of your participation in the rescue of Glover, and glory in it. Glorious Milwaukie! Glorious Rescue! Truly yours,

GERRIT SMITH.

To S. M. Booth.

Washington, March 31, 1854.

My Dear Sir: * * * With my views of the unconstitutionality and inhumanity of the Fugitive Slave Act, you are well acquainted. For me, its provisions have no more validity than those of the Alien and Sedition Acts, or the Stamp Act. It is an exercise of power nowhere granted by the Constitution, in derogation of the rights of the States, and full of danger to personal liberty.

Truly your friend, S. P. CHASE.

Slavery Existing in Nebraska.—A letter from William Walker, Chief of the Wyandot tribe Indians, formerly of Ohio, but now located on the Indian Territory, at the junction of the Missouri and Kansas rivers, was published in the Cleveland Daily Herald, of Tuesday. It was originally addressed to S. Blocker, Esq., of Wadsworth, Ohio. He gives the following statement in reefrence to the existence of slavery in the territory of Nebraska, which will be read with much interest:

There is one fact relating to slavery in this territory, of which you are perhaps not aware, as I perceive it is not generally known in the East, viz., the existence of slavery here among the Indians and whites in defiance of the compromise of 1820. It has been in existence ever since it was organized as an Indian Territory. True, there are not many slaves, but still slavery exists. Some slaves are held by the Indians by virtue of their own laws and usages, and some by regular bills of sale from citizens of Missouri. White people going into the territory by the authority of the government in the character of Indian agents, mechanics, licensed traders, teachers, missionaries, &c., hesitate not a moment to take slaves with them, regarding it as a slave territory, and the prohibitory clause a dead letter.

This opinion prevailing so generally, was fortified a few years ago by a decision of one of the Circuit Courts of Missouri, deciding that the Indian territory, properly so called, was a slave territory. I will briefly state the nature of the suit that called forth this decision from Judge Ryland, now of the Supreme Court of Missouri. I was appointed by the Probate Court administrator of the estate of B. Among the assets that came into A's hands were a number of slaves. These were hired out to service for the time being. One (a man) was hired to a person residing in the Territory. He managed to escape, and succeeded in reaching Mexico, and was never reclaimed. The heirs afterwards brought suit against A for the recovery of the value of the runaway slave, on the ground that A had put the slave to service in a free territory, virtually emancipating him. On the part of the defence it was contended and proved that "slavery and involuntary servitude" had existed, and did exist in the Indian territory, and it was not free soil. Judgement for the defendant. Such is the present attitude of slavery here.

Jamaica.

By way of New York we have news from Jamaica to the 27th ult., and glean the following intelligence from the papers of that country:—

Our Legislature has been prorogued by the Governor, and of course will not again be called together until the fate of the responsible government bill now sent home for the concurrence of her Majesty, is known.—Should the bill meet the royal assent, I have no doubt that upon the same being known, his Excellency will select his cabinet as authorised to do under the measure in question. Then will commence in Jamaica a new order of legislation—one that will likely prove beneficial to the island, and calculated to revive her long drooping energies. Party feeling will no doubt be rife; but with a good selection on the part of the Governor, his first cabinet will no doubt stand. A few months—nay, weeks—will enlighten us on these points. Prior to the prorogation the Governor gave his assent to a bill authorising the issue of exchequer bills and red checks—"Island Treasury Notes"—in payment of liabilities against the public, incurred during the lapse of the revenue bill, caused by the late legislative quarrel. His Excellency said plainly that had it not been for the special and pressing circumstances of the case, he would not have assented to the measure. The redemption of these papers is to be secured by the loan promised to the Island by the British government. Whether we will get it just now, in the present posture of affairs in Europe, is somewhat doubtful. Cholera, has reappeared in several parishes. At this moment it is doing most mischief in the parish of Metcalfe. Sir Henry Barkley, our Governor, and his lady, are at present on a tour on the north side of the island. They were most warmly received in the town of Falmouth, where addresses were presented to them by the magistracy, by the inhabitants and by the clergy. Scarlet fever prevails here to some extent; the weather is alarmingly hot at this moment. There have been some heavy and seasonable rains in different parts of the island, quite favorable to cultivation.—Colonist.

The Nebraska Emigration Convention.—We learn from the Worcester Spy taht notwithstanding the drenching rain of yesterday, the Nebraska Emigration Convention in Worcester was attended by a considerable number of delegates. This morning was chiefly occupied in an informal discussion of the subject. In the afternoon the meeting organized by the choice of John M. Earle, of Worcester, for President, and A. A. Cleveland, of New Salem, for Secretary. A series of resolutions were reported and passed. They declared the necessity of neutralizing the efforts of the slave power by causing the Territories to be occupied by freemen; that the incorporation of an Emigrants' Aid Society for promoting this object was a noble step in the right direction; and that, regarding justice, as well as policy, nothing should be done by this Association to attain their object, which was not strictly in recordance with the principles of true Christianity, and therefore the natural and guaranteed rights of the aboriginal inhabitants should be sacredly regarded.

Rev. Edward Hale, of Worcester, supported the resolutions in an able speech. He said, that one direct step to be taken was to advertise for proposals to take 20,000 emigrants in companies of not less than two hundred each, from eastern cities to the sites of their future homes. In this way their expenses of emigration might be lessened one half. Again, the Society would construct spacious boarding-houses for their accommodation in Nebaraska, at cheap rates, until their own dwellings were erected. They would also send out steam engines, saw mills, grist mills, printing presses, and other implements, and would have agents there to guide and assist the new settlers. He believed that 2000 Massachusetts men would settle in Kansas before the commencement of 1855, and it was not improbable that within three years both Nebraska and Kansas would ask to be admitted into the Union as free States.

The Will of Peter the Great.

Mention has been lately made of the will of Peter the Great; but we believe that no copy of it is to be found in any book of general access. The following translation has been made from a German work entitled Geschichte Peters des Gossen. Von Eduard Pelz, Leipsic. It is there stated to have been transmitted by the Chevalier d'Eon, French Ambassador at the Court of St. Petersburgh, to the French King, in the year 1757, and to have been made public shortly afterwards.

Various opinions have been expressed as to its authenticity and genuineness, which at this period of time it is difficult to clear up. Independently, however, of its authenticity there is much intrinsic interest in the document as embodying principles of action which have been notoriously followed by Russia during the last 100 years, with such modifications as time and circumstances and the variations of European equilibrium have rendered necessary. The 13th rule is especially worthy of attention at the present moment.

"THE WILL OF PETER THE GREAT."

"In the name of the holy and indivisible Trinity, we, Peter, Emperor and Autocrat of all the Russias, &c., all our successors on the throne and in the government of the Russian nation:

"Forasmuch as the great God, who is the Author and Giver of our life and crown, hath constantly illnmined us with His light, and upheld us with his support &c."

Here Peter sets out in detail that, according to his view, which he takes to be also that of Providence, he regards the Russian nation as destined hereafter to exercise supreme dominion over Europe. He bases his opinion on the fact that the European nations have for the most part fallen into a condition of decrepitude not far removed from collapse, whence he considers that they may easily be subjugated by a new and youthful race, as soon as the latter shall have attained its full vigor.

The Russian Monarch, looks upon the coming influx of the northerns into the east and west as a periodical movement which forms part of the scheme of Providence, which, in like manner, by the invasions of the barbarians, effected the regeneration of the Roman world. He compares the migrations of the Polar nations to the inundations of the Nile, which at certain seasons fertilizes the arid soil of Egypt. He adds that Russia, which he found a brook, and should leave a river, must, under his successors, grow to a mighty sea, destined to fertilize worn-out Europe, and that its waves would advance over all obstacles, if his successors were only capable of guiding the stream. On this account he leaves behind him for their use the following rules, which he recommends to their attention and constant study, even as Moses consigned his tables of the law to the Jewish people:—

RULES.

1. The Russian nation must be constantly on a war footing to keep the soldier warlike, and in good condition. No rest must be allowed except for the purpose of relieving the State finances, recruiting the army or biding the favorable moment for attack.—By these means peace is made subservient to war, and war to peace, in the interest of the aggrandizement and increasing prosperity of Russia.

2. Every possible means must be used to invite from the most cultivated European States commanders in war and philosophers in peace, to enable the Russian nation to participate in the advantages of other countries without losing any of its own.

3. No opportunity must be lost in taking part in the affairs and disputes of Europe, especially in those of Germany, which, from its vicinity, is of the most direct interest to us.

4. Poland must be divided by keeping up constant jealousies and confusions there. The authorities must be gained over with money, and the Assemblies corrupted, so as to influence the election of the Kings. We must get up a party of own there, and send Russian troops into the country, and let them sojourn there so long that they may ultimately find some pretext for removing there for ever. Should the neighboring States make difficulties, we must appease them for the moment by allowing them a share of the territory until we can safely resume what we are thus giving away.

5. We must take away as much territory as possible from Sweden, and contrive that they shall attack us first, so as to give us a pretext for their subjugation. With this object in view we must keep Sweden in opposition to Denmark, and Denmark to Sweden, and sedulously foster their mutual jealousies.

6. The consorts of the Russian princes must always be chosen from among the German princesses, in order to multiply our family alliances with the Germans, and so unite our interest with theirs, and thus, by consolidating our influence in Germany, to cause it to attach itsself spontaneously to our policy.

7. We must be cseful to keep up our commercial alliance with England, for she is the power which has most need of our products for her navy, and may at the same time be of the greatest service to us in the developement of our own. We must export wood and other articles in exchange for her gold, and establish permanent connexions between her merchants and seamen and our own.

8. We must keep steadily extending our frontiers—northward along the Baltic, and southward along the shores of the Black Sea.

9. We must progress as much as possible in the direction of Constantinople and India. He who can once get possession of these places is the real ruler of the world. With this view we must provoke constant quarrels at one time with Turkey and at another with Persia. We must establish wharves and docks along the Euxine, and by degrees make ourselves masters of that sea as well as the Baltic, which is a doubly important element in the success of our plan. We must hasten the downfall of Persia, push on into the Persian Gulf; if possible re-establish the ancient commercial intercourse with the Levant through Syria, and force our way into the Indies, which are the storehouses of the world. Once there, we can dispense with English gold.

10. Morover, we must take pains to establish and maintain an intimate union with Austria, apparently countenancing her schemes for future agrandizement in Germany and all the while secretly rousing the jealousy of the minor States against her. In this way we must bring it to pass that one or the other party shall seek aid from Russia; and thus we shall exercise a sort of protectorate over the country which will pave the way for future supremacy.

11. We must make the House of Austria interested in the expulsion of the Turks from Europe, and we must neutralize its jealousy at the capture of Constantinople either by pre-occupying it with a war with the old European States, or by allowing it a share of the spoil, which we can afterwards resume at our leisure.

12. We must collect round our house, as round a centre, all the detached sections of Greeks which are scattered abroad in Hungary, Turkey, and South Poland. We must make them look to us for support, and then, by establishing beforehand a sort of ecclesiastical supremacy, we shall pave the way for universal sovereignty.

13. When Sweden is ours, Persia vanquished, Poland subjugated, Turkey conquered—when our armies are united, and the Euxine and the Baltic are in the possession of our ships, then we must make separate and secret overtures first to the Court of Versailles, and then to that of Vienna, to share with them the dominion of the world. If either of them accepts our propositions, which is certainly to happen if their ambition and self-interest are properly worked upon, we must make use of this one to annihilate the other; this done, we have only to destroy the remaining one by finding a pretext for a quarrel, the issue of which cannot be doubtful, as Russia will then be already in the absolute possession of the East and of the best part of Europe.

14. Should the improbable case happen of both rejecting the propositions of Russia—then our policy will be to set one against the other, and make them tear each other to pieces. Russia must then watch for and seize the favorable moment, and pour her already assembled hosts into Germany, while two immense fleets, laden with Asiatic hordes and convoyed by the armed squadrons of the Euxine and the Baltic, set sail simultaneously from the Sea of Azoff and the harbour of Archangel. Sweeping along the Mediterranean and the Atlantic, they will overun France on the one side, while Germany is overpowered on the other. When these countries are fully conquered the rest of Europe must easily and without a struggle come under our yoke. Thus Europe can and must be sebjugated.

A New Underground Railroad.—Mrs. Mary Afflick was arrested in Louisville on the 7th ultimo, and tried on a charge of aiding a negro to escape. The slave belonged to Dr. Gross. The Courier gives the following account of the method of procuring passage over this new underground railroad: Tickets are bought at the Jeffersonville railroad office, then handed over to the negro that is ready to elope; the omnibus calls for him about daybreak, and, ensconced in that, he rides to the ferry and across the river to the depot, whence he is rapidly whirled away by steam into the interior of Indiana. This is the latest and cutest abolition dodge, and appears to have worked successfully until the arrest of the woman in question. Mrs. Afflick had, it appears, aided in the escape of several slavee from Louisville. She was committed for further examination.

☞ The Dublin Nation has quite turned on its old friend, John Mitchel. In a long and fierce article, reviewing his course and exposing his character, McDuffy says: "His brain appears to have been turned, his heart to have grown hopelessly malcontent in exile, and he sees the world again only to scoff and sneer, and make it echo with his egotism. This, however strongly flavored and brilliantly colored, fast finds its level—the faster that it is seasoned with a blasphemy which stinks in a Christian man's nostrils, and sickens his stomach. Eight numbers of this quality still leave a doubt whether the writer is merely a little insane or a good deal possessed of a devil."

A Colored Savan.—At least one of the learned societies of this city have overcome the prejudice against permitting colored men to share in its deliberations. The American Geographical Society, of which George Bancroft, the historian, was President last year, and over which J. Romeyn Broadhead, naval officer of this port, now presides, has received James McCune Smith, a colored man, into membership, and, a few evenings ago, he addressed the Society, on the subject of devising measures to improve the system heretofore adopted for taking the State census.—New York Paper.

☞ One hundred and fifty persons died in New York, during twelve months past, of delirium tremens!—There were nine murders caused by rum; and nearly ten thousand five-day commitments for drunkenness during the same time.

Emigration to Canada.

An American senator proposed, the other day, in the Senate of that country, that the Government of the Union s' ould enter into negociation with the Rulers of Great Britain for the peaceful annexation of our Canadian provinces. No doubt various reasons, black and white, could be earnestly advanced in favor of so feasible a go-a-head proposal.—In these troublous times, it would save England all anxiety and expense as to the safe guardianship of her American colonies; and at the same time, it would extinguish the northern lights of freedom ever twinkling afar in the imaginations at least of millions of swarthy bondsmen. But on whatever principle the eye of annexation greed is shot across the waters of the St. Lawrence, it is clear that the growing millions of the North American provinces are daily becoming more fit, from their wealth, and their general social advancement, to have something like an imperial voice in the settlement of any such question. Canada has resources in mineral treasures, timber, and arable soil, that place her second to no division of the great American continents. And what with the means of intercourse springing rapidly into existence, the growth of the population, and the energy of their character, the day bids fair speedily to arrive when our colonies in the western hemisphere will play an important part in the destinies of the race on that side of the world.

But it is to Canada as a field of emigration that we now direct attention. At this season of the year, those who have been brooding over the terrors of war or the increase of taxation, with diminished trade, may be turning their thoughts to other lands, and wishing, like one who wished of yore, that they had the wings of a dove. Now, amid all our colonies, as a resting place for the foot of honest labor, not one, perhaps, presents a more eligible field than our Canadian possessions. The gold regions of Australia may appear as if presenting the chance of instantaneous wealth, and tens of thousands may venture thither only to be grievously disappointed. But in Canada (so writes the Government emigration agent stationed at Quebec,) "the prospects and demands for labor are most satisfactory.—The immense railway system undertaken by the provinces will greatly stimulate general prosperity, involving as it will, the introduction and expenditure of a large amount of capital, which will secure steady and profitable employment for the laboring classes for several years to come; so that Canada never presented a more favorable opening for the reception of all classes of her Majesty's subjects, or such other as desire to seek a comfortable home. The demand for labor of every kind is on the increase. The wages paid for unskilled labor are four shillings per day sterling." And from Western Canada the accounts are no less cheering. There is an abundant demand for labor, skill, and capital; so that common laborers, farm servants, mechanics, merchants, and monied men will find profitable investment for their energies and means to almost an unlimited extent.

Now, taking into view the proximity of the colony—about 3000 miles distant, traversed by steam in eleven or twelve days, and by sailing vessels in from thirty to forty—and taking into view the demand for labor, the rate of wages, and price of provisions, and the cost of the voyage, the inducements of emigrants to prefer Canada are many and decisive. There is no class of able and persevering workers there but may gradually accumulate from their income; and on the part of the skilful laborer nothing stands in the way of his becoming a landed proprietor in the course of time.—Land is cheaper than in the States of the Union, and easily obtained on more advantageous terms; while the abundance of not only the common necessaries of life, but of what in this country would be counted luxuries on the tables of the affluent, renders the condition of farm servants and even common laborers out of all comparison superior to that of the same classes on this side of the Atlantic. In Nova Scotia, a farmer told Mr. Chambers that his men lived on the best of everything, and would be discontented if they did not get fruit pies every day, as well as meat. Think of mechanics and laborers in Canada West having the breakfast table spread with steaks, chops, ham, or bacon and eggs, with good bread, roasted potatoes, and coffee or tea! For dinner, roast or boiled beef or pork, with fruit pie or pudding, is served; and for tea or supper a corresponding amount and variety of the good things of this life. And taking into view that the government is the same as our own, the general customs and habits of the people the same, the religious and educational advantages nearly the same, Canada does seem to invite, at the present moment the attention of all who, from whatever cause, deem a change of residence from this to another country a matter of serious contemplation. Venturing thither is no venture into the uncertainties of the nugget field.—It is no neck or nothing hazard in the race for gold. The movement of prosperity in the Canadian and other provinces of British N. America is not a partial or fitful advance. It has been, for the last fifty years steady and accelerating, and in the case of some districts double, if not threefold the United States. The increase of the city of Toronto itself, when compared with cities in the States, is found to exceed that of Boston, New York, St. Louis and Cincinnati.

The Irish exodus seems to slacken, as compared at least with what it was at the same period of last year. But as to the movement forth from the British Isles of myriads in quest of better wages, better food, and more of it, better circumstances in general, that is not likely to cease for indefinite years to come. The pressure on the labor market, though less than in years gone by, is not sufficiently less to make the progress onward stand still, as witness the readiness with which multitudes by sea and land, enlist for the Business of war. Whilst, therefore, this outward flow of the living thews and sinews of the United Kingdom goes on, it would be well that it were directed to go to a field where the signs of progress are as far removed from the incidents of mere luck as possibly could be; where the elements of wealth are abundant; and where the energetic application of mind and muscle cannot but lead on to ever increasing prosperity. Canada, a country nearly three times the extent of the British Island, presents such a field. And from the information, now easily and growingly accessible, in respect of all that an emigrant should know, we are much deceived if the rich and fertile soil, the mineral resources, and other aspects of our Canadian Provinces, do not increasingly allure our migratory multitudes. who feel the irrepressible desire to arise and depart in peace, believing that this is not their rest.—Glasgow Commonwealth.

NEBRASKA.

The Cleveland Herald contains an interesting letter from the Nebraska region, written by William Walker, an intelligent and worthy half-breed, and the chief of the Wyandot Indians, srom which we make the following extract:

As far as I have been able to make observations on cultivated lands, I have no hesitation in affirming that there can be no country found to surpass it in the production of corn, wheat and oats. Clover, I think, will not do well. The soil is too loose, and the clover freezes out in the winter, and what is left gets the finishing stroke during the autumnal drouths so common in this country. That this country is well adapted to fruit raising I can speak with confidence, as I have been doing something in that line myself, and take much interest in that department of horticulture. I think I never ate such luscious peaches in my life as my neighbours and I have raised. It is to be regretted, however, that in some seasons the peach crop has met with total failure. But apples and other fruits seldom fail. On the alluvial lands we have paw-paws, plums, &c., that will eclipse anything in the western world.

With regard to mercantile and mechanical pursuits, it would be difficult at present to tell. This will depend upon the population in the various prominent points, and when the current of trade has settled down to the permanent maximum. The location of the Mississippi and Pacific Railroad through the central route will soon develope the business points. But upon the organization of the territory, and, moreover, upon the extinguishing of the title of the Shawnee and Delaware Indians to their lands upon the Kansas river, (as they own both sides) a great opening will here present itself to the enterprising and business men of all pursuits. It is navigable for 200 miles up, to the "Republican Fork," except in a low stage of water, which occurs generally in the fall. The country upon this stream is considered the best portion of the Territory, the land generally being well adapted to agricultural purposes, and being well watered with streams emptying into the Kansas river.

I have not travelled this portion of the territory, and therefore state only what I derived from reliable authority. I have explored the southern portion, and cannot speak in rapturous terms of that country. It is not as well watered, nor has it as many water privileges for machinery as in the northern part, nor is the soil as good, though a fine grazing country. The whole Territory is prairie, except upon the streams; and like most western countries, has hills and dales, rivers and creeks, prairies and timber, rich and poor land. The upland lies high and rolling into beautiful waves. The timber in the country is red, white, black, burr, and pine oak, shell and smooth bark, hickory, black walnut, clackberry, coffee beans, mulberry, ash, linden, &c., and in the bottom lands which are subject to inundation, nothing but cottonwood of the rankest and most rapid growth.

There can be no better country for raising live stock. The water (from springs) is generally hard, owing to the source being from beds of limestone. There are springs, however, that proceed from clay banks, and the water from these is invariably soft.

With regard to the climate, it is about the same as in the northern part of Ohio, except that the winters are not so long, and the summers are longer and warmer. As evidence of the latter, I will state that during the months of July and August, the mercury in the shade is frequently up to 100 and 105 deg., and I recollect two or three instances of 110 deg.

In the winter, the weather is very irregular. In the winter months, the mercury will sometimes stand at 55 deg. or "Temperate," and in twelve hours' time it will be 10 deg. below zero. The irregularity of the climate is by many attributed to our altitude above the valley of the Mississippi and proximity to the Rocky Mountains. But permit me to say at least one thing in praise of the "Queen of the Prairies"—we have, both in winter and summer, the finest roads for wheel carriages on the Continent of America. I do not to say turnpike or macadamized roads, but roads make by the plastic hand of Nature. In the winter, especially, it is glorious wheeling. Indeed, good for any other mode of travelling.

One peculiarity I cannot pass without a remark. The morning and evening twilight lasts about an hour longer than in Ohio.

The Wards.

The Ward excitement seems to be unabated in Kentucky. The Louisville Courier says it has been furnished with the names of the fifty gentlemen appointed by the commissioners of Hardin county, as those from whom the Sheriff was to summon a panel of twenty-four to serve at the April term.

Singularly enough, not one of the persons appointed by the commissioners was taken by the defendants in the Ward case. Yet four of the infamous jurors were said to belong to the regular panel, and one—the first juror chosen in the case was certainly in the box, when the case was called. How these four chanced to be summoned on the regular jury, without having been selected by the commissioners, is a great mystery.—The sheriff who had this matter in charge, should explain.

The Courier publishes the proceedings of a meeting held at Stevenburgh, Hardin county, on the 6th, at which a resolution was passed, requesting the jurors to leave the county previous to the next term of the circuit court, and requesting the sheriff to resign his office and leave the county.—Senator Crittenden was also requested to resign his seat. Of the character of the jurors, the resolutions declare that "so far from being honest and respectable," a portion are from the lowest dregs of humanity being composed of men in dotage, bankrupts, habitual drunkards, and Sabbath-breaking gamblers.

An indignation meeting was also held at Sligo, Henry county, Kentucky, on the 6th, at which strong resolutions were passed.

It is related in the St. Louis papers, that during the sitting of the Medical Convention in that city, a question on Parliamentary law was raised, which could not be satisfactorily decided. A member suggested that Mr. Crittenden, then present in the Convention, was an old Parliamentarian, and that all parties should abide by his decision.—On the instant that this proposition was made, a spontaneous and general hiss filled the room in which the Convention held its sittings, and the subject was forthwith dropped.—Philadelphia Register.

What I saw and thought in Washington.

WASHINGTON, May 13.

This morning, as Mr. Richardson came into the House, an hour or two before the time of assembling, and gave and received congratulations from some half dozen of his "Swiss," who were already there, that they were on hand, as they remarked it was fit they should be, and that it was an auspicious morning—"a sun of Austerlitz," as Richardson said. And this sun of Austerlitz they were going to devote to slavery, providing thus carrion for the sun to kiss.

Upon the 9th of May, it being one of the reception days, I paid my respects to the White House, and not especially to its occupant; I went chiefly to see the mansion and the manners there, with proper curiosity as to the man. Reception from eleven to one. I went up at twelve. At that time there were about four men in the house, and perhaps three times as many women. The President had not yet came down.—He came down soon, and they were introduced and introduced themselves to him. He is the most insignificant looking man, I believe, and that is saying a good deal, that I saw in Washington. He has a boyish aspect, with a little of the German caste of cheek, and looks about as much like his portraits—well, I suppose he suggested them. But there was none of that iron look and feature which they give him. He was civil with an unmeaning simper upon his "soft" face, (the President is clearly and by original constitution and temper, a "soft,") and his manner was easy enough for aught I know, but I thought he liked to get through with it as quickly as possible, as of course, he did. A fellow 'Yankee,' by way of enlivening the monotony a little, and relieving the President from some Presbyterian dominies who had him in hand, observed to him that he supposed that these were not among the most onerous of his duties. "No, they were not." "I hope you find them agreeable recreations, rather?" said our Yankee. "Well, he confessed that he did find them rather agreeable than otherwise;" but this was said with misgiving, and his eyes fell, and he immediately made a very low bow to the Presbyterian clergyman and withdrew to another part of the room. And that was the wealth of remark that he had to our hearing upon that occasion: and so he was discomfited and put hors du combat by the light artillery of our friend. (He didn't faint.) That was the penalty he paid for being out of his place, in a false position.—When, in this free Democracy, will little men learn that they cannot fill great situations? and that they had better not try—that they can decline?

Now there was not a man in the room, and the President, as if fearful of being left alone at his "reception," called "Louis," and saying that he left some gentlemen up stairs in his office, told him to ask them to walk down; and trooping down, in obedience to his summons, very promptly they came. Whether they were, and are, a part of his household, a corps de reserve, minute men, retained for emergencies, the extent, so far, of my observations, does not enable me "to answer and say."

Moral—I do not know what politicians may do in the future,—for et it be understood that the politicians make the Presidents now-a-days—but the present experiment satisfies, and will satisfy not a few, but many, of the policy, expediency and fitness of putting second rate, or third or tenth rate, or men not rated at all, in the Presidential chair; that policy has calumniated here; it is quite run into the ground.—I do not think they could easily, any further go in that direction. And one of our means of defence and to prevent this evil, is not to spare the lash, but to put a whip in the hands of every one who is able to use it, and lash the rascals round the word, and make it too hot for them, themselves. Let not our imbecility invite and encourage this impudence, not of power, but of weakness.

Au revoir,

NEW ENGLAND.

President Pierce seems to have made a secure lodgement for his character and fame in the heart of "New England." It is a question if so much objection can be made against any chief magistrate living. The description is of greater significance, coming as it does from a visitor at the White House, and an American Citizen.—No complaints if foreigners treat lightly of His Excellency; for certainly, no one could speak more contemptibly of him than they do themselve. We think, however, that considering the policy of the Government, they could not have done better than to select Mr. Pierce; little as he is in comparison with other rulers, or with many in the States, he is just the man for the small work the country has for him to do. *

An Experiment that failed.

They hung a man in Pittsburgh last month, under the mistaken notion that the State could stop people killing each other by killing one itself. The experiment proved a dead failure, as we could have told them it would before they tried. The subject of the experiment was a hard drinker, who, being drunk, got into a fight last year in behalf of a friend, and killed a man with very little idea of what he was doing. So they had him arrested, tried, convicted, sentenced, reprieved, exhorted, prayed for, and finally hung. The Dispatch gives the following account of the sequel:

"Our people are now pretty thoroughly convinced that hanging a man will neither prevent grog shops selling liquor to madden others, young men from drinking it, nor drunken ruffians from cutting the throats of their fellow men.

"On Friday, 24th ult., David Jewell was hanged for murder; and before two weeks had elapsed, our columns reported no less than seven persons stabbed, one of them since dead, and another mortally injured! In Birmingham, one man was killed, and two others cut, on the very night of Jewell's execution; in the same borough, Officer Smiley, while in the execution of his duty at a fire, received a wound from a knife from some ruffian. Soon after, in the Fifth Ward, a man cut his friend's throat by mistake, in his drunken fury. Again, in day time, a negro let out another's bowels, in the Sixth Ward; and on Thursday night of last week, in a grog shop in the First Ward, a notorious rowdy inflicted nearly a dozen stabs upon an acquaintance, because he declined drinking with him.

Such is an outline of the cutting and slashing in our city, during the two weeks immediately following an execution—which thousands really belived would strike terror to the rowdies of this community! It is useless to repeat, that the hanging of Jewell has had no effect whatever in checking the crime of which he was convicted, nor need we enlarge upon the reason of such a result. When will the community, understand, that it is the promptness, and especially the certainty of punishment, which can alone restrain the hand that is ready to imbrue itself in a brother's blood—and no such promptness, no such certainty can be had where the punishment is death.?

"In every one of the cases of stabbing we have been called upon to record, since the execution alluded to, the perpetrator had been drinking intoxicating liquors until maddened."

We often hear grave, prudent, conservative citizens shake their heads at conceited youngsters, who will try experiments almod at the improvement of social relations or conditions, which they ought to know will fail, because such always have failed; yet here is this oldest of all disastrous experiments—the Licensing of those who sell Rum, and then Hanging those who drink it, and maddened by it into imbruing their hands in blood—which has always failed, always will fail, and always must fail; and yet some people will persist in having it repeated and persevered in, as though it were certain to succeed next time! Nay; we have a Governor in this State who of himself upholds the Licensing and superintends the Hanging! Was there ever before such fatuity?—Tribune.

Convention between England & France.

Their Majesties the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the Emperor of the French, having resolved to afford their support to his Majesty the Sultan Abdul Medjid, Emperor of the Ottomans, in the war which he is now maintaining against the aggressions of Russia, and being moreover compelled, notwithstanding their sincere and persevering efforts to preserve peace, to become themselves belligerant parties in a war, which, without their active intervention, would have endangered the existence of the Europern balance of power, and the interests of their own states, have, in consequence, resolved to conclude a convention intended to mark ont the object of their alliance, and also the means to be employed in unison to accomplish it.—And have for this purpose named as their plenipotentiaries:—

The integrity of the Ottoman Empire being violated by the occupation of the Provinces of Moldavia and of Wallachia, and by other movements of Russian troops, their Majestie's the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, and the Emperor of the French have concerted and will concert upon the means the most proper to free the territory of the Sultan from Foreign invasion, and to attain the object specified in Art. 1; and they engage to maintain for this purpose, according to the necessities of war, to be judged of by common consent, military and naval forces sufficient to meet the emergency, and of which subsequent arrangements will determine, if there be occasion, the quality, number and destination.

Art. 3. Done at London, the 10th of April, 1854.

CLARENDON.
WALEWSKI,

AN EXTRAORDINARY TIME PIECE.—There is now manufactured by Mr Collings, silversmith, of Gloucestershire, England, a most ingenious piece of mechanism, an eight day clock, with dead beat escapement, maintaining power, chimes the quarters, plays sixteen times in twelve hours, or at any time required. The hands go round as follows: One, once a minute; one, once an hour; one, once a month; one, once a year. It shows the moon's age, the time of high and low water, half ebb and flood; and by a beautiful contrivance, there is a part which represents the water which rises and falls, lifting the ship at high water tide as if it were in motion, and as it recedes leaving these little automaton ships dry on the sands. It shows the hour of the day, day of the week, month of the year. In the day of the month, there is provision made for the long and short months. It shows the twelve signs of the zodiac; it has the equation table, showing the difference of clocks and sun every day in the year. Every portion of the clock is of beautiful workmanship.

MODERN DISCOVERIES.—Professor Agassiz, in a lecture recently delivered by him at Lowell, Mass., expressed it as his belief that the human family existed one hundred and fifty thousand years ago. Another modern philosopher adopts another theory. He supposes that the antediluvian years consisted of only three months—so that Methuselah, at the time of his death, was only two hundred years old.

Our Free Colored Emigrants.

We have alluded before to the emigration of large numbers of free colored people from the U. S. to Canada; but we would call the attention of our readers to a few particulars connected with them, not of general currency hereabouts.

The free colored people, North, are at this time in a state of revolution—a condition of things directly traceable to Slavery, as is nearly every event or commotion which is connected with them. They are divided and sub-divided into as many factions in proportion to numbers, as are their more highly favored fellow-citizens.

There are the Anti-Emigrationists, on the one hand,—the men who think nothing, say nothing, do nothing, in affinity with the Anti-Emagrationists. The Emigrationists, who wish to set up a nation of their own, and the men who love liberty too well to remain in the States, but would not agree to an exclusive nationality, those are in sympathy with Emigrationists No. 1, so far as they admit the propriety of leaving the States.—Animated by a similar spirit with Hungarians, Poles, German and other people who settle in America from a love of liberty, these latter make up the class constantly arriving on our shores.

Staid, sober, industrious, and "long-headed" men, many of them previously of those chosen to act as deliberators for their people, they have surveyed the entire fields, and now, after the years of opinion they settle down practically upon their first thought, "Canada." The prevailing ignorance in this country, on the condition of Northern free colored people, is often subject of amusement to us. A colored man from Scotland or the isles of the sea, is a man, and falls into the ranks at once. In some instances, we have heard that the penchant for a foreign birth by this class, is so strong, growing out of the supposed character gained, that men last from Egypt or Guinea, boldly assert a Scotch or West Indian origin, though natives of the "sunny South." This to our mind should hardly be allowed, as it is clearly underestimating Yankee notions. When fugitives come, (and thanks to the Under-ground Railroad, that is very often in large numbers,) they at once get a place: they are known as "hunted" and "panting" and destitute in every way, and a position is taken accordingly: but to what place belongs the free man from the States, who knows the value of pounds, shillings and pence—he who has attended to his business without the "anxious care" of a master? is a question not often solved at first sight.

How he will deport himself—what will be the result of his indiscriminate settlement, are wonders that have their origin in the many slanderous reports gratuitously circulated of colored people, by prejudiced Americans; but those must cease.

The people of whom we write, are a little more energetic than any to be found among those who will not occupy a more desirable field. Their determination to leave, settles that point.—They are fully equal to those among whom they are now living—whose farms and other property, they buy and improve; which last is the proof of that too.

Having come at last to the sensible conclusion, that it is better to grow up with, and prosper in this noble country, than to remain in the States, where the mephitic air of Slavery is poisoning white and colored, in a greater or less degree, they are here not only buying lands and cultivating the same, but they enter largely into other profitable pursuits in a manner and on a scale equal to their white brother Yankees, who come as they do, to better their condition, and in a way vastly superior in the general, to that which those in the States who oppose emigration, think of doing. We hear much of the work to be done, but to our mind, these emigrants give evidence that they at least, are doing their share. They have chosen the ground—British ground—the only ground on which they can make despots feel the force of their words and actions; and, true to their progressive character, and in glaring contrast with the red man, they go onward, planning improving, accumulating and enlarging. Now, what is to prevent them from living in the future?

As Emigrationists they now live; as business men, they are prospering; as adopted subjects, they cannot fail to grow into favor, as individuals have done before; from the means they bring morally, intellectually, and pecuniarly, the same as are brought by the better class of white emigrants, and the disposition they make of the same.

As a class of men not in service to any man, they must, by common consent, take a position in which they can cheer on the weaker brethren who have just emerged from oppression; and as the bone and sinew of a powerful and increasing class, they will, whether pleasant or otherwise to Americans, help to shape the destiny of this continent There is no such thing as driving colored people into the Pacific, nor across to Africa; they must and will make a large proportion of the inhabitants of the New World, and in proportion as they disown the dogged custom of staying in the background, until permission is given to leave, they will gravitate into this freer sphere. *

A NEWSPAPER MUSEUM.—The London Morning Herald contains the following paragraph respecting the Newspaper Museum of Mr. Holloway the Pill and Ointment man, whose advertisements are found in almost every newspaper in the country. His rooms must be one of the most attractive resorts in London, for American travellers:—

Amongst the wonders of the day we have visited with considerable gratification the 'repertoire' of foreign newspapers of all nations at Holloway's Pill and Ointment establishment, 244 Strand, which presents an immense amount of information on all subjects, political, mercantile, statistical and philosophical, from at least 2000 foreign papers received in this establishment in the course of each week. This immense collection of Journals affords in the great city advantages to the enterprising capitalists, and to the commercial world generally a source of intelligence never before attained. The establishment is visited by the nobility, members of Parliament, contributors to the press, marcantile men, and also by an immense number of distinguished foreigners of all nations. It is managed by several clerks, who classify and file the papers in port-folios, which they exhibit gratuitously to respectable visitors applying for information.

Health Regulations.

The Board of Health has wisely determined to have the city cleaned; that is as it should be Toronto is too beautiful to be kept in the dirty condition in which it now is, and the citizens are in every way deserving of a better fate than would assuredly overtake them, should measures not be taken in time to prevent pestilence. We infer from the placards, that inspectors are no longer in doubt as to whether their Department includes the disagreeable, but necessary duty of examining premises. May a thorough renovation be speduly made of the streets, lanes, yards, &c,, and may good citizens take the hint and furbish up the exterior of their otherwise beautiful dwellings. One would think on a survey of much of the fine looking property in Toronto, that the painters had taken leave, and the servant maids had permission to follow their example.—Clean fronts are to our minds a sure indication of clean interior accommodations, and yet we do not like to impute negligence in the interior arrangements to the inmates of the many noble mansions and pretty looking cottages, that we see hereabouts, with dirty windows, rickety steps, and dingy looking fronts. Should citizens conclude to aid the work, the contrast between dingy houses and clean streets, will not be nearly so great after the inspector shall have 'cleaned up.' *

THE NEBRASKA BILL.—After a noisy debate in the U. S. House of Representatives, on the 15th inst., terminating at about half past five o'clock, it was resolved, on motion of Mr. Richardson, to close the debate on the Nebraska bill on Saturday next (to-day,) at 12 o'clock—yeas 114; nays 58. The probability is that it will pass. "We will drive you to the wall, and nail you there, like base coin!" said John Randolph to the cringing doughfaces from the North.—One push more, and the deed is done. Get Calhoun's doctrine recognised, that "property in one State is property everywhere under the national jurisdiction," and Slavery will ride triumphant over "the land of the free and the home of the brave;" or——nay, we will not even hint at an alternative; for we doubt whether there is manhood and conscience enough in the Free States to make any alternative probable. Shades of the revolutionary Heroes and the Pilgrim Sires! to what a depth of degeneracy have your posterity fallen! Dollars and Slaves! Slaves and Dollars!! form the burthen of their thoughts by day; and, we verily believe, of their dreams by night. Ichabod. D.

MORE GOLD.—It would seem that gold, after all, is not such a scarce commodity as it has been supposed to be. We have had the California Diggings and the Australia Diggings; with its Monster Nuggets, driving one half of the world crazy with the gold fever, while the senses of the other half were sadly distraught with the Shanghai mania. Now we have the Gold Fields at the Cape of Good Hope, with their "agates and precious stones," to peck out the little remaining wits that the Chickens left! There will ere long be reason to fear, that if a Commission of Lunacy were summoned to inquire into the condition of the world's reasoning faculties, they would forthwith return a verdict of "Non compos mentis." The following letter gives some particulars of this new seat of the disease. Can't we find some gold or precious stones in Canada? Alas! the name itself informs us—"There is nothing here!" D.

BOSTON, May 15. The bark Springbolt arrived here this morning, bringing Cape Town dates to the 24th of March. The papers are filled with accounts of gold discoveries, and the sovereignty is said to be rich in gold. It is reported to be more plentiful on the surface than in either California or Australia. Many parties are leaving Cape Town for the diggings. Agates and other valuable stones are also found.

THE QUEEN'S BIRTH-DAY.—We understand that preparations are in progress to celebrate Her Majesty's Birth-day with unusual splendor, in this city. There is to be a public procession in the day time, a torch-light procession and fireworks and an illumination in the evening; and last and most important, everybody is recommended to keep holiday; with which recommendation Her Majesty's loyal subjects will very cheerfuly comply. D.

PUBLICATIONS.—We have received a copy of the pamphlet compiled by Rev. Matthew Newsom, of Detroit, containing articles for and against Emigration, by J. M. Whitfield, W. J. Watkins and Frederick Douglass. We will give it attention at our earliest opportunity.

THE JUVENILE INSTRUCTOR, a neat little paper of four 4to. pages, published every fortnight, edited by LUCIUS C. MATLOCK, at Syracuse, N. Y., has also been received. As its name implies, the Juvenile Instructor is intended for the young, and is adapted to their capacity. Price 25 cents per annum.

MIDDLETON, CONN., April 30th. 1854.

MR. STILL, Sir:—I have just read a letter written by you, and published in Frederick Douglass' Paper; in which you state in a postscript, that you will send a copy to every one wishing to subscribe for the same.

If you will send me a copy of the Provincial Freeman, I will order it directly from the office, or, if I can do better, you will inform me.

EDWIN BLAKE.

To the Provincial Freeman:

MR. EDITOR:—Please comply with the request of Mr. Elwin Blake, to send him a sample copy of the Freeman, which he solicits from me, from an offer I some time since made to my constituents, to forward to them "any one of the papers published by colored men in the States or in Canada." As Mr. Blake, and others not belonging to my constituency, have requested me to send them "sample copies," I take this occasion to say that it will afford me much pleasure to comply with any similar requests by whomsoever made; being as we are, quite aware of the prevailing anxiety to secure information in relation to Canada, and the condition and prospects of our people there, as well as anti-slavery matters at home, we know of no better way at present than the mode suggested—that is, take the papers, pay for them and read them.

Most respectfully,

J. N. STILL.

Summary of News.

The news from the seat of was is increasing in interest. The storming of Odessa by the British fleet in the Black Sea, is the principal occurrence of the week. The firing by the Russians into the boat of the steamer Furious, with a flag of truce, led to the bombardment of this great commercial emporium.

A letter from an officer of the fleet, dated 18th, tells the following rather good story:—

"One morning, a few days since, we saw a large vessel 8 or 10 miles ahead, which we fully believed to be a Russian man-of-war, as she made all sail to get away, and showed no colors. As we came rapidly up with her, she took in sail until she was under reefed topsails (fighting trim,) so we beat to quarters, and the fife sounded loudly, "hands bring the ship into action!" For some three minutes everything was bustle, casting the guns loose, clearing the deck, &c. Five minutes more and every gun was shotted and primed, and the men standing with the match-lines in their hands waiting for the word to fire. Just as we got within good distance the blackguard ran up American colors, and coolly told us he would have hoisted them sooner, but he wanted to see how smart we would clear for action. If our tars did not bless him to the wrong side of Heaven, never believe me!"

The Russian schooner Libertas, Captain Raas, was taken by the British, and a prize-crew was put on board to navigate the vessel to England.—Capt. Raas, being acquained with British tastes, supplied his captors with an unlimited allowance of brandy. They got drunk; the Russian nailed hem below hatches, and carried them as prisoners into Carlscrona!

Three more Russian trading ships had been captured in the channel and brought to England, namely the barque Fyra Broder, 400 tons, another bark of the same tonnage, name unknown; and the schooner Johannes. All the prizes were laden with salt.

Still Later.

The Europa has arrived at New York, with Liverpool dates to May 6th. The telegraphic reports are quite contradictory. The Grand Trunk Telegraph states that a great battle has taken place between Omar Pasha and the Russians—the Russians defeated. The Montreal Line has it that a severe action had been fought near Silistria, and the Turks were compelled to fall back before overwhelming numbers.

The batteries, military stores, &c. of Odessa, had been destroyed, and two powder magazines blown up.

Twelve Russian ships of war had been sunk, and thirteen laden with ammunition taken.

The Russians had suffered more severely than was at first supposed. The Allies had lost only four men.

An English brig had drifted ashore on the island of Engosit. No one on board, but the cabins were drenched with blood.

The American schooner Grape Shot, which cleared lately for New York was reported to to have turned privateer, and had captured a French merchantman off the Land's End.

The Baltic fleet have blockaded all the Russian ports.

Napier was off Stockholm, and was expecting the ice to break up, so as to leave Cronstadt clear by the end of April.

Sorrel and Richmond Railroad.

I feel assured that the opening of a line of communication between the centre of these townships, and a town situated as William Henry is, on the South side of the St. Lawrence, having as fine a harbor as, perhaps, can be found in Canada, and possessing the advantage of unrivalled water communication directly and especially with the emporium of the United States, with your fast thriving city, and many other places, must be looked upon as an enterprise likely to be productive of general as well as local good. It can be productive of general good by increasing the share contributed by this section of the country to the general trade; and be locally beneficial by increasing and improving agriculture in its vicinity. The proposed Railroad is to pass through the Counties of Yamaska and Drummond, and will, consequently, traverse fifty miles of as fertile land, generally, as need be sought for, and which a glance at the census table of 1852 will show. Indeed, I believe that the County of Drummond ranks higher, in an Agricultural point of view, than many of the other counties of Lower Canada, with a like population and the same area of cultivated land; and as to manufactories, the following statistics, I believe will show that we are not far behind our neighbors. There are 29 to 30 pot and pearl ash manufactories in the Counties of Drummond and Yamaska alone, producing from 1800 to 2000 barrels annually; 30 grist and 51 saw mills, some of which, situated in the County of Drummond, are not in actual operation, for the same reason that thousand of acres of the most excellent land, although possessed, remain uncultivated—and that is for want of a proper communication with their natural market town, William Henry. But when this requisite shall have been supplied, we shall see these saw mills, now motionless, as well as the many yet to be erected, hard at work reducing the huge pine and other logs, to be furnished by the forests immediately surrounding, to the more convenient dimensions of the plank and board, for conveyance to some of the best markets. And as well shall those immense tracts of land, now covered with the wild forests, contribute their respective shares of Agricultural products to the increase of the commerce of Canada. As it appears that the country through which the proposed railroad is to pass is almost level, and that those obstacles which are usually the cause of the enormous expense incurred in constructing railroads are rarely to be met with along this line, it is probable that its cost will not much exceed the minimum of the usual cost per mile of railroads in this province: and if the general traffic and travel along the route be sufficient to pay the interest of the capital supposed to be required for its construction, the advantage, surely, which the new mode of travelling will afford to the commercial and agricultural community, must tend to increase the traffic in a ratio to warrant the expectation of the principal being returned in due season.—Correspondence of the Montreal Herald.

Engagement of the "Fury" with Russian Frigates.

A letter fuom Baltchik, Kavarna Bay, dated the 14th of April, states that on the 10th inst., Her Majesty's ship Fury left the fleet there on a cruise, unaccompanied by any French steamer. On the afternoon of the 11th, the western coast of the Crimea was distinctly visible, and in order not to be discovered too soon she stood off from it.—During the night and in the early part of the morning she gradually edged in to the shore, but the brilliancy of the moon was a great drawback to her plans. On the 12th at half-past 3 a. m., she steamed ahead at full speed, and at half-past 5 came in sight of Sebastopol. By this time the sun had risen, and the morning was unclouded, so that objects at a long distanee were visible. Two merchant vessels were seen coming out of port with the Russian ensign flying, one of which rapidly approached, carrying a splendid breeze with her. The Fury passed her, taking a survey of the harbor, at a distance of 2½ miles.—Two brigs of war were under way, and the two frigates stationed at the mouth of the harbor were crossing gallant and royal yards. The Fury at six a. m., changed her course, hoisted Austrian colours, and bore down on the merchant ships. An hour after, having taken the crew on board, six in number, and made one of the ships fast by a hawser, she towed her off at full speed. The two brigs, followed by two frigates, were then seen to leave the harbour under all plain sail, and a steamer getting up steam. Wind W. by S. force five to six—the most favorable that could blow for them—at 7 35. It was now clear that the frigates were rapidly nearing, the Fury being three miles or more to the leeward. Immediately the fore and aft sails were set, the prize cut adrift, and the steam brought to its highest pressure, so that she absolutely flew to windward. Still the frigates seemed to be gaining ground, and the position of the Fury became highly dangerous, as now two miles were the most that separated the enemies. Tons of water were started, all except two days' requirements, which was a considerable assistance. At 8 30 one of the frigates dropped, and the two brigs; but still the other kept in the wind's eye. At 8 54 the windward frigate and the Fury came so close as to be almost within range of the long guns of the latter, when the order "Open fire" was given. Immediately steady aim was taken, the sternmost gun fired, and down dropped the shell a yard distant from her lee bow. She immediately replied by firing too, but the shot did not reach half way, and hoisted the Russian ensign at her main, which was responded to by re-loading with rapidity and again firing.—The shot still fell a little short and more to leeward. Again she fired four guns at the Fury, and another ensign was run up at the fore, for which another shell was fired, though it fell still shorter, as the Fury was rapidly increasing the distance. Having thus gone to windward, but still out of range, the idea was entertained of engaging the frigate with long guns, but at this time the steamer was rapidly advancing, and it was considered more prudent to remain content with taking the merchant vessel with six prisoners from beneath the fortifications. When the Fury went alongside the schooner she hauled down the Austrian colours, and hoisted the English ensign, which startled them a little in harbour. The rage of the Russians must have been great, as they seemed sure of catching the Fury, and the hoisting of three ensigns was an angry attempt to challenge a steamer of six guns to engage a frigate of forty, and she to windward!

H. M. Ship Furious fired upon at Odessa.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 12th.—The Banshee came in on Monday night from Beljik, near Cavarna, latest station of the British fleet in the Black Sea. Her Majesty's Ship Furious had been detached from the fleet at Beljik, and sent to Odessa, to take off the British Consul and 75 residents who are British subjects. The Furious arrived off Odessa at 6 o'clock on the morning of the 8th inst., and stopped at the distance of a mile and a half from the port. A boat was manned and placed under the command of Mr. Alexander, the third lieutenant of the Furious, with whom was Mr. Parsons, naval cadet. The boat hoisted a flag of truce, and entering the port in despite of the signals made to warn him off, Mr. Alexander gallantly determined to execute his commission, ran her on shore, where he was received by a crowd of Russian soldiers and other functionaries, who effectually resisted his landing. A dispute ensued, and the boat lay on the beach a considerable time. During this delay several captains of British merchantmen, now prisoners at Odessa, made their way through the crowd with the intention of speaking to the officer in command of the boat. They were rudely pulled back by the soldiery, who conducted them into the town. Finding at length that all his endeavours to obtain an interview with the officer in command of the place were unavailing, Mr. Alexander gave orders to pull back to the ship. But he had scarely quitted the port, when, it appears, the commandant of Odessa, having been apprised of the arrival of a British boat's crew with a flag of truce, orders were sent down to the harbour, and the strand batteries opened upon the boat and the ship, without doing harm to either, though they threw shot and shells. A frigate, too, came out of the harbour, and chased the boat, though without success, for Mr. Alexander and his crew got safe on board the Furious, which then tried to get near the Russian vessel. The Russian, who was unable to return to Odessa, ran away, and the Furious ran after her until the Russian took refuge in Cherson, where she went into shallow water, where the Furious could not follow her. The vessel returned to Beljik, and reported the affair to Admiral Dundas. She joined the fleet on Sunday morning, and in the afternoon came the Banshee, with the official news of the declaration of war. The fleet received this intelligence with the greatest enthusiasm. The sailors manned the yards, and gave three hearty cheers for Old England and the Queen. The Banshee, which returned to the Bosphorus, left the fleet at Beljik on Monday. The fleet itself was under orders to sail for Odessa early on the morning of Tuesday, the 11th inst., and by this time the Russians at Odessa will have been called to account for their gross violation of the rules of war among civilised nations.

WHISKEY AGAIN: INQUEST.—Complaint having been made, the other day, to Dr. Wanless, coroner, that a death had taken place in the north-west part of the Township of Williams, in this county, some time since, under very suspicious circumstances, he repaired thither, had the body exhumed, and held an inquest. The evidence went to show that several of the O'Henly's, McIntyre's, McKechnie's, and a large number of emigrants from the Island of Uist, who located in Williams some two or three years ago, had been drinking at a tavern, on the Centre Road, one evening; some wrestling ensued between the parties; the blood of the Islanders got up; clubs were readily seized: and one, Neil O'Henly, who has since fled, was seen by several witnesses to inflict a blow on the temples of the deceased, Catherine McIntyre, which felled her to the ground; she was taken home senseless, and lingered only a few days and died. A post-mortem examination was made by Dr. Peter Stewart of Lobo; he found a wound through the scalp, over the left temple, with fracture of the orbital plate of the frontal bone, fracture of the "key-bone" of the skull, with extensive disease of the brain itself, the result of the blow on the temples, and the cause of death. Verdict—"Willful Murder."—Prototype.

Defences of St. Petersburg.

From the seaside St. Petersburg is protected by the fortress of Cronstadt, which lying on an island commands the narrow channels through which large vessels have to approach the capital. At the back of the island, towards the coast of Finland, there was also a channel through which vessels of the size of a sloop could pass, but this was blocked up at the beginning of the century by means of piles and huge blocks of stone, and a week since large square stones were sunk until the passage was completely impossible. An attack on Cronstadt is therefore only possible from the narrow channel, which in its various twistings and turnings is commanded, for a distance of nearly four English miles, by the fort in front of the Island.

All signs, buoys, posts, &c., have been removed. Even if the vessels have the most experienced pilots on board, they will be obliged to move very slowly, and consequently a vessel advancing to the attack would be for a whole hour exposed to the fire of the Russian batteries, some of which have Paixhan's guns of 130 pounds. If a single ship of the line is sunk the channel is so effectually closed that the others cannot advance. Cursory mention has already been made of Professor Jacobi's invention for destroying vessels at sea, and the German writer now gives some details on the subject. Strong iron chests charged with powder and other combustibles are sunk in the sea, and connected by means of wires with a galvanic battery outside." Above the chests is some machinery, which on being touched by the keel of a passing vessel, causes two galvanized wires to come into contact, which produces an electric spark, and with it an explosion." A hundred sub-marine mines of this kind are said to have been sunk in the channel leading to Cronstadt. Military men in St. Petersburg are divided in their opinions as to whether the fortifications of Cronstadt will be able to resist the heavy artillery of the ships. Four of the forts are formed of immense granite cubes, the 5th is of logs. The greatest danger for Cronstadt is that these forts may be taken one after the other, as each of them will be exposed to the united fire of a great number of vessels. After all, the greatest security for the place is the narrowness of channel, which just at the entrance to the port, behind fort Mentchikoff, will be commanded by two enormous batteries, formed of old ships of the line. It must depend on the state of the ice whther it will be possible to send the two divisions of the fleet which are still at Cronstadt to Sweaborg (Helsingfors), which is considered impregnable. Gen. Dehu, of the engineers, has been appointed military Governor of Cronstadt, and Admiral Ricard, an old but energetic man commands the fleets.

Relations of Spain and the United States.

Correspondence of the London Times.

MADRID, Friday, April 21, 1854.

Mr. Soule is reported to have said that the settlement of the dispute with the United States would be greatly facilitated by the dismissal of the present Ministry; and, althongh I by no means vouch for the truth of this report, and although such a suggestion from a foreign envoy would be pretty sure, with so haughty and jealous a people as the Spamards, to defeat its own object, yet, should the dispute in question unfortunately lead to serious difficulties between the two countries, the early downfall of the Cabinet might be one of its earliest results.

Last night, in the saloon of an ex-minister, an idle report, which obtained no credit, of hostilities being imminent between Spain and the United States, brought on a discussion as to the probable consequences of such a struggle, especially as regards the island of Cuba. Its garrison of upwards of twenty thousand men, and the improvements that have been made in its fortifications since the attack of the Filibusteros, afford, in the opinion of the Spaniards, a sufficient guarantee for the safety of that possession in the event of a war with the United States. The troops there are now armed with Minie rifles, instead of the wretched flint muskets, upwards of twenty years old, which were their weapons at the piratical attempt above referred to. There are also Paixhan guns in the batteries of the island, and there is no reason to doubt that a stout defence would be made. But I incline to think that the Spaniards, although they may not possibly overate their own military value and means of defence, underrate the prowess of their anticipated enemies. They justly enough observe, that the successes of the Americans in their wars with the degenerate and undisciplined Mexicans are not to be taken as an argument that they would be equally successful in an attack on Cuba. At the same time they hardly take sufficiently into consideration the tenacious valor of the Anglo-Saxon race, the expert rifle practice of the Americans, and their abundance of wealth, the great element of success in war. To any but Spaniards there can scarcely be a shadow of doubt as to the fate of Cuba in case of a war between Spain and the States—supposing, of course, non-interference on the part of any powerful ally of the former country.

At the same time, America would not escape undamaged in a contest with this comparatively feeble country. The ocean would be quickly covered with privateers under Spanish colors, and American commerce would suffer greatly. And at the last moment, when all hope was lost, I fully believe that Spain would emancipate the slaves and abandon the island to them sooner than see its darling possession—the "Queen of the Antilles," for an easy prey and flourishing possession into the hands of the ambitious and encroaching Republic which gives it so much uneasiness. I infer this, at least, from the tenor of conversation here, and I doubt not that the Spaniards, their ingenuity stimulated by their defeat and spoliation, would find means to leave the island in such a state as to give the Americans a vast deal of trouble, even after the last European had quitted its shores. The more sensible men in this country admit that Cuba must sooner or later pass into the possession of the States; but they admit it with a feeling of infinite bitterness, and with a stubborn resolution that the change of owners shall occur as late as possible and the prize dearly bought by the conquerors.

Explosion of Rockets at Woolwich

The above casualty, at this moment, so calculated to excite apprehension in the public mind, took place at the Royal Arsenal on Good Friday, between ten and eleven o'clock.

It appeared from information collected from authentic sources, that two unfinished 24lb. rockets had exploded The accident first occurred in a compartment worked by a man named Parcott, and spread itself into the adjoining one, where a dockyard man named Newstead was at work. The men employed in the rocket-house rushed out in a state of terror, and Mr. Pickering, the master congreve rocket maker, arrived and found a portion of hhe building in flames. Considerable apprehension existed that the large barrows of rockets arranged by the men when finished, would ignite, and gangs were immediately set to work to remove them.

The engines of the arsenal were speedily and most efficiently worked by the military and men, aided by Mr. Inspector Gravestock and the dockyard police. A company of sappers and miners, under the direction of Colonel Walpole, also did good service. Colonel Wilson and the foreman of the dock men were present, encouraging and stimulating the men. In the space of fifteen minutes the devastating element was conquered.

Considerable fears were at first entertained for the men, numbering about fifty-nine, who were at work in the rocket-house, but after the tumult had subsided, it was happily found that neither life nor limb had been sacrificed. The cause of the accident is conjectured to be the overloading of Parrott's case; and the force of the explosion may be imagined when it is stated that the west side of the house was completely blown down. Several windows in the neighborhood were also demolished, and the report could be heard for miles distant.

A similar accident, it is stated, occurred about two years ago.

"We support ourselves, and in part, your schools, colleges, churches, your poorhouses, jails prisons, the army, navy, the whole machinery of government, and yet we have no voice in your councils. We have every qualification required by the constitution necessary to the legal voter, but the one of sex. We are moral, virtuous, and intelligent, and in all respects quite equal to the proud white man himself. We have guided great movements of charity, established missions, edited journals, published works on history, economy and statistics; have governed nations, led armies, filled the professor's chair; taught philosophy and mathematics to the savans of our age, discovered planets and piloted ships across the sea."

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him. Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon race, or any other of the one great human family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. WARD, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B GRIBBLE, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. THOMAS JAMES, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number.

MAY.

BY N. P. WILLIS.

Oh, the merry May has pleasant hours,
And dreamily they glide,
As if they floated like the leaves
Upon a silver tide.
The trees are full of crimson buds,
And the woods are full of birds,
And the waters flow to music,
Like a tune with pleasant words.

The verdure of the meadow-land
Is creeping to the hills,
The sweet, blue-bosomed violets
Are blowing by the rills;
The lilac has a load of balm
For every wind that stirs,
And the larch stands green and beautiful
Amid the sombre firs.

There's perfume upon every wind,
Music in every tree—
Dews for the moisture-loving flowers—
Sweets for the sucking bee;
The sick come forth for the healing South,
The young are gathering flowers,
And life is a tale of poetry,
That is told by golden hours.

If 'tis not a true philosophy,
That the spirit, when set free,
Still lingers about its olden home,
In the flower and the tree,—
'Tis very strange that our pulses thrill
At the sight of a voiceless thing,
And our hearts yearn so with tenderness
In the beautiful time of Spring.

Letty.

Did you ever l ear of an intelligence office? Well, its a place where servant girls go to hear of families who wish to hire help.—They pay the man who keeps the office something, and then he finds a place where they can work and earn money.

In one of these offices, one pleasant summer morning, twenty or more servant girls were seated—some of them modest looking and tidily dressed, others bold and slatternly.

Wedged among them in a dark corner, was a little girl about thirteen years old.—Her face was pale, and her features, which were small and delicate, were half hidden by her thick black hair. Her little hands were small and white, and from under her dress (which had evidently been made for some one else, as it was much too long and too wide for her,) peeped as cunning a little pair of feet as you ever saw.

Little Letty—for that was her name—looking frightened and distressed. She had never been in such a place before; and it made her cheeks very hot to have those rude girls stare at her so. Then, the air of the room was very close, and made her head ache badly; and she felt afraid that nobody would hire her, because she was so little. Her mother had died only a week before, and Letty had a drunken father,—so, you see, that, young as she was, she had to earn her own bread and butter.

By-and-by, a woman came in. Some could, I suppose, call her a lady, as she had on a silk dress, and a great many shining chains and pins. Letty's mother was a lady, although she was poor. She had sweet, gentle manners, and soft, low voice. Letty did not like Mrs. Finley's looks; she wore too many bows and flounces; and then her voice was loud and harsh, and her forehead had an ugly frown on it, that didn't go away even when she smiled and tried to look gracious. No, Letty didn't like her, and she almost hoped she wouldn't take a fancy to her, much as she needed a place to live in.

But Mrs. Finley liked Letty's looks; so she sailed across the room, with her six flounces, and asked her so many questions, in such a loud voice, that Letty was quite bewildered; then she heard her say to Mr. Silas Skinflint, who kept the office, that she would take her, and that it was a very nice thing that her mother was dead, for mothers were always bothering.

"Very nice that her mother was dead!" Poor, little, desolate Letty couldn't bear that. She laid her little face in her hands, and began to sob pitifully; but Mr. Skinflint tapped her on the shoulder with his cane, and told her that nobody would hire a cry-baby; so Letty sat up straight, and choked her tears down, and at a signal from Mr. Skinflint took up her little bundle and followed Mrs Finley.

On she went, past a great many fine shops and fine houses, Letty keeping close behind her. Letty's head felt quite giddy, and she was very faint, for her naughty father had gone off, and poor Letty had no breakfast that morning.

After turning a great many squares, Mrs. Finley went down a very narrow street, where a great many noisy, dirty children were playing on the sidewalks—where a great many women were leaning (on their red elbows) out of the windows, and a great many coarse, rough men were sitting on the steps, smoking pipes in their shirt sleeves.

At one of these houses Mrs. Finley stopped, and Letty followed her up the steps through the entry, and into the parlor. A table stood in the middle of the floor, covered with dirty breakfast dishes, where myriads of flies were making a meal. A little baby with a pink nose and bald head, was playing on the floor, with a head-brush and a skillet; while a boy about Letty's age was mopping out a sugar-bowl with his fingers, and two little girls, in yellow pantalettes and pink dresses, were trying to hide away a dress cap of their mother's, which they had been cutting up for their dollies. On a side table were Mr. Finley's "shaving things," a dirty dicky, and sundry little bits of paper with floating islands of soapsuds, left there by his razor.

"Well—here we are at last," said Mrs. Finley, fanning herself with a great newspaper

"You know, Letty, there's plenty to do here."

"Now I'm going up stairs, to put on a calico long short, and take a nap; and you are to wash these dishes, and put them in the closet; clear away the table; sweep the room and dust it; wash these children's faces, and keep them quiet; put some water in the teakettle, and set it boiling; tend the door, and keep a good look out for the milkman.

"Ma'am?" said Letty, looking bewildered.

"M-a-'a-m"—mocked Mrs. Finley, "where are your ears, child? let's see if I can find 'em," and she gave Letty's little ear a smart pull.

"Please, ma'am, it is all so new to me," said Letty, trying to keep from crying; "will you please to tell me where to find the broom to sweep with, or the water to wash the dishes, and which closet I am to put them in, and where's the towel to wipe the children's faces?"

"Oh—my—senses!" said Mrs. Finley, "what a little fool,—use your eyes a little more and your tongue less, and you'll find things, I guess, and now let me see every thing right end up when I come down stairs. Do you hear?"

"Yes, ma'am," and Letty, drawing a long sigh as Mrs. Finley closed the door.

"Came from the poor house, didn't you?" said Master John Finley, cracking a whip over Letty's head. "We'll, I'm glad yo've come here at any rate; I havn't known what to do with myself all vacation. It will be prime fun I'm thinking, to tease you, you little scared rabbit; and I'll tell you, to begin with, that my name is Mr. John Finley, and that I'm my mother's pet, and that whatever I say is pretty likely to be done in this house;—so you'd better be careful and keep on the right side of me," said the wicked boy, as he gave her arm a knock, and sent the waiter of dishes out of her hand upon the floor.

"Oh! Master John," said Letty: "see what you have done—oh!"—and Letty wrung her little white hands.

"See what I've done?" said John. "I like that, Miss Letty, or Hetty or whatever you call yourself; but what's that string round your neck for?—what's on the end of it, hey?—and he gave it a rude twitch, snapped it in two, and picked up a little locket that Letty wore in her bosom.

"Oh, Master John," said Letty, "give it back, do,—it's all I have to make me happy now—my mamma gave it to me when she died. She used to wear it once when she was rich. Oh, Master John, don't please, take it away from me," "Look here! cry-baby," said John putting the locket into his jacket pocket, "you'll never see that locket again. I shall say, too, that you broke all those dishes, and if you contradict it, I'll take the locket to a police-man, and tell him you stole it. Won't you look pretty going to jail with your long black curls?—Answer me that, Miss Hetty Letty?"

Letty only answered by her sobs.

"What's all this?" said Mrs. Finley, opening the door; "one might as well try to sleep in Bedlam. Merciful man! who broke all those dishes. John Madison Harrison Polk! who broke all these dishes, I say?"

"I told her she'd catch it, mother, when you came down," said John; "see if she dare deny it?"

"Letty," said Mrs. Finley, seizing her by the shoulders and giving her a shake, "did you break the breakfast set?"

Letty thought of John, and the policeman, and the jail, and was silent.

"John," said Mrs. Finley, "go bring me your father's horse-whip from behind the kitchen door."

"Oh, Mrs. Finley," said Letty, growing very white about the mouth, and trembling violently all over; "don't whip me, my mamma never whipped me. Oh, mamma—mamma!"

Down came the heavy whip on Letty's fair head and shoulders;—"There—take that, and that, and that! "said Mrs. Finley, "and remember that I didn't take you into my house to quarrel with my children, and break up my dishes; and now take yourself up into the dark garret, and get into bed, and don't get up till Mr. Finley comes home to dinner, and let's see if he can manage you."

Letty pushed her hair from before her eyes, and staggered to the door; then up the stairs where they told her, into the garret; then, she laid her head on the pillow; but she didn't cry—no—not even when she thought of her mamma—the tears wouldn't come; but her head was very hot and her hands burning. There she lay, hour after hour, talking to herself about a great many things; and had it been light enough you would have seen how flushed her cheeks were, and how very strangely her eyes looked.

"The child has the brain fever," said the Doctor to Mrs. Finley.

"No wonder," said the wicked woman, "she had such a dreadful fall down the cellar stairs. You see how she bruised her face and neck."

The Doctor looked very sharp at Mrs. Finley—so sharp that she stooped down, pretending to pick something from the floor so that he needn't see her blush.

"I don't know how I'm to nurse a sick child," grumbled Mrs. Finley; "there's John Madison, Harrison Polk, and Sarah Jenny Lind, and Malvina Cecelia Victoria, and Napoleon Bonaparte, four children of my own to look after. It's a hard case, Doctor."

"Not so hard a case as little Letty's," said the kind Doctor. "Those bruises never came from falling down stairs, Mrs. Finley; that child has been cruelly abused. I may tell of it, and I may not,—that depends upon whether she lives or dies; but I am going to take her home to my own house and see what good doctoring can do for her. She looks like my little dead Mary, and for her sake I'll be a father to her."

So Letty was carried on a litter to Doctor Harris's house and there for a great many weeks she lay in her little bed quite crazy—her beautiful hair shaved off, and her little head blistered to make her well.—The Doctor's wife was a sweet, kind lady—she thought, too, that "Letty looked like her little dead Mary," and, often when she held her little burning hand, the tears would come to her eyes, and she would pray God to let her live, for she had no child to love now, and she wanted Letty for her own little girl.

Well, after a long, long while, Letty's senses came slowly back. She put her little hand to her forehead and tried to remember what had happened;—she didn't know what to make of the nice, pretty room, and soft bed with its silken curtains;—she thought she was dreaming, and rubbed her eyes and looked again, and then hid her face in the sheet for fear she should see Mrs. Finley, or John, or the policeman;—and then Mrs. Harris put her finger on Letty's lip and told her not to talk now, because she was sick and weak, but that she was going to live with her, and be, not her servant, but her own dear little girl; and then Letty kissed Mrs. Harris's hand, and shut her eyes, and went to sleep as quietly as if she were on her mother's bosom.

By-and-by, little by little, she got strong and well again; her cheeks grew plump and rosy; her hair came out in little black curls all over her head, and she was just the happiest little girl—as happy as you are when you climb on your mother's lap, and kiss her, as if you never wanted to stop.

She had a little room of her own, close by her new mother's, with a cunning little bed and washstand, and bureau, and rocking chair. She had plenty of play things, too,—(not little Mary's, for mother's can't give away their little children's playthings when they are dead. Letty had playthings of her own—but sometimes, Mrs. Harris would unlock a little trunk, and show her a little cake all dried up, with marks of tiny little teeth in it; and a slate on which was a word left unfinished by little Mary; and a little chest of doll's clothes, with such nice little womanly stitches in them; and a little fairy thimble; and then the tears would fall into the trunk as she locked it up again, and then Letty would throw her arms about her neck, and say, "Don't cry—Letty loves you."

And now, my little darling readers, there is one verse in the Bible which Aunt Fanny wants you to remember; it is this:

"When thy father and thy mother forsake thee, then the Lord will take thee up."
—Little Ferns for Fanny's little Friends.

PRIZE ODE,

Sung at the re-inauguration of the Crystal Palace, New York, May 14, 1854.

BY WILLIAM ROSS WALLACE.

Lo! the transitory darkness
From our Palace floats away:
Lo! the glorious gems of Genius
Glitter in the rising day.

See again the mighty Nations
Meet and clasp each other's palms,
And by Labor's glowing altar
Lift on high according psalms.

Here behold the true Evangel!
Not from War may Earth increase!
God has stamped his shining patent
Only on the brow of Peace.

Only by the arm of Labor,
Swinging to Invention's chime,
Can the Nations build their Eden
In the wilderness of Time.

Nations! hear that mighty music
Rolling through the mountain-bars—
Planting deserts, bridging oceans,
Marrying the choral stars:

Telling that our Crystal Palace
Glorifies the joyous sod—
Making Man, with Art and Nature,
Worthy of the Builder—God!

Nations! then rejoice that darkness
From our Palace floats away,
And the glowing gems of Genius
Glitter in the light of day!

The Unfortunate Banker.

The whole morale of our doubting, unbelieving century, has been developed to our gaze in all its hideous nakedness, by the events to which the recent failures in Paris and the fluctuations of the Bourse have given rise. The great failure, of which so much has been said, has ended in the total deroute of the firm, after the most manly struggle ever recorded in the commercial annals of any country. The principal partner, whose name is connected with the historical records of France for many centuries—whose ancestors, in the middle ages, bore the banner of St. Louis before the French kings, finding himself a beggar, through the ill-judged speculations of the other members of the firm, suffered himself to be overcome with despair, and on retiring from the meeting at which the dreadful truth of the inevitable bankruptcy was made known to him, he went home, locked himself up in his study for many hours, refusing to see any member of his family, or to obey any summons; he had given one order to the servant on entering, that of lighting a fire on the hearth; and this order, as the day was oppressively warm, excited some little astonishment.

About midnight he called his son, in order to bid him farewell, telling him that he was about to join the King, his master, in order to consult with him upon the best method of meeting the difficulties in which they stood both involved by the failure of the house. In vain did the son urge the uselessness of the journey, as the Count de Chambord had already in the most generous manner not only consented to the loss of the most important sums confided to the credit of the house, but assisted most largely, and to the full extent of his power, by large remittances the day before, made in the vain attempt to save his friends from ruin; the poor duke insisted on departing immediately for Paris, where he intended to sleep, in order to be in time for the earliest train on the morrow.

There was something, however, in the duke's behavior, and in the solemnity of his farewell, which struck the young man as somewhat extraordinary. He gazed around, and saw that his father's bureau had been much disturbed, letters were strewn about, and the hearth bore trace of the destruction of many papers. He remembered that in the journey to Frohsdorf, which his father had been in the habit for some years of taking upon business with the Court there, this was the first time he had judged it necessary to take such solemn farewell for so short an absence as that incurred, and a terrible suspicion shot through his mind concerning his father's intentions. He followed him out across the park; he beheld him in the moonlight take the pathway over the grass, not that which led to the gate opening on the road; and hurrying after him, with all his worst suspicions confirmed, arrived close behind him as he plunged into the running stream which flows through the grounds. The youth threw himself headlong after him, and although the rapidity of the current had borne his father's senseless form already some distance down the river, he managed to drag him to the bank. The unhappy man was thus rescued from death, but at present great fears are entertained of his return to reason. The one idee fixe of disgrace and ruin has taken possession of his mind, and the doctors declare that some time must elapse before it can be restored to its former state.—Paris Correspondent of the Atlas.

TITLES IN THE TURKISH EMPIRE.—The frequent use of the words Sultan, Porte, &c., in the newspapers publishing accounts of affairs in Turkey at the present time, are erroneously understood by many persons.

The Sublime Porte is the official title of the Government of the Ottoman Empire, and not the title of any officer of the government, as many suppose it to be.

The Ottoman Emperor is called Sultan, or Grand Sultan, or Grand Seignior, according to the fancy of the person speaking or writing. They all mean the same thing.

Pacha is the governor of a province, and according to the importance of his province he is distinguished by one or two or three tails. Every Pacha has his own army in his own province, distinct from the grand army of the Empire. A Pacha with three tails has he power to punish with death any agent who seems to threaten the general safety.

The Divan is the Council of State, and consists of the principal ministers.

The Reis Effendi is high chancellor of the Empire, and stands at the head of all the body of attorneys—which body is thought to contain the best informed men of the nation.

Cadi is a sort of judge, or justice of the peace. To order the bastinado on common people, to impose a fine on a rich Greek or European, to condemn a thief to be hanged, is about all the duty of an ordinary Cadi.—Boston Transcript.

SPANISH DEGRADATION.—Those who have never travelled in Spain, or who are little acquainted with the manners and customs of the country, have an idea that all Spaniards are grave and formal, like the Castilian. This, however, is far from being the case. The people of each province are almost as distinct as different nations, having manners and customs, dress and dialect, peculiar to themselves. This peculiarity is doubtless owing to the isolation of the different provinces by the chain of mountains which intersect the peninsula, and cut off intercommunication, as well as the fact that for ages these provinces formed separate and distinct kingdoms. The rude, boorish Gallacian; the industrious Catalan; the idle, jovial Andalusian; the sly, vindintive Valencian; and the grave, dignified sons of Castillo, differ from each other as much as the inhabitants of distinct nations. In travelling over this beautifvl country, apon which nature has lavished her choicest favors, and which, under the rule of the Romans and Moors, was a land flowing wiht milk and honey, the tourist is struck with the scenes of desolation that everywhare meet the view. He roams over wild unpeopled wastes, treeless and arid, where the melancholy picture is often heightened by ruined castles and villages, the signs of former prosperity passed away. The towns through which he passes, are too often the abodes of poverty and wretchedness, and an air of gloom and sadness pervades their silent streets. The sea-ports have lost their former commercial importance, and the silent quays, once thronged by a busy croud attest the decayed condition of the land. And wherefore, it may be asked, is this poverty, desolation and wretchedness so visible to a country which possesses advantages unsurpassed by any in Christendom; where the bowels of the earth yield precious metals, coal and quarries of innumerable varieties of marble; in fine, with a position most favourable in commerce, and a line of sea coast abounding in fine harbors? Yes, wherefore is this beautiful and once flourishing land so fallen—her people so sunk in ignorance, and so far behind every other civilized nation in arts and agriculture The answer may be found in these words—bad government!—Travels in Spain.

CAMELS ON THE DESERTS.—Much has been siad, first and last, within a few years, upon the practicability of introducing the camel upon the plains lying between the Mississippi and the Pacific, which are traversed annually by great caravans of emigrants. A bill has been introduced in the legislature, to incorporate a company to test this matter. "Sentinel" of the Courier and Enquirer, says: "Mr. King, son of Charles King, Mr. Webb, the distinguished author and naturalist, and Mr Grangray, are named as incorporators in the bill to incorporate the American Camel Company—the object of the incorporation being to introduce tnto this country to be used between the Atlantic and Pacific, this useful beast—to give the tinkle of the camel bells to the solitudes of the desert and the plains."—*Roch. SINGULARITIES OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.—"Your language," says a learned philologist, in speaking of English, "is the most unphilosophical, and yet the most practical in the world." We become familiar with contradictory modes of expression, and do not notice them as do children and foreigners. When we sand the floor, we cast sand upon it, but when we dust the furniture, we remove dust from it. When we paint the house, we lay something on; but when we skin the ox we take something off. We dress a child by overlaying it, and scale a shad by removing that by which it is overlaid. If it be proper to say, "skin the ox," why is it not proper ts speak of woolling the sheep instead of shearing it? What should we think of a farmer who should talk of corning or grassing his fields, or appleing his orchard, or of his wife who should speak of feathering her geese, or backing her knives, or dirting the clothes? But we do that which is equally ridiculous when we speak of dusting the furniture, skinning the ox, and scaling the fish, although custom has sanctioned those modes of expression, and Noah Webster recorded them in his dictionary.

SALT FOR PLUM TREES.—The application of salt for plum trees has been found very beneficial by Dr. Shurtleff, a correspondent of the N. E. Farmer. He says: "For many years I have salted my plum trees and had large crops of fruit, but last winter I omitted to salt the trees, excepting three, and the consequence was I had no plums excepting on the trees that I salted." He thinks the only sure way to get a crop of plums, is to put about four quarts of salt to each tree, in a circle one foot from the trunk, any time in January or February, without regard to snow being on the ground.

TO WASH CARPETS.—Shake and beat well; lay it upon the floor and tack it firmly; then with a clean flannel wash it over with one quart of bullock's gall, mixed with three quarts of cold soft water, and rub it off with a clean flannel or housecloth. Any particular dirty spot should be rubbed with pure gall.

STEPHENSON, THE GREAT ENGINEER.—George Stephenson, the celebrated engineer, whose statue now stands in the Euston station, London, was in early life a collier, working for his daily bread in the bowels of the earth. In his leisure hours he mendedwatches, so that his son might have the blessings of an education. While his fame as a mechanical and civil engineer was still in its infancy, he elaborated experimentally, the same results as to the safety lamp, Sir Humphrey Davy reached by the process of philosophical induction. The tramways of the coal mines and the rude forms of the first locomotive engines grew under the strokes of his vigorous intelect into a mighty system. By combining the gas pipe with the tubular boiler, he first endowed the locomotive with its tremendons speed. During his busy manhood he superintended the construction of more than 2,500 miles of railway, and thought out everything connected with the iron highways—engineering lines extending in unbroken series from London to Edinburgh.

GRAFTING WAX.—One of the most sucessful grafters we know makes the grafting wax of two parts of rosin and one part of beeswax adding a small quantity of lard or tallow—say one third that of beeswax. His object is, to make his wax of such consistency that it will not run in warm weather, and will not crack in windy weather. These are important qualities in grafting wax, of whatever it may be made —Country Gentleman.

Resolved, That in establishing a National Council for our own special improvement, and a Manual Labor School for the education of our children in science, literature and mechanical arts, this Convention do this, not to build ourselves up as a distinct and separate class in this country, but as a means to a great end, viz: the equality in political rights, and in civil and social privileges with the rest of the American people.

THE GOSPEL TRIBUNE.

PROSPECTUS.

The first number of a monthly paper, to be known as above indicated, is proposed to be published in Toronto within a few months, and not later than the First day of July, 1854. The work in size and appearance, to be at least equal to the Missionary Record or Christian Observer; and as much superior to either in style and execution as the subscription list will warrant.

DISTINCTIVE OBJECT:

To enlarge the limits of Communion and Church-Membership, among Christians, to the greatest possible extent; and to circumscribe those bounds to the exclusion, if possible, of all other characters, without otherwise disturbing the Membership of existing Churches; till acknowledged Christian Character shall constitute the only passport, at any time, and the perfect passport at all times, to every Communion and Church worthy of the Christian name; "that the world may believe" in Christ, even as he prayed.

GENERAL OBJECTS:

The promotion of Religious, Moral, Intellectual and [social improvement, under the guidance of Divine Revelation, submitting every move and measure to the test of Gospel Principles.

SUPPORTERS:

The distinctive and general objects of the work are such, as to claim for it the patronage of all classes of men, excepting those wedded to other pre-requisites of Communion and Church-membership, than acknowledged Christian Character; and here it is recorded with great pleasure that the encouragements tendered, thus far, are in strict accordance with the above general claims.

ORIGIN AND PROGRESS:

This movement has long been contemplated. For twenty years the subscriber has made the distinctive object of the GOSPEL TRIBUNE his special study: examining carefully and personally the denominational aspect of Religious Societies,—their reciprocal bearings, their mutual relations, and the nature of their combined influence on the evangelization of the world. Latterly, his position as Publisher of the SCRIPTURE MANUAL, has probably afforded him the best possible facilities for personally testing the strength his positions, and for the attainment of certain important information, but little of which he had previously been able to obtain. All may rest assured, however, that no undue advantage will ever be taken of the frankness and candor with which Christians of every name, as well as skeptics of every class, have freely expressed their convictions in the presence of the Travelling Colporteur; the capacity in which the Publisher is still extending his observations through Canada and the neighboring States.

CO-LABORERS:

Of distinguished worth and of well-known literary ability, are already secured in the several sections of Canada, and in the States of the American Union; and arrangements are now in progress, to obtain from living responsible writers in Britain, important assistance in the development of the TRIBUNE'S Mission.

TERMS AND NOTICES:

The Terms are One Dollar per Annum in advance,—otherwise Two Dollars; it being found that one half of the Subscriptions, not paid in advance, are worse than lost. Editors—friendly—will render assistance by noticing this Prospectus. All parties willing to aid, may at once commence soliciting the names of Subscribers. Two books—the Scripture and Laconic Manuals—fully gilt, and the Paper one year, will be forwarded to the person who first sends the names of ten Subscribers; and one of either of the books, in substantial leather binding, or the Paper one year, to every one who sends ten names. Subscriptions and all other communications for the Paper to be sent, post-paid, marked Money, (if inclosed) and addressed, ROBERT DICK, BOX 411, TORONTO.

Sermons and Lectures, promotive of the TRIBUNE'S object, will be delivered by the Publisher throughout the Province as frequently as shall be found compatible with his other duties.

(Signed) ROBERT DICK.

CALL FOR A NATIONAL EMIGRATION CONVENTION OF COLORED MEN,

To be held in Cleveland, Ohio, on the 24th, 25th and 26th of August, 1854.

MEN AND BRETHERN:—The time has now fully come, when we, as an oppressed people, should do something effectively, and use those means adequate to the attainment of the great and long desired end—to do something to meet the actual demands of the present and prospective necessities of the rising generation of our people in this country. To do this, we must occupy a position of entire equality, of unrestricted rights, composing in fact, an acknowledged necessary part of the ruling element of society in which we live. The policy necessary to the preservation of this element must be in our favor, if ever we expect the enjoyment, freedom, sovereignty, and equality of rights anywhere. For this purpose, and to this end, then, all colored men in favor of emigration out of the United States, and opposed to the American Colonization sheme of leaving the Western Hemisphere, are requested to meet in CLEVELAND, OHIO, on TUESDAY, the 24th DAY of AUGUST, 1854, in a great NATIONAL CONVENTION, then and there, to consider and decide upon the great and important subject of emigration from the United States.

No person will be admitted to a seat in the Convention, who would introduce the subject of emigration to the Eastern Hemisphere—either to Asia, Africa, or Europe—as our object and determination is to consider our claims to the West Indies, Central and South America, and the Canadas. This restriction has no reference to personal preference, or individual enterprise; but to the great question of national claims to come before the Convention.

All persons coming to the Convention must bring credentials properly authenticated, or bring verbal assurance to the Committee on Credentials—appointed for the purpose—of their fidelity to the measures and objects set forth in this Call as the Convention is specifically by and for the friends of emigration, and NONE OTHERS—and no opposition to them will be entertained.

The question is not whether our condition can be bettered by emigration, but whether it can be made worse. If not, then, there is no part of the wide-spread universe, where our social and political condition are not better than here in our native country, and nowhere in the world as here, proscribed on account of color.

We are friends, too, and ever will stand shoulder to shoulder by our brethren, and all our friends in all good measures adopted by them for the bettering of our condition in this country, and surrender no rights but with our last breath; but as the subject of emigration is of vital importance, and has ever been shunned by all delegated assemblages of our people as heretofore met, we cannot longer delay, and will not be further baffled; and deny the right of our most sanguine friend or dearest brother, to prevent an intelligent enquiry to, and the carrying out of these measures, when this can be done, to our entire advantage, as we propose to show in Convention—as the West Indies, Central and South America—the majority of which are peopled by our brethren, or those identified with us in race, and what is more, destiny, on this continent—all stand with open arms and yearning hearts, importuning us in the name of suffering humanity to come—to make common cause, and share one common fate on the continent.

The Convention will meet without fail, at the time fixed for assembling, as none but those favorable to emigration are admissable; therefore no other gathering may prevent it. The number of delegates will not be restricted—except in the town where the Convention may be held—and there the number will be decided by the Convention when assembled, that they may not too far exceed the other delegations.

The time and place fixed for holding the Convention are ample; affording sufficient time, and a leisure season generally—and as Cleveland is now the centre of all directions—a good and favorable opportunity to all who desire to attend.—Therefore, it may reasonably be the greatest gathering of the colored people ever before assembled in a Convention in the United States.

Colonizationists are advised, that no favors will be shown to them or their expatriating scheme, as we have no sympathy with the enemies of our race.

All colored men, East, West, North and South, favorable to the measures set forth in this Call will send in their names (post-paid) to M. R. Delany, or Rev. Wm. Webb, Pittsburgh, Pa., that there may be arranged and attached to the Call, five names from each State.

We must make an issue, create an event, and establish a position for ourselves. It is glorious to think of, but far more glorious to carry out.

Agricultural.

Homestead of the Thrifty Farmer.

What an attractive home it is! What an air of neatness and comfort pervades the buildings; every board is tight, and every door swings true in its place. No broken windows or dangling gates, no old pots or pans, no old carts and wheels, mar the general appearance of order which prevails. What an animated scene the foreground presents! How stout and sleek are the horses—how vigorous the men—how appropriate the implements they are using! Children reared and educated in such a home, will carry out influences with them to make the world a better and a happier one. And then, to adopt the language of the Pennsylvania Farm Journal, the provident and thrifty farmer has three rules for regulating his business, which he observes himself and forces on those around him, viz., to do everything in the right time, convey everything to its proper use, and put everything in its proper place.

He buys only the improved breeds of cattle, horses, sheep and swine, and keeps no more than he can keep well either in summer or winter.

He always drives on his work, and never lets his work drive him.

His animals are never under fed or over worked.

His out-houses, wood-shed, poultry-house, pig-pen, wagon-house, spring-house, and corn-crib, are nicely white-washed or painted on the outside, and kept clean and neat within.

He has a tool-house, and a place for every tool in it, which may be wanted for any ordinary farm purposes, such as mending implements, making axe, or hoe, or fork handles, &c., and also for stowing carefully away, such truck as will not be wanted for another season.

He has sheds round his barn-yard, to protect his cattle from the weather, and warm, well-ventilated stables for his cows and young stock, and also a cellar or shed, to protect his manure heap.

He has leaves or other refuse vegetable matter, together with soil from his headlands, convenient to his barn-yard, to compost with his manure heap, through the winter.

He does not allow the liquid manure to escape into the nearest stream, a quarter or half a mile from his barn-yard.

His barn, and sheds, and dwellings are all supplied with good spouting.

His fences are always in good order, and material for repairing or renewal, are collected and made during winter.

His wood shed is supplied with wood, cut in August, always one year ahead.

His wife never scolds, because she never has occasion to.

Her cellar and pantry are always supplied with the needful raw material, which she works up into a palatable form, to fill up vacuums at meal times.

Heavy bread, cold buckwheat cakes, and rancid butter are novelties which her gudeman and the children have heard tell of by some of the neighbors, but have never seen.

When a friend or two calls to lodge, a plate of good ripe Rambo apples, a pitcher of milk, and a dish of boiled chestnuts, are brought for discussion around the stove of an evening.

He considers it a duty to promote the circulation of agricultural papers, and has saved himself some hundreds of dollars by following their advice.

His crops are always equal, and often better than any in the neighborhood, and are kept clear of weeds.

He watches the markets, and sells his crops at the highest prices.

He makes it a rule always to spend a little less than he makes.

Himself and wife are both industrious, the children are brought up in the same way, and are not allowed to shoot the birds, smoke cigars or chew tobacco.

He buys and sells on the cash principle, and thus saves himself from losses and bad debts.

He has a large fruit orchard, well supplied with every variety of fruit to ripen in succession.

He studies the theory as well as the practice of farming, has cleared off the last $100 dollars of mortgage, and is seriously talking of making a bid for his neighbor Sloven's farm, which is up at sheriff's sale.

He goes to church on the Sabbath, minds his religious duties, and brings up his children to do the same, lives respected, and dies regretted, as a useful man and good christian.

Rev. Mr. Bronson, of Prairie du Chien, says, that a tea of black ash bark will cure the bite of a mad dog, or of poisonous reptiles.

From the Ohio Cultivator

Experiments in Grasses —Orchard Grass.

Mr. Editors:—I wish to give, through your paper, my experience in raising grasses generally, and orchard grass in particular.—My farm is composed of a diversity of soils, mostly rolling side-hill land, of a light black soil, the timber of which was mostly sugar maple, white and blue ash, hickory and black walnut; the high land is of white clay soil, and white oak timber. I bought here in 1826, and commenced on 75 acres, and having been reared in Kenebec county, in the State of Maine, my farming experience and predilections were mostly in the grass line.

My farm had been run in corn, until almost entirely run down. I commenced sowing timothy and clover, but soon found that clover in this climate, was more cost than profit. Timothy by reaping and saving the seed, and then mowing the bottom for hay, made a good profit. I then procured one bushel of orchard grass seed, and sowed the same on an acre of land, as an experiment. It took well, and yielded about thirty bushels of seed yearly, for a number of years; worth, at that time, about two dollars per bushel. I soon found that the hay and fall and winter pasture of the orchard grass, was far superior to timothy or clover, or any other grass to my knowledge. I have continued raising it ever since, and prefer it to any other grass on all rich black land.

As profits are criterion of economy, I will state that my crop of orchard grass, last season, yielding average of 25 bushels per acre, and the bottom being cut for hay after the tops were harvested, have gone one and a half tons of hay per acre. Then in September, one and a half tons of second crop per acre were taken off from a part and the balance pastured. Seed last year sold for $1,15 per bushel; hay is worth $10 per ton; at the above prices, 25 bushels of seed, and three tons of hay, amount to $58,75 per acre.—The tops after the seed has been threshed off, make good feed for young cattle, and with the winter pasture, fully pays all expenses.—I keep my land in grass about four years out of seven, on an average, but have one field that has been in orchard grass ten years, and yields as well as ever.

I sow orchard grass seed in the spring with any kind of spring grain; sow after the first harrowing, then cross harrow and roll the same. One bushel, of 14 lbs. of seed, is required to the acre. If sown in woodland, three-fourths of a bushel is sufficient to the acre. Wood land ought to be sown in March, and harrowed in. I know by experience, that it will take possession, and make a sod, in the thickest wood land in this country, and keep possession in the ground longer than any other grass—will also take possession and hold it in fence corners, mastering the weeds after the first season. It starts early in the spring, and the seed matures about the 20th of June. The second crop starts immediately after the first is removed, and may be mowed three times in a wet season. If wanted for winter pasturage, let the second crop remain until December, when it will be knee high and thick, and continue green underneath nearly all winter, and will winter well, one head to the acre.

My manner of saving the seed is, to reap if heavy, or cradle if light, bind and shock, immediately. Shock by standing ten sheaves together, and bind a strong double band around the shock, drawing the heads tightly together; then mow the bottoms, and remove the hay, taking care not to disturb the shocks, as the seed shells out on the slightest movement. Let the shocks remain in the field two or three weeks, then haul into the barn, and store on the threshing floor. Take care to pitch the whole shock on the wagon at one time, to avoid waste of seed.

Now, I assure you, that orchard grass is no humbug, and if farmers would substitute it for clover, they would be the gainers. It has more fertilizing qualities than either clover or timothy; having a strong root, and making a stiff sod, which, when ploughed under, tends to enrich the land, and makes it mellow and light for a number of years.—Like clover, it has an early and late growth, but unlike clover, it does not cause hoven in cattle in the spring, nor slabbers in the fall; and the second crop keeps green all winter, while clover dies the first frost. It gives no rancid or disagreeable taste to the milk or butter, and horses, cattle, sheep and hogs are more fond of feeding on it than any other grass.

Yours truly,
J. MARSTON.

Planting Small Potatoes.

We have given no little attention to this subject for many years, and have settled the matter conclusivly in our own minds, that it does not pay to plant small feed. For fifteen years we planted the same nameless variety on the same soil, and at the end of that time found no deterioration in the quantity or yield, but rather an improvement. We have invariably thrown out from our seed all potatoes less in size than a hen's egg, and also rejected those overgrown, pithy, or irregular shaped.

In some favorable seasons, and on particular soils, those purchasing and planting the small potatoes that we have rejected, have raised crops equal to or more prolific than our own; but one year with another, we have averaged thirty to fifty per cent. better crops of good potatoes, than our small potato neighbors.

What we have have found true in regard to potatoes, we have also, by long practise, proved true in regard to other kinds of seed. Our plumpest and earliest grain have always been reserved for propagation, and our neighbors can testify that our practice has been attended with good results.—American Agriculturist.

Keep off the Grass.—All round the walks of our city parks we see posted up in flaming capitals, "Keep off the Grass." We should like to see one of those placards put near every farmer's cattle yard at this season with a little alteration, so that it would read, "keep the cattle off the grass." It is a pretty sure sign of bad management, if animals are seen running over the fields, before the grass is so forward as to furnish abundance of food. So long as they are kept entirely away from tasting green food, animals will not lose their relish for dry. But let them out for a few hours, or suffer them to crop by the way side as they are driven to and from water, and for hours after they will scarcely touch their dry food.

Trampling on the field before the ground has become thoroughly settled, is very detrimental to the future growth of grass. The first shoots are tender and are easily killed, while they contain little nourishment compared with an equal weight or bulk of more advanced growth. It is economical to purchase dry food for a week or two longer, and and let vegetation get a good start before an animal sets foot upon it.

The Anti-Slavery Movement and the Dissolution of the Union.

BY RICHARD HILDRETH, ESQ.

It is in vain that Southern oppressors console themselves with ideas of the insignificance of those who make the first assault.—They may ridicule them as fools, fanatics, women. What of that? Does the result of an attack depend upon the prudence or the wisdom of those who have volunteered for the folorn hope? What matter who or what they are, those who rush blindly and devotedly upon the open-mouthed cannon, the levelled bayonets of the enemy? They are but food for powder, and they know it. In every great cause, it is necessary that some should perish. But if the cause be great, for one that falls, ten will be found ambitious to suffer!

It is in vain we at the North cry out, that the contest is unseasonable and premature. It has begun; it must go on. Grant that over-zealous and fanatical haste has precipitated a struggle which we would gladly have deferred, and slumbering out our own time in quiet, have thrust upon the days of our children. No matter. In this thing we cannot have our way. The trumpet has sounded; the bold and unquiet are rushing to the field. We may cry peace, peace,—but there is no peace. Fight we must, upon one side or the other. The contest is begun already, and will soon become general. In such a struggle, there can be no neutrality. It is time to be choosing under which banner we will stand!

To every one at the North, Democracy is to some extent familiar. Many have doubtless viewed it through a deceptive medium, and have seen it only as it has been reflected by ignorance, or distorted by prejudice; all, however, have formed some opinion about it, and that opinion is founded upon knowledge either actual or imaginary. But despotism, the despotism of the slave States, is a thing known at the North only by name, and in general. Few have seen it; fewer still have studied it; and the greater part are totally ignorant of its real character.

Before enlisting, it is well to know the cause in which we are to serve. It is the purpose of the following pages to exhibit the system of social polity established in the Southern States, such as it is in its operation and effects; not in particular and accidental instances, but generally, and by virtue of those laws of human nature upon which the working of social and political institutions must depend.

This inquiry is necessary for our own satisfaction. Without making it, how can we act either reasonably or safely? Here is a question with two sides to it, and one side or the other we must take. How can we choose without knowledge? Despotism may be an excellent thing, well entitled to our warmest support; but how can we know it to be so, without knowing what it is?

Yet are we stopped short in the very threshold of this inquiry, by the threats and execrations of the South. Dare to inquire; dare look behind the veil that hides our private doings; dare question us, or any of our acts, and we dissolve the Union! Such an impertinence is lawful cause of war, and we will wage it!

Indeed!—It is necessary, then, to weigh these threats.

The Union of the States has been made the occasion and the theme of a great deal of unmeaning declamation. An idea seems to prevail, that excellent a thing as the Union is, the people, ignorant and short-sighted, may sometime take it into their heads to think otherwise; and therefore it is necessary to create a prejudice in favor of the Union, —a sort of feeling for it like that feeling of loyalty which has often upheld a throne, in spite of the vices and tyranny of him who sat upon it.

Under a democratic government, prejudices of this sort are not only useless, they are highly mischievous; they are but manacles and fetters put into the hands of the artful and designing, by means of which the people are bound, and shorn, against their interest, and against their judgment.

The men who formed the Union were neither better nor wiser than ourselves. For certain arguments and reasons in its favour, they formed it; for certain arguments and reasons in its favour, we should sustain it; not for itself; for in itself, it is neither good nor bad. It may be either, as circumstances are.

What are these reasons and arguments in favour of the Union? Briefly these: that the Union serves to protect us against aggressions from abroad and civil war at home; that it is the best guarantee of our independence and our freedom.

But suppose this same Union to be made the pretext for a violent interference with our dearest rights? Suppose that, under pretence of saving the Union, we are deprived of the liberty of the press, the liberty of dicussion, the liberty of thought,—nay more, the liberty of feeling, the right of sympathy with those who suffer? Suppose this Union requires to be cemented with blood, and that we are called upon to surrender up the noblest of our sons and daughters to be tortured to death by Southern whips, for the grievous sin of having denounced despotism with the generous emphasis of freedom?

Are we ready to bow thus submissively before the grim and bloody shrine of this political Moloch? Are we prepared to make these sacrifices? When the thing has changed its nature, what though it still retain its former name? Though it be called a Union, what is it but a base subjection, a miserable servitude?

Some eighty years ago, we had a Union with Great Britain, a Union that had lasted for near two centuries, a cherished Union, the recollection of which kindled a glow in every American bosom; not a fraternal Union merely, but closer yet, maternal, filial.

That connection had many things to recommend it. It sustained our weakness; it brightened our obscurity; it made us partakers in the renown of Britain, and part and parcel of a great nation. What curses, eighty years ago, would have blighted the parricide, who should have gone about to sever that connection, so dear, so beneficial!

The mother country, not satisfied with the affection of her daughter, sought to abuse her power, and to extort a tribute. But were all the advantages of our Union with Britain to be given up, merely to avoid the payment of a paltry tax on tea? Were all the calamities of civil war to be harzarded, all the miseries of a hostile invasion, intrigues with foreign powers, and their dangerous interference, public debts, standing armies, the risk of anarchy, and of military usurpation?

Yes, all, said our fathers, all is to be risked, rather than surrender our pecuniary independence; rather than become tributary to a British parliament; rather than be taxed at the pleasure of the mother country. A Union upon such terms is a mockery; it is not the Union we have loved and cherished.—We scorn it, and we spurn it.

So our fathers said. And when it is undertaken to deprive us, not of our money,—which, for the sake of peace, we might be willing to part with,—but of that whose value money cannot estimate; when it is attempted to shut out from us the atmosphere, the essential life-breath of liberty; when it is sought to gag our free mouths, to forbid the beating of our free hearts; to subdue us by penal statues into a servile torpidity, and an obsequious silence, shall we hesitate one moment to repel this impudent effort of despotism, because, if we refuse to submit, it will endanger the Union? Perish the Union, let it ten times perish, from the moment it becomes inconsistent with humanity and with freedom!

Should South Carolina declare that war for which, as she asserts, she has such lawful cause, and march an army Northward to enforce silence at the point of the bayonet, the sons of those who fought at Lexington and Bunker Hill will perhaps know how to repel the invaders; and those States which furnished soldiers, generals, arms and money to re-conquer Carolina from Cornwallis and Rawdon, will be able, paradventure, to vindicate their own liberties against any force which Carolinian despots may be able to send against them.

In this matter let us learn a lesson from these very Carolinians. It is now some twenty years since, that South Carolina considered herself aggrieved, by what she esteemed the usurpations of the federal government. She accused Congress of levying taxes, which the constitution did not authorize. No matter whether the charge were true or false; those who made it, doubtless were sincere. And did they quietly submit to this aggression, rather than endanger the Union by their resistance?—Not they.

Though denounced at the North as rebels and traitors, though coldly looked upon by those States which shared the grievance, and which had promised to assist in the redress, though unaided and alone, and harrassed too by a large party at home, who threatened, in the event of hostilities, to take sides with the general government, —the South Carolinian leaders magnanimously dared to 'calculate the value of the Union;' and they concluded, like brave men as they were, that rather than give place to what they esteemed oppression, rather than be ruled in a manner which no constitution authorized, rather than submit to an usurped authority, it were better to break the Union, and risk a war.

The bold are always less in danger than the timid. The strength and resources of South Carolina, compared with those of the remaining States, were but as dust in the balance; yet rather than provoke violent resistance, by an exercise of doubtful authority, Congress yielded; the tariff was modified and the principle of pure and unlimited protection was totally abandoned.

If South Carolina calculated the value of the Union, when it was only a question of tariffs and of taxes, shall we hesitate to calculate its value, when the dearest rights of manhood are in danger? when we are commanded to submit in silence, and not dare to crucize the despotism that controls us?

Let them break the Union, if they choose; it is a matter wherein they are free to act. But, before they break it, they will do well to revise their calculations of its value—What the Southern States would be if they stood alone; what elements they have within themselves of civilization, greatness, safety, strength, and power: what sort of a nation would they form, if isolated, and cut off from intercourse with their Northern neighbors is an inquiry which will find its proper place hereafter. But there are some more obvious considerations, which our Southern friends will do well deliberately to weigh, before they judge fit to dissolve the confederacy, and to break up those constitutional guarantees by which they are now protected. As sister States, talk as they may of the mischievous intermeddlings of the North, they enjoy privileges and an impunity, they never could expect from a foreign, an offended and a hostile nation. Those unhappy fugitives who had once reached the borders of States then truly free, could never be reclaimed; as between independent nations, the tortures and the death wantonly inflicted upon Northern citizens would no longer be regarded with a careless unconcern; and how many forays from the frontiers, how many crusades of liberty would there not be undertaken, by men anxious to redeem from slavery, if not their own relatives, those at least whom they regard as brothers? These collisions, sooner or later, would inevitably bring on war; and the broad banner of emancipation, with fifty thousand men to back it, once displayed, and gaily flaunting on the Southern breeze, farewell, and forever, to the despotisms of the South!—Despotism in America.

Another Stupendous Plot.

Those who expect any further peace with the Slave Power of this country, till it is forced to yield its usurpations and lay down its arms, are deluded. They dream. They are bats at noon. When that power was feebler, it was cautious and insidious. But enthroned, its nature and designs come out, its audacity and malignity appear, and its purpose of absolute supremacy, like Russian despotism in Europe, is no longer in doubt.

There the question is—Resistance, or the subjugation of Europe. Here it is—Resistance, or the subjugation of the States. France and England may as well fold their arms, and see the civilization of the continent again buried by a deluge of Northern barbarism, as the Free States longer be silent at the tyranny of the South. The Western Powers there have negociated, dallied, made compacts and protested, till the difficulty of successful resistance is increased tenfold. So it has been here. Tyranny is one in nature and in aim. The last hour in both hemispheres has come. The only alternative for liberty in either is to fight, in some form, or be crushed. Our danger is, that interested toryism will blind the people till resistance is useless.

We are led to these remarks by further developments respecting a stupendous scheme of the Slave Power, to whose incipient steps we called attention some three years ago. We received a pamphlet by some unknown hand, gorgeously written, but without imprint—not even the name of the printer or place of printing was stated. But the object of the writer was to show the immense natural resources of the valley of the Amazon and its tributaries, and the importance of creating commercial relations between that country and this, and of opening it to intelligence and enterprise.

But the last part of it was an energetic appeal to the Slave States to lead off with this vast scheme in order to secure an outlet for their surplus slave population, now staring them in the face like doom. If they could but get a foothold in that rich tropical valley, establish slavery there by arrangement with Brazil, create a commerce between it and the Southern States, direct and institute lines of steamships, slaves could be transported with convenience, climate and productions were congenial, a great slaveholding empire would arise, fortifying the system at home, and removing for centuries the only real danger which threatened it.

The notice and extracts made of this pamphlet at the time first called attention to the scheme at the North, so far as we know. Not very long after, another copy of the publication fell under our notice, but the last part, in reference to slavery, was not there. It was an edition for the North: the other, for the South. It is said to have been written by Lieut. Maury, of Washington.

Change in Public Sentiment.

We challenge the curious annals of history for a more striking progressive change in the sentiment of a nation, than that which has taken place in regard to Abolition, pure and simple, in the free States of America. A few years ago, and the name of Abolitionist was associated with social outlawry; Southern States put a price on the head of Garrison; Southern Post Offices opened letters and papers; and Committees of Northern Safety-men burned Abolition journals by the heap; mobs drove the emancipation apostle from Baltimore—burned down a Liberty-Hall in Philadelphia—shot down Lovejoy for printing and speaking democracy—and everywhere persecuted the name, fame and persons of the Abolitionists. Three years ago, a mob headed by Isaiah Rynders, broke up their meeting at the Tabernacle, and fairly pursued them from the City. Two years ago they could not obtain here a place to assemble in, and were obliged to go to Syracuse to hold their Anniversary. But now all this is changed. They are welcomed to one of the largest and handsomest churches in New York, and for the last two days, their discussions have not only been entirely undisturbed, but have been attended by crowded and sympathetic audiences of the most respectable people. Even conservatism and moderation now listen without a shock to the bold utterances of these quondam fanatics.—Such is the effect produced by the conviction which is now gaining complete possession of the public mind at the North, that the South is faithless to its own pledges, and is resolved to extend the area of Slavery at whatever risk. This great change has been wrought by the Nebraska Bill, and as yet we are only at the beginning. Garrison, Phillips, and all their compeers, could not have made so many Abolitionists and Disunionists in half a century as Pierce, Douglas, Badger and Clayton have made in three months.—New York Tribune.

Execution among the Fillibusters.

Arthur Morrison, one of the victims of whom we speak, had a young and fondly attached wife, and a child five years old, in Illinois, the place of his birth. He had written for her to come out, and sent her the necessary means to do so; and about two months since, this devoted woman left her home and friends, with a heart buoyant with hope to meet the object of her love and fealty.

About one month ago, she arrived with her child on our shores, and then for the first time, learned that her husband had been enticed to join the fillibusters. She immediately wrote to him, informing him of her arrival, and begging him to come to her and abandon his unjustifiable enterprise. Morrison received this letter, and instantly set about fulfilling his duties as a man and a citizen, by abandoning the camp of the fillibusters and starting for San Francisco.

But he "counted without his host," for Mr. Walker immediately dispatched a party in pursuit, which overtook Morrison near San Diego, and compelled him to return with them. A second letter from his wife soon after reached him, and the unhappy man determined to leave lower California and return to his family, which needed his presence, at all hazards.

In order to effect this, Morrison entered into a combination with ten others, to desert at the first opportunity. This determination was carried into execution with as little delay as possible; but again the emissaries of Mr. Walker tracked the ill-fated refugee, and making him a prisoner returned with him to the camp. Then a court-martial was held; the self-constituted officers sat in judgment over their victim; the forms and ceremonies of trial were gone through with, according to the most revised rules, for such cases made and provided; a verdict of guilty is brought in, sentence of death is pronounced unhesitatingly by his superior, and Morrison is shot like a dog, in cold blood, for obeying the first laws of God and man, and refusing any longer to do evil.

Tongue cannot tell; or any language depict the sufferings of that devoted wife and mother, who now stands on our soil, homeless, friendless, cheerless, far from the scenes of her birth, and her helpless orphan dependant on her for support. Such is one of the incidents connected with the fillibustering expedition.—San Francisco Sun.

Killing not Murder.

The rich and well born in Kentucky, and in the South, may and do kill their fellow beings, and yet are not guilty of murder! The Louisville Journal, in attempting to shield itself from public ingignation, for the course it has pursued in the Ward case, says:

"We do not think that an instance can be named where a man of social position has ever been hung or sent to the Penitentiary for killing a man in open daylight, though there have been what seem to be very aggravated cases of such killing; and so far as we know, this is true of the whole South.

We doubt if a case can be named where a man in any Southern State, enjoying high social position, has ever been legally punished for killing in open day, NO MATTER WHAT THE CIRCUMSTANCES."

What the Journal states is unquestionably true. But who occupy this safe "social position" at the South? Of course the ruling class, the slaveholders! What thinks the the reader of such a state of society, of such a state of civilization? Where are missionaries needed to carry the Gospel?

What think Northern laborers of having the vast regions of Kansas and Nebraska overrun by such a civilization? What Northern freeman would wish to locate, where not only labor and the laborer are degraded, but where he may be shot down with impunity by the "ruling class," by men "enjoying high social position," for such, in the slave States are "never legally punished for killing a man IN OPEN DAY, NO MATTER WHAT THE CIRCUMSTANCES!"—Portage Co. Free Democrat.

Baron Rothschild's opinion of the War.

We have seen a letter from an eminent gentleman in London to a highly respectable merchant in this city, in which the writer states, as a part of the political gossip of the day, a curious bet said to be taken by Baron Rothschild, and which, if true, would seem to intimate that even yet the horrors of war may be averted. "The Baron," he says, "has made a bet that our troops will never fire a shot on the Danube." So goes the report in the political circles in London. Now it is admitted on all hands that Baron Rothschild has vast opportunities of knowing the secret springs that move the political world. Nay, he has the means of controlling them to a large extent. We think it was Baron Rothschild who once indulged in the proud boast, "I will stop the march of the Russian armies on the Caucasus" and actually threatened to do so unless the Emperor of Russia complied with some of his stipulations. The money power has been the moving power of the world in all ages, and more especially is it so in modern times. The millionaire commands the sinews of war; and Baron Rothschild we understand, would really be a loser to an incalculable extent if the war goes on. He has invested largely on the understanding that the peace of Europe will not be seriously interrupted, and the present crisis will be of short duration. It is to his interest to make it so; and whenwe consider the immense resources at his disposal, we cannot but think his opinion must go a far way.—Even the Emperor of Russia cannot make a great war without credit, and credit cannot be obtained without a creditor. Armies cannot be maintained without ammunition and supplies and capitalists will not advance loans to purchase these sinews of war without the prospect of re-payment. They will not give their credit for nothing, even to the Czar of all the Russians, if they believe him engaged in a losing cause. Russia is too poor to maintain a great war with its own resources; and, failing the requisite supplies from millionaires in other countries, we should not be much surprised to see this mighty Russia, as Cobden said, suddenly "crumpled up like a sheet of paper." If Baron Rothschild has really made the bet above mentioned, which we think not improbable, then we must say that we shall look for an early peace on any terms that France and England may choose to dictate. Howevre, in the meantime, matters are looking warlike enough.—Kent Advertiser.

The British Post Office.

During the last week an important act of justice to the public, as well as to a successful improver of civil administration, has been rendered in relation to to the postage department. Sir Rowland Hill, who was Secretary to the Postmaster-General, has been appointed, to the office of Secretary to the Post Office, Colonel Maberly having obtained a place at the Board of Audit. The improvement in our postal system, which has supplied a motive to general education and increased the bonds of sympathy between families of the lowest as well as the highest class within the United Kingdom, and now to the most remote colonies in every part of the world, which has quickened and increased more than fivefold the intercommunication of thought and information, is a greater public improvement than has been effected by railway or by steam communication, or, as yet, by the electric telegraph. It is an improvement which by example, is leading to the introduction of the same principles for the benefit of the population of the United States and the States of Europe. Its influence abroad is seen in postal stamps imitating ours (though unequalling the miniature of our Queen), with those of other Sovereigns, and that of Franklin in the United States. The improvement did not consist merely in the idea that postage was overtaxed, of which others, as well as he, complained, but as will be seen from the evidence in blue-books, and the conflicts with the then postal authorities, it was the result of able elaboration, and the deduction of new administrative principles from facts carefully analyzed. As an instance it was put forward as a defence of the former rates of postage, which looked reasonably enough, that the charge should vary with the labor of carriage, according to the distance; but Mr. Rowland Hill demonstrated that the actual expense of carriage did not make more than some 37th of a penny upon a delivery in Edinburgh as compared with the expense of delivery in London. That he who devises shall execute, is a maxim for civil administration; but hitherto the practice has been, that not those who devise, but those who declared improvements to be impracticable, and opposed, should be intrusted with their execution. At the best the execution of new measures is difficult enough, but to load them with the dead weight of inactive, or merely reluctant action, and a natural readiness to exaggerate difficulties, is a grievous addition to the wear and tear of the mind in the prosecution of large improvements. It was due to the public that Mr. Hill should be placed in a position to have the responsible execution, as well as the credit of the execution, of his own measure. Had he been so, the public expectation would have been earlier realized, and the revenue sooner restored. It is due to him to state that he has hitherto lost, rather than gained, by the labors of his office. To do what he might for the measure, he resigned the chairmanship of the Brighton Railway, in which he was succeeded by Mr. Laing, at a salary of £1,500 per annum.—As part of the new postal system, the public are indebted to Mr. Hill for the developement of the system of money orders and the book postage. It is to to be hoped that the convenience of transmission by post will be extended to very small parcels, and other matters and things than books, for which the expense and inconveniences of any present means of conveyance are prohibitory.—London Observer.

Great Western Railroad.

The following is an extract from a letter from a friend, who is most of the time on the wing, dated April 23rd, 1854:—

FRIEND BANCROFT: When last I saw you I made a promise that I would occasionally tell what turns up in my peregrinations. I will endeavour to do so hereafter when I can appropriate time.

Business has called me over the Great Western Railway, running from the Falls of Niagara to Detroit, the last two weeks.—This is destined to be one of the best roads upon the continent, and in the summer season a remarkably pleasant route, so soon as it shall be leveled up and graveled. Leaving the Detroit river, the road runs along in sight of the beautiful St. Clair Lake, in full view of the steam and sail vessels constantly passing up and down. The road has but two or three slight curves between the Detroit river and Chatham, a distance of forty-five miles. The track leaves where the river Thames empties into the lake, and follows that stream to London, a distance of one hundred and ten miles from Detroit.—The track is, upon an exact air line, fifty four miles east from Chatham, and is very straight throughout the line. The country is very heavily timbered upon the route from Detroit to London. From London to Hamilton, and in fact to the Falls, the country is quite rolling; but from Detroit to London it is almost a dead level. London contains a population of over ten thousand, is lighted with gas, and exhibits quite a city like appearance. There is an excellant farming country about it which has heretofore been its main support, as it was entirely inland previous to the building of this road.—Another road is now being built from Toronto, through London to Port Sarnia, opposite your place. A number of flourishing villages have sprung up along the line between London and Hamilton, the most prominent of which is Woodstock. It is indeed a very flourishing village. The next in importance is Paris, which is one hundred and fifty-seven miles from Detroit, and thirty-eight miles west of Hamilton. At Paris the Buffalo, Brantford and Goderich Railway intersects the Great Western, and is to cross it at that point. Cars are now running from Paris to Buffalo, direct, or rather to Waterloo, opposite Black Rock, a distance of about eighty miles. It is said to be a very straight road. The company building that road have lately succeeded in raising all the means required for building the entire road to Goderich, and the grading west of Paris has been commenced. The main village of Paris is a little off from the track of the Great Western Railway, and consequently I cannot speak of its merits and demerits, except from some specimens in the shape of females who pass over the road occasionally, and assemble at the cars to receive and bid good bye to friends. They are decidedly the best looking and most intelligent, to appearance, of any I have discovered in my peregrinations. They get them up tight, there. Dundas is the next town, of importance, being five miles west of Hamilton. The railroad passes along one side of a mountain or immense hill, some 150 feet above the town, the village being on a nice level plot of ground and handsomely laid out. From the cars a horse in the street looks like a moderate sized dog. This is the terminus of the ship canal, which runs from the bay of Hamilton. This is a more romantic sight than can be found upon any railroad route in the United States.

The next place is Hamilton, situated upon a bay, projecting out from the head of Lake Ontario. It is a very enterprising town, and contains a population of perhaps fifteen thousand. The harbor is a good one. Steamboats leave here for Toronto, Rochester, Oswego, &c. All of the machinery, cars, &c., are manufactured here. The cars will compare favorably with any built in the United States. Hamilton has an excellent farming country about it, and must eventually become a prominent city of Canada West. Its position will make it so. Hamilton is 185 miles from Detroit and forty-three miles from the Falls. Passengers coming over the road by day-light are in full view of Lake Ontario for a distance of twenty miles. It is a magnificent sight to look out upon—the placid waters of that beautiful Lake, the eye catching at intervals the canvass and steam which are propelling the messengers of commerce to and fro.

The next place is St. Catherines, 217 miles from Detroit, and eleven from the Falls. This seems to be a thrifty place.—Three miles east of this is Thorold, of no particular importance except that the Welland Canal passes through here. The canal was first built through St. Catherines. The Welland Canal is twenty-eight miles long, from Lake Erie to Lake Ontario.—There are twenty-eight locks. There is much shipping through this channel.

Next, and last, comes the Suspension bridge. It is one of the wonders of the world, but it is nothing compared to the railroad bridge now being constructed directly over the present one. When completed it will be the most magnificent work in the world. There are to be three tracks across the bridge; the Great Western track the guage of which is five feet six inches; the Cunnndaigua and Elmira road, which intersects the New York and Erie, at the latter place, with a guage of six feet; and the New York Central, which runs directly through Lockport and Rochester, with a guage of four feet ten inches.

The engineer in superintendance of the work, I understand, says he will run alone the first train of Cars which shall go over the Bridge. I shall give you more particulars about this bridge hereafter.

The managing director and main man upon the road, is C. J. Brydges. I have no particular acquaintance with him. He is quite a young looking man, but he has undertaken, and thus far succeeded well in the construction of a great work. The road was hurried to completion, and much was done while the frost was in the ground; consequently at present it is quite uneven, but that will soon be remedied. His appointment has been very judicious. His conductors upon the express trains, Messrs. Jones, Matthews, and Cook, are very gentlemanly men—courteous and affable in their manners, and are well calculated to leave with the travelling public a good impression. But about one in five thousand are fit for conductors. He requires an even temper and the patience of Job, as also to be a gentleman who can make himself perfectly easy and familiar in any society. Mr. Brydges has been exceedingly fortunate in that particular.

The train which arrived at Detroit on Saturday evening last, at half past eight o'clock, brought a mail from New York, which left at five o'clock the evening previous, making twenty-seven hours from New York to Detroit. Passengers came through by the same run. This is the quickest trip ever made.

Mr. Brydges, in his anxiety to accommodate, undertook to carry freight, and the rush has been so great that he has been obliged to appropriate locomotives for that purpose which he now needs for hauling gravel. It would have been better not to have touched a pound of freight. The travel over this route is immense.

You will hear from me when I can find leisure.

Yours, OSCEOLA.

The Collision in the Channel.

TWO HUNDRED LIVES LOST.

From the Daily News, May 4.

In the Daily News of Monday last appeared a brief notice of the collision that occurred early on Friday morning last in Channel, off the Start, between a Bremen emigrant ship called the Favourite, Captain Hoegman, bound to Baltimore, with nearly 200 passengers, and the American vessel, Hesper, and that fears were entertained that the former had immediately foundered, with the whole of the unfortunate creatures who were on board. Nothing was seen of her afterwards, but the night being exceedingly dark and boisterous, it was thought just possible that she might have held up, and the unhappy souls been taken off by some of the numerous homeward bound ships which were coming up the Channel with the N. W. wind. All hopes, however, of their being preserved have been given up, and there is little doubt that every one on board, with the exception of the master, Captain Hoegman, the second mate, and four of the crew, perished.

The ill-fated ship Favourite was a well-conditioned bark, of between 400 and 500 tons burden, and was manned by a crew of fourteen, including the mates. She was a Bremen-built vessel, and left that port about the 18th ult., for Baltimore, with 191 emigrants (180 adults, mostly men and 11 infants) on board. She made the Channel in due course, and on getting some distance down, the wind shifted around to the westward. Between 1 and 2 o'clock on Friday morning she made the Star Light, and then wore off on the other tack. The captain had continued on deck almost to this period and on retiring for a few hours rest, left the mate and the usual watch in charge of the ship.—The weather was anything but favorable; in addition to the night being dark, a thick rain was falling, which, with a heavy sea and a strong wind from the westward, rendered the progress of the vessel somewhat tedious. She had not continued on the tack long, however, when about 2 o'clock, a ship was observed coming towards her. The instant she was discerned, hails were exchanged, but the distance between the two vessels was too limited to prevent a collision occurring, for before either ship could bring up or stay their progress, the Favourite was struck on the larboard side by the approaching vessel, which came stem on, carrying away the foremast, yards, rigging, and, indeed, cutting her down to the water's edge. The force of the collision is said to have been of a most tremendous character. Capt. Hoegman was thrown out of his berth. He sprang upon deck, and with his mate and four men, who were down below asleep, at the moment of the ship's coming in contact, caught hold of the gear attached to the bow of the vessel that had run into them, and thus escaped on board. They then found her to be the American ship Hesper, Capt. Jones, bound to Antwerp, from Charleston. Almost directly afterwards, the ships parted from each other. The emigrants could be just seen to be rushing on deck in the most frantic confusion, but the heavy sea and wind which prevailed entirely prevented those on board the Hesper rendering any prompt aid towards rescuing the unhappy creatures.

The Favourite was observed to have been cut down below the water line, and was fast settling forward. The watch on deck were noticed lowering one of the boats, but the darkness of the night and the vessels altering their position prevented the American from seeing whether they succeeded. Captain Hoegman thinks it probable that the emigrants on becoming aware of their awful position, got into the boat and swamped it.—He adds that about ten minutes afterwards he observed a light in the direction of the spot where the collision occurred. He supposed it to have been shown from his ill-fated vessel. The light, however, soon disappeared, and all was dark. The Hesper, it should be stated, sustained damage. She lost her jib-boom, foretop gallant mast, and injury to bows and cutwater. She laid to for several hours, in the hope that either the Favourite would float or that some of the unfortunate creatures might be picked up in the boats. At daybreak, however, not a vestige of the ship could be seen. It does not appear that any of the boats of the American were lowered after the collision, but the state of the night may explain why it was not done. The Hesper then bore up channel, and on the following morning, speaking with the Agenoria pilot-boat, Capt. Hoegman, with his mate and four men, left the American and proceeded to Portsmouth, where they arrived on Saturday morning. As to the fate of the bark and her living freight, no doubt is entertained that they went down at the moment when Capt. Hoegman observed the light to disappear, and that no one escaped a watery grave. This is confirmed from the fact that on the same morning, a quantity of chests, apparently passengers' luggage, was was seen floating off the Start, and near the scene of the catastrophe. Mr. Cobden, master of the Uncle Tom, now at Brixham, states that one of the chests among the bulk which he saw floating had an umbrella lashed on the top with a leathern belt. He also noticed a large quantity of stores, evidently those of an emigrant ship. Mr. Kulkman, the owner of the Favourite at Bremen, was telegraphed to by the Consul and Captain, as soon as the latter had reached Portsmouth. The survivors arrived in town yesterday morning, and were forwarded by the Consul-General back to Bremen, via Hamburg, by one of the General Steam Navigation Company's steamers.

The total number who have perished by this sad catastrophe amounts to no fewer than two hundred and one.

JOHN B GOUGH.—He is the Paganini of orators. He plays only on one string, but one capable of infinite responses—the life of a drunkard! O, heavens and earth, O, angels, men, and devils, what a theme! running from the cherub infant, through wasted youth, blasted manhood, days of alternate revelry and cursing, a home of unrelieved misery, a death of shame and anguish! It is this that Mr. Gough recites night after night. He paces up and down some twelve or twenty feet of a platform, judiciously left clear for him, with hands clenched in agony, or pawing the air to keep off the ghosts of memory—pouring out words with such spontaniety that they seem to tumble over one another, and smother meaning in their fall, scarcely stopping at a cheer, never inviting one. He tells you with gestures, even more significant than his passionate and sometimes beautiful words, how he went out from the home of a poor but pious, loving mother, wandered from the straight road, was whipped by demons over an arid desert, fed upon the hot sand in his burning thirst, felt a word of cooling water on his toungue, saw a rainbow of hope over the abyss of seven years of sin, and was restored to strenght and purity, if not happiness. When he has done this, he can turn to other men, can paint society with a vivid pencil, and conduct an argument with a vigor the more effective because tolerant. Sometimes he will introduce an illustration, like that of the boat on the rapids, which will hold an audience in a suspense almost of agony, and force them to seek relief in appropriate tumult.—London Times.

We are in the midst of a Revolution!

Said Mr. Clay, on a memorable occasion. We are in the midst of a Revolution, is our response to the proceedings at Washington on the Nebraska Bill. The attempted passage of this measure is the first great effort of slavery to take American freedom directly by the throat. Hitherto it has but asked to be allowed to grow and expand side by side with that freedom, until now, at what is believed a favourable moment, it springs from its lair and clutches at the life of its political associate in the Government. It engages in a coup d' etat, and by the aid of northern traitors to liberty, attempts the most intolerable usurpation.

Should success attend the movement, it is tantamount to a civil Revolution, and an open Declaration of War between Freedom and Slavery on the North American Continent, to be ceaselessly waged till one or the other party finally and absolutely triumphs. If Nebraska passes, the two parties must immediately marshal themselves in hostile array. The North go on, as it has begun, to oppose every step towards making the North-West pasture ground for African Slavery. It will oppose the introduction of Slavery into Nebraska and Kansas as much after the passage of the bill as before, and should it gain foothold there, it will make open and direct war upon the institution within their limits now and henceforth. It will fight against the admission into the Union of either as a Slave State, and in doing this, it will necessarily be compelled in self-defence to carry the war into Africa, and fight against the admission of new Slave States from any quarter whatever. Soundness upon this question will be made a test in the election of every northern representative. The popular branch of the government must be speedily purified, and no man elected thereto from the North who is not firmly committed against the admission of more slave States. A President must be elected by the Free States who will cordially support and earnestly respond to these views. There will be no other course but this open to the Free States, except one of abject, slavish submission to the iron rod of the Southern slave-drivers, and the more despicable domination of northern flunkeyism. The passage of the Nebraska bill will rouse and consolidate the most gigantic, determined and overwhelming party for freedom that the world ever saw. We may already see in the future its gathering groups, on every hill side, in every valley, and on every prarie in the Free States.—We hear the deep and ominous murmer of the earnest voices of its myriad slowly moving masses. We behold in their faces the serious and unalterable determination of their purpose in behalf of freedom. We see the gigantic array gradually approach, closing its thick ranks, and moving onward with a force that no merely human power or human institution can resist. It sweeps along with the force of the tempest and the tornado. The spirit of liberty animates, the spirit of progress impels, and a spirit of solemn religious duty inspires and leavens the whole mass. This invincible army bears aloft the motto, "GOD WITH US." Its immediate duties are plain. We have indicated them in the gross. Details will adjust themselves. What ulterior duties may be in store for this great Party of Liberty, time only can disclose. The decisive events of history come but slowly. They have their source as the great rivers have theirs, in the little rills that trickle in the hidden recesses of the plain and the mountain. But we cannot hide from our vision the vital fact that this party, once aroused and consolidated on a platform sufficiently wide and substancial to afford a sure basis for its operations, such as the passage of the Nebraska Kansas bill will furnish, will not hesitate in its course, or fail in its duties, however radical and sweeping those duties may become in the natural progress of events.

For the mole eyed squad of little northern men at Washington who are accidentally the controlling political force of the Government at this junction of public affairs, lighting the torches of civil discord and vainly dreaming that no conflagration is to ensue—we have but pity for their blindness and futuity. They are under the lead of men of gross and groveling purposes, base instincts and narrow vision. They are but blind followers of the blind.

To avert throes and convulsions which must inevitably follow this infamous act, we have labored and shall labor, and as a last resort to this end, if there shall prove to be a majority of the house in favor of the final consumation of this scheme, we advocate the determined resistance of the minority to that consummation. This bold and astounding assault upon the cause of liberty and of progress, should be met by northern representatives in Congress in the spirit with which freedom in its most lofty mood has ever resisted oppression. It is a solemn duty which devolves upon them, without agency of theirs to bring about the crisis that enjoins their action. We know that it is easier to shirk it than to discharge it.—But in so clear a case, it were culpable to refuse to engage in the only procedure which gives any hope of arresting the infamous measure. For whatever results shall follow such a course, we cheerfully court our share of the responsibility. Whatever that result shall be, we unhesitatingly say, let it come. There are greater evils than a conflict between two parties in the legislative branch of the Government—greater evils than temporarily blocking the wheels of public affairs, or than producing a shock which shall precipitately send the members of Congress home to their constituents.—And clearly among them in our estimation, are the fatal and far reaching consequences of the passage of the Nebraska Bill. We urge therefore, unbending determination on the part of the northern members, hostile to this intolerable outrage, and demand of them in behalf of Peace in behalf of Freedom, in behalf of Justice and Humanity, resistance to the last. Better that confusion should ensue—better that discord should reign in the National Councils—better that Congress should break up in wild disorder—nay, better that the Capital itself should blaze by the torch of the incendiary, or fall and bury all its inmates beneath its crumbling ruins—than that this perfidy and wrong should be finally accomplished. We feel that these convictions are shared by northern millions, and that wherever the northern mind has unrestrained action and utterance, it will declare them. In pursuing the course we indicate, the friends of Freedom in the House will be sustained by the Press and by the People, and, as we believe, in whatever form support shall be demanded. We devoutly urge them to be faithful to their trust in this great emergency, and to confidently rely upon a popular sympathy that will treasure their deeds as the acts of martyrs. Such a course will secure the support of men who will hold their lives cheap in the maintainance of the righteous cause which that minority is called to defend.—N. Y. Tribune.

MANIFESTO OF THE CZAR.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 11.

By the grace of God, we, Nicholas the First, Emperor and Autocrat of all the Russias, King of Poland, &c. &c., to all our subjects make known, since the commencement of our differences with the Turkish government, we have solemnly announced to our faithful subjects, that a sentiment of justice had alone induced us to re-establish the violated rights of the orthodox christians, subjects of the Ottoman Porte.

We have not sought, we do not seek to make conquests, nor to exercise in Turkey any supremacy whatever, that might be likely to exceed that influence which belongs to Russia, by virtue of existing treaties.

At that period we already encountered distrust, then soon a hostility on the parts of the governments of France and England, who endeavored to lead the Porte astray, by misrepresenting our intentions. Lastly, at this moment, England and France throw off the mask, regard our differences with Turkey as a mere secondary question, and no longer dissemble that their sole object is to weaken Russia, to tear from her a part of her possessions, and to bring down our country from the powerful position to which the hand of the Supreme Being had exalted it.

Is it for the orthodox Russian to fear such threats?

Ready to confound the audacity of the enemy, shall she swerve from the sacred purpose that has been assigned to her by divine providence? No! Russia has not forgotten God! It is not for worldly interests that she has taken up arms; she combats for the christian faith, for the defence of her co-religionists oppressed by implacable enemies.

Let all Christendom know, then, that the thought of the sovereign of Russia is also the thought that animates and inspires all the great family of the Russian people, this, orthodox people, faithful to God and his only Son Jesus Christ our redeemer.

It is for the faith and for Christendom that we combat!

God with us—who against us?

Given at St. Petersburg, on the 11th day of the month of April, in the year of grace 1854, and the 29th of our reign.

The Russian Manifesto, &c.

From the London Morning Chronicle, May 5.

The Emperor of Russia once more assures his subjects that, having gone to war exclusively under the pressure of religious motives, he still desires neither conquests nor undue influence in Turkey. If those for whom the new imperial manifesto is designed were of a critical temperament, they might enquire how the deadly conflict on the Danube tends to secure the objects which are suggested as its justification. The success of the Russian arms would undoubtedly render the Emperor supreme, either openly or virtually, throughout the European territories of the Porte, whilst failure, on the other hand, will obviously lead to a loss of that predominance which might long have been maintained, if it had not been too arrogantly asserted. The stale falsehood that the resistance of the Sultan to the Menschikoff demands was prompted by the Western Powers, was hardly worth repeating. If, according to the official writer, England and France only used the cause of Turkey as an excuse for their own attack on Russia, it is certainly hard that the Ottoman Territory should, for six months, have been exposed to all the ravages of war on account of a foreign quarrel. The notorious unwillingness of both the allied Governments to engage in the contest, is oddly contrasted with the charge that they determined on war for the mere purpose of diminishing the power of Russia. It is not because we have to do with a giant, but because the giant's strength is tyrannously used, that it becomes prudent and necessary to exact guarantees against future attempts at aggression. Only three months ago, the Czar was offered peace on the simple condition of evacuating provinces to which he has not to this hour, even advanced a claim. Yet the Imperial organ declares that it was the original design of France and England to dismember his dominions.

The politicians of St. Petersburg are, perhaps, not even yet acquainted with the secret correspondence. The Emperor's conversations with Sir Hamilton Seymour furnish, however, the best commentary on his declaration that he desires no aggrandizement. There was nothing said about religion, when the discussion turned on the process by which the sick man's inheritance should be divided. The appropriation of the European Provinces of the Porte, implied in the offer of Egypt and Candia to England, would scarcely have been consistent with the treaties which, as it appears, are to be vindicated and restored by the present war. On reading the constant succession of mendacious proclamations which are addressed to the Russian nation, the question arises, not whether they are true, but why they are thought worthy of publication. As it is not likely that affected professions of moderation can be popular with the ignorant multitude, we can only infer that the disclaimer of all purposes of conquest must be intended to conciliate the discontented gentry. Difficult as it is to obtain information respecting the internal condition of Russia, it is well known that the useless and increasing burdens imposed on the country have made the war highly distasteful to the nobility That great body is neither enthusiastic in its devotion to the Emperor, nor anxious to give a political triumph to the Greek Church. A large number of the aristocracy belong to the Latin Communion, and Count Nesselrode himself is a member of the Church of England. Even those of the nobility who adhere to the orthodox Eastern faith are not unwilling to proclaim, in private, their indifference to the aggrandizement of a priesthood which they universally despise.

The Humbug of Reform.

"This is a great age," we are often told, and undeniably it is; great in moral progress—great in the inventive genius displayed, and great in the facilities it offers to invest vice with the semblance of virtue

The disposition to make black appear white, is the most prominent feature of the times. It is not confined to projects of doubtful propriety either; but is as true of the most necessary reforms as of other, and less important projects.—We pass over the different schemes for this great purpose or the other, which are, in some degree, made to contribute their quota to the general fund of deception, and come at once to the most important movement now engrossing the attention of the people of America—the Abolition question. This project which has for its object the emancipation of the slave, is not an exception.

It is a difficult matter for an American to take a liberal view on subjects involving the interests of colored Americans, disconnected from the selfishness of individual gain, personal or pecuniary. The position assumed by the majority who oppose Negro Slavery, is, that it works positive evil to the white classes, and, for our own profit, it should be abolished; the inherent wickedness of the system is lost to sight, but "our" interests as white freemen, may not be subserved by its continuance.

All around, we hear much of Anti-Slavery.—Men now have a measure of glory in being Abolitionists, since the thought of security against "any more ebony additions on this continent," is prevailing, the thousands who flock to the standard, are only required to use the Shibboleth Abolition, in order to be received into the household of Anti-Slavery faith; such proselytes are not to be relied upon, much less should they be tolerated as orthodox on a subject of such great importance. Some of the most miraculous changes of the present time, have been wrought among them, first, violently in favor of freedom for the poor negroe, and as quick, and with no perceptible intermmediate change, as decidedly in favor of his expatriation or his continuance in servitude. A man in haste to be popular, sets out with the opinion that Slavery is encroaching upon his rights—at once a love for all men is announced, but, as there is an intervening obstacle in his progress, the brotherhood of the race is a "fixed fact": there is a surplus of affectionate considerationfor the black brother; wondrous things are to be done for him, and that in the twinkling of an eye.

In fact, being so blind that he cannot see to advantage, the seeing must be done for him. He cannot hear either, except that which has first been tried, and found to be safe for his delicate organs; the consequence is, that after many "convictions" and "opinions"—a puzzle induced by his decidedly progressive course, in spite of the tutoring and watching he gets, he is thought to be just what his barefaced oppressors have all along asserted of him—"an undesirable part of the free population." The land of his forefathers would be the best country for him, could it only be "fixed up a bit,"—say a few a missions and some republics; at all events, America is wanted for those whom Sojourner Truth delights in calling the "Shaxon race."

Why is it that many reflecting men will not be influenced by appeals when made to them by popular reformers, but that their true principles will out, although they cautiously try to conceal them? Sensible people will not allow themselves to be caught with the chaff of an empty profession, made by men calling themselves abolitionists, who, in addition to this, wrangle about this trifle or the other, connected with their particular creed, and so lose sight of the shadow of their aim.

We are an abolitionist—we do not want the slave to remain in his chains a second; whether the master gets paid or not, is a point of no importance to us whatever; strictly speaking; however, he has no claim to him and should not, therefore, have pay for that to which he has no shadow of right!

We go further, we want that the colored man should live in America—should "plant his tree" deep in the soil, and whether he turns white, or his neighbors turn black by reason of the residence, is of no moment. He must have his rights—must not be driven to Africa, nor obliged to stay in the States if he desires to go elsewhere.—We confess to their views as objectionable, as we know them to be, but this does not not close our eyes against the "humbug" connected with this abolition reform, some phases of which would cause a worm eating New Hollander to hide his head in very disgust

We are often told by good men. "I am opposed to Slavery as much as any one; it is wrong, I know, but I am no abolitionist. Your abolitionists conduct toward colored people, their especial pets, in a manner that I, an infidel, would not.—They are not sound and I know it, but I'll not throw a straw in the way of the colored man's elevation: let him emigrate, run away,—do anything for freedom; I would do so myself!"

And thus it is that the class thought to be objects of missionary effort, because of lax religious opinions, are deterred by their too true estimate of anti-slavery men, generally from publicly indentifying themselves with them.

Although the cause is known to be so completely in the jaws of humbug, genuine abolitionists are sensitive on the point, they cannot endure the least expression of distrust from friend or foe as to the general sincerity: hatred, slackness to the cause is urged against exposition of wrong. There will be a loss of confidence in anti-slavery men, should short-comings not be concealed, we have frequently been told, but for our life we cannot realize the propriety of such concealment.

Abolitionists invariably apply a severe test to out-siders—openly tell of all they say against the favorite theory, and industriously, though very properly, say what they should do, but dare touch one of their ranks though known to be leperous with defection! dare hint of the dangerous policy fast superceding the old uncompromising faith—the chaste walk and upright conversation of former times, and you risk raising a nest of hornets who will sting you while they can find you.

Such a state of things as now characterizes the movements of the age, should not be, and we trust it will not be continued much longer, unless anti-slavery men covet the bad notoriety now justly given to other parties because of recreancy to principle. *

Slavery Triumphant.

The Nebraska Bill has passed. By a vote of 113 to 100, Slavery has once more triumphed in the National Legislature of the United States. The minority made stout resistance for a time, but were at length forced to succumb. The Slave Power, backed by the Executive, left no stone unturned, to push the Bill through; and, in the end, resorted to a discreditable manœuvre, to accomplish their object.

That this measure was opposed to the morality and intelligence of the Free States, the proceedings of the last few months have abundantly shown. Remonstrances and petitions against it, have poured in from all quarters, with unexampled rapidity; enthusiastic public meetings have been held, at which the strongest denunciations of the measure have been invariably met with the loudest applause; staid and respectable Conservatism has whispered objection, and in some cases has even dared to speak aloud; in every place where an election has occurred, since the introduction of the measure, the candidate of the Executive has been routed by overwhelming majorities; New Hampshire, even—the home of the President and a stronghold of the Democracy—sharing the general disaffection. In spite of all these unequivocal evidences of opposition, the Bill has passed—the Slave Power has triumphed—the North has been compelled once more to lick the dust and to bow the knee in token of submission. It is thus that the Slave Power bids defiance to public opinion, and with all the insolence of despotism tramples under foot every consideration of decency and justice. And so it always will do to the end of the chapter. We have no right to look for anything else. It is its nature so to do. When we see the filthy swine avoiding garbage—the ravenous shark gentle and playful—the foul buzzard refusing carrion—then may we also expect the supporters of a system founded on oppression and steeped in blood, to venerate compacts and regard justice.

In the mean time the opposing political papers are full of fire and fury, vowing vengeance, and threatening anarchy, revolution and such like things, too frightful to name. We greatly fear, however, that the anti-slavery courage now manifested is too demonstrative to be genuine—too clamorous to be enduring. Our faith in the perseverance of the American people in any thorough and determined resistance to the demands of the overbearing South, is, as yet, wonderfully weak. We have seen so many exhibitions of Brother Jonathan's cringing, toadyish propensities, especially in respect to this very subject of the extension and domination of Slavery, that we shall require to witness the bringing forth of some of the "works meet for repentance," ere we can believe the conversion sincere. When the first deed is done, giving assurance that the back bone of the North has received any accession of strength, by the severe exercise to which it has recently been subjected, we shall be most ready and willing to add our congratulations, and to shout our hosannas. Till then, we shall take the liberty to consider all this recent explosion of wordy fury to be just what it is—and no more.

Irregular Mails, or, Neglect.

Complaints are made by subscribers, especially by those in the States, that they do not get their papers. Subscribers in Buffalo and other places, charge the failure to the newspaper publishers; this is unjust as far as this paper is concerned. The Provincial Freeman is sent to the Toronto Post Office, and if Buffalo or other readers of the same, do not get it, the fault is at the Post Office here, or in their town or city. Which is it? Papers sent by us to Niagara, C. W., have failed to reach their owners—said to be because not received at the Office, when on the other hand, we are told here, that all papers are sent to their destination.

The irregularity of other papers, is of no benefit to ours, we have already had ample proof, and we do not wish to have an unfounded charge of neglect on our part, made against us also. *

AT the late anniversary of the American Anti-Slavery Society, held in New York, the following resolution was adopted. It shows, at least, that the members of that Society continue courageous and hopeful, and intend to persevere in their labors for the enfranchisement of the enslaved, through the regeneration of the moral sentiment of the American people. An arduous task, truly!

D.

Resolved, That the contrast between the present aspect of the Anti-Slavery cause now, and as it presented itself twenty-three years ago, is in the highest degree cheering—that the change which has taken place in public sentiment on the subject of the colored man's rights, as evinced in the tone of the newspaper press and in the character of the current literature of the day, is such as not only to inspire the friends of the cause with the liveliest satisfaction, but to produce in the minds of all careful observers the conviction that a mighty revolution is going steadily on in this country, that will result, and that at no distant day, in the utter overthrow of American slavery, and the restoration to the colored man of all the rights of which he has been so long robbed.

The Queen's Birth-Day.

The celebration of Her Majesty's birth-day in in this city, was as expected, unusually brilliant. The morning was remarkably bright, and at an early hour persons of all ranks and conditions were astir, bent upon making the most of their holiday. Great numbers left the city by the various railroads, steamboats and other conveyances, intent upon a day's rustication; and as many or perhaps more, came flocking in from the surrounding farms and villages, hoping to feast their eyes upon the grandeur of the promised procession. Nor were they disappointed. The several companies of the Fire Brigade turned out in full force, in their showy uniforms; the national societies, with their flags and banners; the Orangemen, with their insignia; and the city council, all mustered in strength.

The procession marched to the beautiful and picturesque grounds of the old Government House, where a public meeting was organized, of which the Mayor, J G. Beard, Esq., was appointed chairman. Resolutions expressive of congratulations and loyalty to the Queen, were proposed in eloquent speeches by Hon. HENRY SHERWOOD, M. P. P., Hon. J. H. CAMERON, Dr. M'CAUL, and others, and passed by acclamation. The principal topic dwelt upon by the speakers was of course the war in which Her Majesty is now engaged with Russia. The following address was submitted for the approval of the meeting:

TO HER MAJESTY, THE QUEEN.

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Mayor, Corporation and Citizens of Toronto, in public meeting assembled, desire most respectfully to tender to your Majesty our cordial congratulations on the happy return of your Majesty's birth-day; and at the same time, humbly offer up our hearty prayers to the Giver of all good, that you may be spared and further, that with your Majesty's amiable consort and princely offspring, you may enjoy many years of domestic happiness.

"Long to reign over us;"

We also gladly avail ourselves of the occasion to express our deep sympathy with your Majesty in the war, which, in conjunction with your allies, your Majesty has been compelled to undertake. Whilst in common with all friends of humanity we deplore the lamentable consequences which necessarily result from the warfare of nations, and earnestly pray that peace, with all its blessings may soon be restored, we cannot but feel that the war in which your Majesty is at present engaged, is alike just, honorable and necessary; and our best and warmest wishes are for the success of the fleets and armies which your Majesty has sent forth to defend the feeble from the aggressions of the strong—to maintain the integrity of the empire of an ancient ally—and to secure the preservation of the liberties of Europe.

In conclusion, we beg to acknowledge with gratitude the blessings, which, through the favor of the Almighty, we have enjoyed under your Majesty's beneficent rule; and to assure you of our devoted attachment to British connection, and our readiness to take our part in upholding British honor and British interests.

On resolution moved by L. Moffatt, Esq., the above address was adopted.

Unfortunately, in the evening, the festivities of the day were marred and the promised display of fireworks curtailed by a heavy rain. We learn, however, that attempts to keep up the entertainment were made with indifferent success, as late as 10 o'clock. We have heard of no accident whatever on the day; neither did we witness many cases of intoxication. The day on the whole passed off pleasantly; and as far as outward demonstration can do so, the citizens of Toronto have proved their loyalty to Her Majesty, and their attachment to British rule, and are evidently far enough from any idea either of separation or "annexation."

GLEANINGS.

The collections at Quebec, in aid of the soldiers who have been called to the East, amount to £220.

—Rev. Dr. Willis, of this city made speech at the late Anniversary of the American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society. His object was to prove the Anti-Slavery character of the Bible.

—The Music Hall, in Quebec, has been rented by the government at £150 a month, for the accommodation of the legislature.

—The ship Three Bells, with her humane and world-renowned commander, Capt. Creighton, is reported on her way to Montreal.

—The office of the St. Catherines Chronicle was lately entered and robbed of a Webster's Dictionary, one or two miscellaneous volumes and four coppers! The fellows who committed that rascality are just about mean enough for the Congress of the United States. We commend them to the friendly notice of President Pierce. He has at present a good deal of mean, dirty work on hand, and would, probably find them valuable auxiliaries.

—An inquest was recently held in this city, on the body of a woman named Ann Campbell. Verdict—"Excessive use of strong drink."

—The election for mayor in St. John's, New Brunswick, has resulted—Oliver, (temperance,) 1,108; Smith, 768. The vote was taken by ballot.

—The New Brunswick Religious Intelligencer says that the Maine Law has passed the Legislature of Prince Edward's Island by a vote o 15 to 7.

—The National Division of the Sons of Temperance is to hold its Annual Meeting in St. John's, New Brunswick, next month.

For the Provincial Freeman.

BUFFALO, N. Y. May 23, 1854.

DEAR FREEMAN:—I left home on the 19th, somewhat after the manner of the King's sons, who went out to seek their fortunes; not knowing certainly, which way to direct my steps—when after a good deal of debating, and a few hours' ride on the "Peerless,", I definitely decided upon Niagara Falls and Buffalo, as points of most interest for one day, and accordingly took stage thitherward, at some place on a high hill, opposite Queenston.

I shall not entertain your readers with the particulars of my journey, as I suppose the experience of one colored person, travelling in the States, is as near as may be like every other one's. The same allowance of negrophobia, and small favors in general, are meted to every one, making a striking contrast to Toronto and other places in Canada, where respectable colored people, often get (from the worst classes, only,) the abuse here received in common. The cause of the hostility of inferior persons in Canada, I attribute to jealousy—it cannot be from any other source; as those most disturbed about the ingress of respectable persons, do not shrink from association with inferior negroes. The difference, you perceive then, is in favor of Canada. But to proceed.

The travel was through too beautiful a country to be blasted by slavery, though so it is. Vegetation tolerably forward—scenery fine, &c., but as my powers of description are not of the best, the imaginations of your readers must supply the deficiency.

Arrived at the Falls in good season, with the trifling episode of a blessing from an Irish fellow-passenger, a female, by the way, who could not "understand the impudence of some folks," that could make them object to riding in the same carriage with her little (black dog,) "Beauty," which after a remonstrance by us was settled in the "boot"

Your readers know what the Falls are, but they may not know that the Provincial Freeman will have more readers there in future, than all of "our" papers together. Mrs. Patterson, our agent there, (who will pardon this use of her name,) did her best to introduce the new journal, and with gratifying success. I would also "return thanks," individually, on your behalf, to the many friends who were aiding the work, but as every one does not care to see his name in print, unless unavoidable, and as no great purpose is answered by it, I forbear.

Half-past six o'clock started for Buffalo, the residence of the Emigration champion, Whitfield, and old father Barton, and landed from the cars in time to get the benefit of a drenching, which was soon forgotten, however, by the kindly reception given to the paper. Should the "times" favor, there will be a large number of readers here; at present, the prospect is in every way favorable.

"Our" people are between two fires in Buffalo. The majority are silently in favor of Emigration—Whitfield's theory is thought to be better than none, but the exclusive feature of it is not acceptable to the mass. They, with few exceptions, oppose the Anti-Emigration theory of the New York nation, but are frightened by the great names connected with it. There are some whole-souled people in Buffalo,—some who will yet leave for Canada, and whose departure from the land of their birth, should shame the American profession of equality. More again

Summary of News.

The arrivals this week bring no war news of very striking import.

A great concentration of troops is going on at Shumla, and no serious operations are intended until the arrival of the French regiments.

The great victory of the Turks in the Dobrudscha is confirmed.

A letter from Constantinople, of the 25th ult., states that the Turkish Government has just decreed a new and extensive levy of troops.

A dispatch from Constantinople, dated April 30th, says:

Lord Raglan has just arrived. Fifteen thousand men of the English army are already here. The artillery and cavalry are expected, and will complete the whole of the English division. An equal number of soldiers from the French army are likewise proceeding to Constantinople. The fleets were on the 25th off Sebastopol.

Twelve Russian trading vessels have been captured before Sebastopol, by three steamers of the combined fleets.

A French steamer, near Salonica, has sunk three vessels laden with Greek volunteers.

A letter from Odessa, to a Greek firm, dated April 26, says:

"People are hurrying back to town to re-open their houses, warehouses, shops and premises, and to-morrow no vestige of the sad scene witnessed a few days ago will remain. Trade will be resumed, confidence restored, and we shall be enabled to follow diligently our peaceful avocations."

Full accounts of the bombardment have been received. The affair was far from decisive, being mere destruction without result. Three Russian ships in the harbor took fire, and burned to the water's edge; also two smaller ships and two ships of war. During the action, red hot shot from the Terrible blew up the Russian magazine on the mole, and silenced a formidable battery. The rockets also set the lower part of the city on fire, which burned for two days. The Allies estimate their loss at less than twenty killed. The Russians estimate their loss at twenty killed and sixty wounded.

A correspondent of the London Times writes from Carlscrona, Sweden, that on the 4th inst. an English frigate was ashore in the vicinity of Revel, and it was feared that her Captain and crew would be made prisoners.

Negociations for an alliance, offensive and defensive, between the Allied Powers and Sweden, are said to have progressed so favorably that they are on the point of being concluded.

It is stated in Paris, that Spain, Portugal and Piedmont are willing to join the Western Powers.

Hanover has declared against letters of marque; and it is rumored that Austria is about to do likewise.

A report is in circulation that a steam vessel, with yellow paddle-boxes, dismasted and apparently weather-beaten, supposed to be the missing City of Glasgow, had been seen steering for the Azores. Of course there must be some mistake here, as the vessel referred to was a propeller, and had no paddle-boxes.

Episcopalian Catechism.

The Southern Episcopalian, a Charleston, S. C. monthly, gives in its April number, an interesting catechism for slaves. We extract the following questions and answers as samples of religious instruction.

Who keeps snakes and all bad things from hurting you? God does.

Who gave you a master and mistress? God gave them to me.

Who says that you must obey them? God says that I must.

What book tells you all these things? The Bible.

What is the Bible? The Bible is God's word.

How does God do all his work? He always does it right.

Does God love to work? Yes God is always at work.

Do the good angels work? Yes, they do what God tells them.

Do they love to work? Yes, they love to please God.

What does God say about your work? He that will not work shall not eat.

Did Adam and Eve have to work? Yes, they were to keep the garden.

Was it hard to keep that garden? No, it was very easy.

What makes the crops so hard to grow now? Sin makes it.

What makes you lazy? My own wicked heart.

What makes you break the Sabbath? My own wicked heart.

What makes you curse and fight? My own wicked heart.

How do you know your heart is wicked? I feel it every day.

Who teaches you so many wicked things? The devil.

Must you let the devil teach you? No, I must not."—Phil. Register.

DESCRIPTION OF THE DARDANELLES.—The Dardanelles are four strong castles built upon the European and Asiatic coasts of the Hellespont, opposite to each other, and commanding the strait. They are regarded as the key to Constantinople. The name is probably derived from the old city of Dardanum. The entrance to the Hellespont is commanded by two castles, which are called the new castles, because they were built (subsequently to the other two,) in the middle of the seventeenth century, under Mohammed IV., to afford protection to the Turkish fleets against the Venetians. The distance from one to another is about two miles and a quarter. Four hours sail to the north are the old castles built by Mahommed II., immediately after the conquest of Constantinople. They are not more than 1500 yards apart.

Farther on, the channel becomes narrower, and at an hour and a half's sail from the old castle, two promontories, about 750 yards apart, suddenly appear, and form that strait rendered famous by the bridge of Xerxes, by the nightly visits of Leonidas to Hero, and by the passage of Solyman upon a bare raft. The Turks have been extremely negligent of the celebrated castles of the Dardanelles, and at times they have been almost completely in ruins. The guns with which they are provided are said to be very large—22 English feet long, and 33 inches diameter of bore. The old castles are now seldom referred to, and when the Dardanelles are spoken of, the last-erected castles are meant.—N. Y. Sunday Times.

PROGRESS OF THE WAR.

From the Daily News, May 6.

The Czar has received the first lesson which his pride and injustice have compelled the Western powers to read to him. The first authentic account of the operations of the allied fleets at Odessa—from beginning to end of the affair—was read last night by Lord Clarendon in the House of Lords, and described by Sir James Graham in the Commons. It is contained in a telegraphic despatch received from Admiral Dundas via Belgrade and Varno. We now know for certain that on the 22nd of April a division of steamboats had destroyed the Imperial Mole at Odessa, and certain Russian ships in harbor there; that the quarantine station, the foreign ships in harbor, and the city itself had not been injured; that the utmost care had been taken to avoid injuring private and neutral property. The Consul at Belgrade adds, on the authority of the Pacha, that the Russians land batteries had been entirely destroyed, and the great powder magazine blown up; and from other sources, that the loss sustained on board the allied fleet was comparatively very slight.

The motive which prompted the attack at Odessa, the exact motive of the operation contemplated, and the amount of success that has been acheived, are now made clearly apparent. The Admirals have (for the present) limited their efforts to a blow that should impress upon the Russian Government the conviction that it will not be allowed to transgress the laws of civilized war with impunity. They have fully succeeded in carrying this their intention into effect; have inflicted a severe and galling blow upon the enemy with scarcely any loss to themselves. And with admirable tact and discretion they have spared not only neutral property, but the private property of Russian subjects. Their actions have confirmed their words, that it is against the Government, not the people of Russia, that England and France direct their combined forces. This generous and humane forbearance ought to be as well appreciated by the Muscovites as the mortifying blow it has received will be approved by their Government. The operations of the combined fleet at Odessa cannot fail to produce a great moral effect, both as showing how unequal the Czar is to cope with the enemies his profligate arrogance has provoked, and as showing that France and England act upon the high inspiration of a resolve to enforce justice and equity, and are entirely free from blind and unreasoning anger.

The present position of affairs on the Euxine shows clearly that the Caar has provoked a hostility too mighty for him to withstand, and that he is already painfully conscious how far he has overrated his own power. He is destroying his forts and withdrawing his garrisons from Circassia, although he knows that the mountaineers, goaded to frenzy by his causeless and pertinacious infliction of the miseries of war upon them for a long series of years, will be thereby encouraged to cut off his armies in the Trans-Caucasian Provinces, and carry their retaliatory inroads far to the north of the Kuban. His fleet has strict injunctions to keep itself secure under the guns of Sabastopol. His armies in the Danubian Provinces have found it necessary to fall back upon a position in the rear of that which they first occupied, and while they are deterred by the forces concentrated round Shumla by Omar Pacha, and the presence of the allied fleets on their flank, from advancing beyond the line of the Danube, the Turkish troops from Sofia and Widden are rapidly closing in upon their rear as they retreat from Lesser Wallachia. They are held in check, and all but entirely surrounded. They have experienced mortifying and discouraging defeats—by the Turks before Kalafat, by the French and English within their own entrenchments at Odessa. Nothing but a narrow-minded conception on the part of the Western Powers of what they can and ought to do—nothing but the most pusillanimous and irresolute allowing of time to be lost, and opportunities to escape, can prevent the Western Powers from so effectually muzzling the Holstein Gottorp despotism at St. Petersburg and Moscow, as to render it utterly innocuous, at least, for a long tract of years. The first broadside has at last been discharged on the Euxine; before its echoes have died away we may hear an answering salvo from the Baltic.

Gold at the Cape of Good Hope.

A NEW AFRICAN REPUBLIC.

The Boston Traveller contains some interesting accounts from the Cape, received by the bark Springbok, from Capetown March 26th.

Gold has been found in the vicinity of Smithfield, and the deposits seem to be rich. One letter, dated March 10, says: "Gold is now found in large nuggets. We have some splendid specimens here that have been dug up in the past two days. Copper, mixed with gold, is found in abundance upon another farm."

The locality and extent of diggings are thus described:

"Smithfield is about three hundred and twenty-four miles from Algoa Bay. It is the most Southern point at which gold has been discovered, while Patchefstroom is the most northern. The distance between the two points is at least five hundred miles, the whole of which, it is highly probable will be found auriferous. The whole of this immense tract of country is almost unknown, with the exception of a small strip."

The Cape Town Advertiser says: "The fact has been ascertained that prolific gold diggings have been discovered, and by yesterday's post some six or eight nuggets, one weighing forty grains, have been received here."

A letter in the Eastern Province Herald says: "Gold seems to be found everywhere—on the Koesberg, in Mosech's country, and on the Smithfield Dike. What the end of this will be I cannot tell."

A letter in the Cape Town Mail, from the Smithfield diggings says:—

"The hole dug by Finley brought them down to the bed of an old river, where agates and other valuable stones were found. Here the largest nugget was found, but the water coming in in great abundance, stopped further operations. Other holes have yielded more gold, and it has now been found in such quantity as to warrant the expectation of a large discovery. The gold in some places is found in the centre of a ridge of iron stone, (which has evidently been thrown up by volcanic action) in a vein of quartz. The upper part of the vein is small, which gradually widens as the shaft is sunk. The most profitable part, the clay, is thrown away, the diggers not having the proper washing cradles. From accounts I have seen of California and Australia, there has been more gold found near the surface here than there. The deepest shaft that has been sunk is sixteen feet. Copper ore has also been found, of a purity that will astonish you. I believe the copper ore will contribute as much to the enriching of the territory as the gold discovery. The copper is found on the surface in waggon loads, and contains a considerable per centage of gold."

It is stated that England has withdrawn from any further control of the Orange river sovereignity, which appears to be the country including these new gold discoveries. A "provincial" (provisional) Republican government has been formed, with J. P. Hoffman as President. The probability is that on hearing of the gold, England will "re-anex" the infant State.

☞ The Editor of the Temperance Organ, at San Francisco, says he was in a respectable company of ladies and gentlemen in that city, a short time since, where one of the ladies (?) was drunk and he saw that some sixteen or seventeen more acted exactly like her. He met one of the ladies next day, and she looked lean and haggard, and had a bad headache. Quite a number of the gentlemen (?) are manifestly corned—one most particularly so

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled secretly, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him. Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon race, or any other of the one great human family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. Ward showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony,—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B. Gribble, of St. Paul's East Smithfield and seconded by the Rev. Thomas James Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev Samuel Ringold Ward, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after effecting their escape from the United States and feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number.

Go Forth into the Country.

Go forth into the country,
From a world of care and guile,
Forth to the untainted air,
And the sunshine's open smile;
It shall clear thy clouded brow—
It shall loose the worldly coil
That binds thy heart too closely up,
Thou man of care and toil!

Go forth into the country,
Where gladsome sights and sounds
Make the heart's pulses thrill and leap
With fresher, quicker bounds.
They shall wake fresh life within
The mind's enchanted bower;
Go, student of the midnight lamp,
And try their magic power.

Go forth into the country,
With its songs of happy birds,
Its fertile vales, its grassy hills,
Alive with flocks and herds.
Against the power of sadness
Is its magic all arrayed—
Go forth and dream no idle dreams,
O, visionary maid!

Go forth into the country,
Where the nut's rich clusters grow;
Where the strawberry nestles 'mid the furze,
And the holly-berries glow.
Each season hath its treasures,
Like thee all free and wild—
Who would keep thee from the country,
Thou happy, artless child?

Go forth into the country—
It hath many a solemn grove,
And many an altar on its hills,
Sacred to peace and love.
And while with grateful fervor
Thine eyes its glories scan,
Worship the God who made it all,
O, holy, Christian man!

Vision of Charles XI.

We are in the habit of laughing incredulously at stories of visions, and supernatural apparitions, yet some are so well authenticated that if we refuse to believe them, we should in consistency, reject all historical evidence. The fact I am about to relate is guaranteed by a declaration signed by four credible witnesses; I would only add, that the prediction contained in this declaration was well known and generally spoken of long before the occurrence of the events which have apparently fulfilled it.

Charles XI. father of the celebrated Charles XII. was one of the most despotic, but, at the same time, wisest monarchs, who ever reigned in Sweden. He curtailed the enormous privileges of the nobility, abolished the power of the Senate, made laws on his own authority; in a word, he changed the constitution of the country hitherto an oligarchy, and forced the States to invest him with absolute power. He was a man of enlightened, and strong mind, firmly attached to the Lutheran religion; his disposition was cold, unfeeling, and phlegmatic, utterly destitute of imagination. He had just lost his queen, Ulrica Eleonora, and he appeared to feel her death more than could have been expected from a man of his character. He became even more silent and gloomy than before, and his incessant application to business proved his anxiety to banish painful reflections.

Towards the close of an autumn evening he was sitting in his dressing-gown and slippers, before a large fire in his private apartment. His chamberlain, Count Brahe, and his physician, Baumgarten, were with him. The evening wore away and his Majesty did not dismiss them as usual; with his head down and his eyes fixed on the fire, he maintained a profound silence, weary of his guests, and fearing, half-unconsciously to remain alone. The count and his companion tried various subjects of conversation but could interest him in nothing. At length Brahe, who supposed that sorrow for the queen was the cause of his depression, said with a deep sigh, and pointing to her portrait which hung in the room:

"What a likeness that is! How truly it gives the expression, at once so gentle and so dignified!"

"Nonsense!" said the king angrily, "the portrait is far too flattering; the queen was decidedly plain."

Then, vexed at his unkind words, he rose and walked up and down the room, to hide an emotion at which he blushed. After a few minutes he stopped before the window looking into the court; the night was black and the moon was in her first quarter.

The palace where the kings of Sweden now reside was not completed, and Charles XI. who commenced it, inhabited the old palace situated on the Ritzholm, facing Lake Modu. It is a large building in the form of a horse-shoe; the king's private apartments were in one of the extremities, opposite was the great hall where the States assembled to recieve communications from the crown. The windows of that hall suddenly appeared illuminated. The king was startled, but at first supposed that a servant with a light was passing through; but then, that hall was never opened except on state occasions, and the light was too brilliant to be caused by a single lamp. It then occurred to him that it must be a conflagration; but there was no smoke, and the glass was not broken; it had rather the appearance of an illumination. Brahe's attention having been called to it, he proposed sending one of the pages to ascertain the cause of the light but the king stopped him, saying, he would go himself to the hall. He left the room, followed by the count and doctor with lighted torches. Baumgarten called the man who had charge of the keys, and ordered him in the king's name to open the doors of the great hall. Great was his surprise at this unexpected command. He dressed himself as quickly as possible, and came to the king with his bunch of keys. He opened the first door which served as an ante-chamber to the hall. The king entered and what his amazement at finding the walls hung with black.

"What is the meaning of this," exclaimed he.

The man replied, that he did not know what to make of it, adding, "When the gallery was last opened there was certainly no hanging over the oak pannelling."

The king walked on to the door of the hall.

"Go no further, for heaven's sake," exclaimed the man; "surely there is sorcery going on inside. At this hour, since the queen's death, she walks up and down here. God protect us."

"Stop sire," cried the count and Baumgarten together, "don't you hear that noise who knows to what dangers you are exposing yourself! At all events allow me to summon the guards."

"I will go in" said the king firmly, "open the door at once."

The man's hand trembled so that he could not turn the key.

"A fine thing to see an old soldier frightened," said the king, shrugging his shoulders; "come count, will you open the door?"

"Sire," replied Brahe, "let your Majesty command me to march to the mouth of the Danish and German cannon, and I will obey unhesitatingly, but I cannot defy hell itself."

"Well," said the king in a tone of contempt, "I can do it myself."

He took the key, opened the massive oak door, and entered the hall, pronouncing "With the help of God." His two attendants, whose curiosity overcame their fears, or who, perhaps were ashamed to desert their sovereign followed him. The hall was lighted up by an innumerable number of torches. A black hanging had replaced the old tapestry. The benches round the hall were occupied by a multitude, all dressed in black; their faces were so dazzingly bright that the four spectators of this scene were unable to distinguish one of them. On an elevated throne from which the king was accustomed to address the assembly, sat a bloody corpse, as if wounded in several parts and covered with the ensigns of royalty; on his right stood a child—a crown on his head, and a scetpre in his hand; at his left an old man leant on the throne; he was dressed in a mantle formerly worn by the administrators of Sweden before it became a kingdom under Gustavus Vasa. Before the throne were seated several grave anstere looking personages, in long black robes. Between the throne and the benches of the assembly was a block covered with black crape; an axe lay beside it. No one in the vast assembly appeared conscious of the presence of Charles and his companions. On their entrance they heard nothing but a confused murmer, in which they could distinguish no words. Then the most venerable of the judges in black robes. he who seemed to be their president, rose, and struck his hand five times on a large folio volume which lay open before him.—Immediately there was a profound silence, and some young men richly dressed, their hands tied behind their backs, entered the hall by a door opposite to that which Charles had opened. He who walked first and who appeared the most important of the prisoners, stopped in the middle of the hall, before the block, which he looked at with supreme contempt. At the same time the corps on the throne trembled convulsivly, and a crimson stream flowed from its wounds. The young man knelt down, laid his head on the block, the axe glittered in the air for a moment, and descended on the block, the head rolled over the marble pavement, and reached the feet of the king, and stained his slipper with blood. Until this moment surprise had kept Charles silent, but this horrible spectacle roused him, and advancing two or three steps towards the throne, he boldly addressed the figure on its left in the well known formulary:

"If thou art of God, speak; if of the other leave us in peace."

The phantom answered slowly and solemnly:

"King Charles, this blood will not flow in thy time, but five reigns after." Here the voice became less distinct, "Woe, woe, woe to the blood of Vasa?"

The form of the assembly now became less clear, and seemed but colored shades: soon they entirely disappeared; and the lights were extinguished; still they heard a melodious noise, which one of the witnesses compared to the murmuring of the wind among the trees, another to the sound a harp string gives in breading. All agreed as to the duration of the aparition, they say it lasted ten minutes. The hangings, the head, the waves of blood, and all disappeared with the phantoms, but Charles' slippers still retained a crimson stain which alone would have served to remind him of the scenes of that night, if indeed they had not been but too well engraven on his memory.

When the king returned to his apartments, he wrote an account of what he had seen, and he and his companions signed it. In spite of all the precautions taken to keep these circumstances private, they were well known, even during the lifetime of Charles, and no one hitherto has thought fit to raise doubts as to their authenticity.

The Sabbath Bell.

BY ELIZA COOK.

Peal on, peal on—I love to hear
The old Church ding-dong soft and clear;
The welcome sounds are doubly blest
With future hopes and earthly rest.
Yet though no calling chime is found
To spread the cheering echoes round,
There's not a place where man may dwell,
But he can hear a Sabbath bell.

Go to the woods, where winter's song
Howls, like a famished wolf, along,
Or where the south winds scarcely turn
The light leaves of the trembling fern—
Although no cloister chimes ring there,
The heart is called to faith and prayer;
For all creation's voices tell
The tidings of the Sabbath bell.

Go to the billows, let them pour
In gentle calm and headlong roar;
Let the vast ocean be thy home,
Thou'lt find a God upon the foam;
In rippling swell or stormy roll,
The crystal waves shall wake thy soul,
And thou shalt feel the hallowed spell
Of the wide water's Sabbath bell.

A lark upon his skyward way,
A robin on the hedge-row spray,
A bee within the wild thyme's bloom,
An owl amid the cypress gloom,—
All sing in every varied tone
A vesper to the great Unknown;
Above—below—one chorus swells,
Echoing sounds of Sabbath bells.

Paris Millinery.

There are in Paris eight hundred and seventy nine millinery establishments, of which eight hundred and sixty-seven are managed by females. These houses employ 2,717 work-women, and the buisness for Paris alone amounts to nearly thirteen millions of francs a year. Under the head of millinery is included the making of bonnets of different kinds, caps, head-dresses for evening parties, and fancy articles for the toilet. Gloves, readymade linen, embroidery, and dress-making come under other categories. The articles of millinery above mentioned, acquire almost all their value from the labor of the workwomen, the originality of the cut, the grace of a bow, or the skilful adjustment of a ribbon. The millinery business reckons six months of dead season,—three in the summer, and three in the winter. It is during this time that these houses make goods for exportation which are soon afterwards distributed over every part of the world. Dress-making includes almost exclusively the making of dresses, the material for which is furnished by the customer, the dress-maker furnishing only the lining, trimming, etc. These trimmings and the making of the dresses sometimes reach prices almost fabulous. There are in Paris 5,181 dress-makers, of whom eighty-six employ more than ten workwomen; 1,239, from two to ten; 3,203 work alone, or only employ assistance at certain periods. The number of workwomen in this category may be, then, reckoned at 10,00, and are perfectly distinct from those we have mentioned above. They are employed in making dresses, cloaks and such-like articles. The ladies of Paris attach more importance to fine linen than even to the richest silks and velvets. The production of this trade amounts to twenty-seven millions of francs a year. It is carried on by 2,023 persons of both sexes, and employs 10,190 workwomen. Since the large embroidered sleeves worn by the ladies, have come into fashion, one house in Paris has exported more than 30,000 of them to America.

The Lay of the Lowly.

BY ROBERT NICOLL.

We are lowly—very lowly,
Mistortune is our crime;
We 've been trodden under foot
From all recorded time.
A yoke upon our necks is laid,
A burden to endure;
To suffer is our legacy,
The portion of the poor.

We are lowly—very lowly,
And scorned from day to day;
Yet we have something of our own,
Power cannot take away.
By tyrants we are toiled to death—
By cold and hunger killed;
But peace is in our heart—it speaks
Of duties all fulfilled!

We are lowly—very lowly,
Nor house nor lands have we;
But there's a heritage for us,
While we have eyes to see.
They cannot hide the lovely stars,
Words in creation's book,
Although they hold their fields and lanes
Corrupted by our look!

We are lowly—very lowly,
And yet the fairest flowers,
That by the wayside raise their eyes—
Thank God they still are ours!
Ours is the streamlet's mellow voice,
And ours the common dew.
We still dare gaze on hill and plain,
And field and meadow too!

We are lowly—very lowly;
But when the cheerful Spring
Comes forth with flowers upon her feet,
To hear the throstle sing—
Although we dare not seek the shade
Where haunt the forest deer,
The waving leaves we still can see,
The hymning birds can hear!

We are lowly—very lowly;
Our hedgerow paths are gone,
Where woodbines lay their fairy hands
The hawthorn's breast upon.
Yet slender mercies still are left,
And Heaven doth endure,
And hears the prayers that upward rise
From the afflicted poor.

The Invalid Wife.

BY FANNY FERN.

"Every wife makes a good stock of love, to begin with."

Don't she? You are upon a sick bed; a little, feeble thing lies on your arm, that you might crush with one hand. You take those little yelvet fingers in yours, close your eyes, and turn languidly on the pillow.—Little brothers and sisters—Carry and Henry, and Fanny, and Frank and Willie, and Mary, and Kitty!—half a score—come tiptoeing into the room, to "see the baby." It is quite an old story to nurse, who sits like an automaton, while they give vent to the enthusiastic admiration of its wee toes and fingers, and make profound inquiries, which nobody things best to hear. You look on with a languid smile, and they pass out, asking "why they can't stay with dear mamma," and why they musn't play "puss in the corner," as usual? You wonder if your little croupy boy tied his tippet on when he went to school, and whether Betty will see that your husband's flannel is aired, and if Peggy has cleaned the silver and washed off the front door steps, and what your blessed husband is about; and that he don't come home to dinner.

There sits old nurse, keeping up that dreadful treadmill trotting "to quiet the baby," till you could fly through the key-hole in desperation. The odor of dinner begins to creep up stairs. You wonder if your husband's pudding will be made right, and if Betty will remember to put wine in the sauce, as likes it; and then the perspiration starts on your forehead as you hear a thumping on the stairs, and a childs suppressed scream; and then the nurse swathes the baby up in flannel to the tip of its nose, dumps it down on an easy chair, and tells you to leave the family to her and go to sleep.—By-and-by she comes in after staying long enough to get a refreshing cup of coffee, and walks to the bed-side with a bowl of gruel, tasting it, and then putting the spoon into the bowl. In the first place, you hate gruel; and in the next, you couldn't eat it if she had a pistol to your head, after that spoon had been in her mouth; so you meekly suggest that it be set on the table to cool—hoping, by some providential interposition, it may get tipped over. Well, she moves round your room with a pair of creaking shoes, and a bran new gingham gown, that rattles like a paper window-curtain at every step; and smoothes her hair with your nice little brush and opens a drawer by mistake (?) "thinking it was the baby's drawer." Then you hear little nails scratching on the door, and Charley whispers through the key-hole, "Mamma, Charley's tired; please let Charley come in."

Nurse scowls, and says no; but you intercede—poor Charley, he's only a baby himself. Well, he leans his head against the pillow, and looks suspiciously at that little moving bundle of flannel in nurse's lap. It's clear he had a hard time of it, with tears and molasses! The little shining curls that you have so often rolled over your finger, are a tangled mass; and you long to take him and make him comfortable, and cosset him a little, and then baby cries again, and you turn your head to the pillow with a smothering sigh. Nurse hears it, and Charley is taken struggling from the room. You take your watch from under the pillow, to see if husband won't be home soon, and then look at nurse, who takes a pinch of snuff over the gruel, and sits down nodding drowsily, with the baby in an alarming proximity to the fire. Now you hear a dear step on the stairs. It's your Charley! How bright he looks! and what nice fresh air he brings with him out of doors!

He parts the bed curtains, and looks in and pats you on the cheek. You just want to lay your head on his shoulder, and have such a splendid cry! But there sits that old Gorgon of a nurse—she don't believe in husbands, she don't! You make Charley a freemason sign to send her down stairs for something. He says, right out loud, men are stupid! "What did you say, dear?"

Of course you protest you didn't say a word—never thought of such a thing! and cuddle your head down to your ruffled pillow, and cry because you are weak and weary, and full of care for your family, and don't want to see anybody but Charley! Nurse says "she will have you sick," and tells your husband, "he'd better go down, and let you go to sleep." Off he goes, wondering what on earth ails you to cry; wishing he had nothing to do but to lie still and be waited upon!

After dinner he comes to bid you good-bye before he goes to the office—whistles "Nelly Bligh," loud enough to wake up the baby, whom he calls a comical little concern, and then puts his dear thoughtless head down to your pillow, at a signal from you, to hear what you have to say. Well, there's no help for it, you cry again, and only say, "Dear Charley!" and he laughs, and settles his dicky, and says you are a "nervous little puss," gives you a kiss, lights his cigar at the fire, half strangles the new baby with the first whiff, and takes your heart off with him down the street!

And you lie there and eat that gruel! and pick the fuz off the blankets, and make faces at the nurse, under the sheet, and wish Eve had never ate the apple (Gen. iii. 16,) or that you were Able to Cain her for doing it!

LIFE IN RUSSIA.—Living in Casks.—A peasant here is a wretched looking being—dirty, ill-clad, and hungry-looking. His shaggy beard, huge boots outside his trowsers, dingy blue frock, and rough cap, speak of hardships of all kinds. But give him his short black pipe, and spirits enough to madden and then stupify him, and he will not complain of his destiny. The female of the same class is even more easily contented. The tub residences to which I referred are among the features of the monster market here, and they are inhabited by women. Elevation, ground plan, and other architectural contrivances, are all comprehended in a single effort. A large black cask, somewhat resembling a sugar hogshead, is laid on its side, and the house is built. A quantity of hay is laid inside, and the house is furnished. The lady gets in upon the hay, and the house is inhabited. Before the entrance of her mansion she secures the onions, tomatoes, or whatever else she may vend, and during the hours of business, she sits in the tub, smokes her pipe, chatters with her customers, and says her prayers. After business is over, she ascertains in which quarter the wind stirs—turns the close end of her tub towards that quarter, and creeps to rest in peace and tranquillity. But some of these women are ambitious, and take to building. They do not, indeed, demand marble staircases and mahogany doors; but they take two tubs, which are laid face to face, but at a distance of three or four feet—and over the interstice, tubs, and all, is placed a water-tight canvas. The fair occupant (and two or three whom I saw, though not literally fair, were extremely pretty) has then two rooms, besides a hall; but this luxury is not adopted by the older class, who think that we ought to adhere to the customs of our ancestors.—Russians in the South.

AN INCIDENT.—The New York Evening Post relates that the present Emperor Nicholas, some time since, driving along in his droshke, observed an English gentleman move down another street, apparently, as he thought, to avoid him. He sent an officer to ask why he had done so when the Emperor was coming. The answer was, that "he did not see his Imperial Majesty." "Then desire him to wear spectacles in future," was the immediate command; with which the delinquent was forced to comply, during the remainder of his residence in St. Petersburg, much to his own annoyance and the amusement of his friends, for he was a remarkably well-looking man, and piqued himself on his clear sight.

DEATH FROM ROPE JUMPING.—A bright and interesting little girl, about eight years of age, died on Monday last, in the village of Newark, from convulsions, brought on by excessive exertions in "jumping the rope." She was competing with several of her school companions, in this exercise, who were endeavouring to out-do each other in endurance. She jumped four hundred times in succession, and until entirely overcome by the long continued exertions. The child was taken home insensible, but the movement of the muscles of the limbs, as in jumping, continued for about forty-eight hours, until the sufferer was released from the painful exercise by death.—Roch. Democrat.

TERRIFIC ELOQUENCE.—At a country debating school, where the question was, 'Which exerts most influence, love of country, or love of France?' the leader on the 'country' side, arose and delivered himself as follows: —"When Washington, with his invincible urchins, was preparing to cross the Delaware to attack the preposterous Hessians, was it not he, with one hand on his heart, and pointing his flashing blade at the malignant enemy, and reining in his fiery steed, and blowing his fingers to keep them from freezing, for it was cold, that cried out, 'E Pluribus Unum' forever?" He had demolished his opponents in one sentence. The audience was convinced, and Country declared victorious by a unanimous vote.

The "independence" of Dutch emigrants struck us very forcibly to-day, as we marked a party of those worthy individuals, men, women and children, on Exchange street. The women stood in the street without any covering to their heads during the prevalence of a sharp rain, sleet and snow storm—two of the men were quarrelling in "low Dutch" over a trunk—one was dancing a hornpipe on the sidewalk—two of the children were fighting for a stick of candy—and another was "making bubbles" by jumping in a mud puddle, up to his knees. Each was apparently intent upon his own business, and heedless of the employment of the rest of the company.—New York Paper.

THE BELLIGERENT FORCES.—According to the most reliablae accounts, the Russians have now upon the Danube 115,000 men—say 80,000 to 90,000 infantry, 10,000 cavalry, 8,000 to 10,000 Cossacks and the proportionate amount of artillery. This allows 35,000 for killed, wounded and sick, since the Russian forces first entered the Principalities. There are, it is said, 20,000 more between the Pruth and Dniester, in Bessarabia, ready for immediate reinforcement. The effective strength of the Turkish army is calculated at 117,000 men. As to numbers, therefore, there is no disparity. The proportion of cavalry, however, is in favor of the Russians. The English forces under Lord Raglan amount to about 20,000, and the French to about 50,000 or more. Both will soon be increased and probably doubled.

THE ALLIED FLEETS TO BE BLOWN UP.—The New York Herald states that Ex-Alderman Wesley Smith, together with several other Americans, went out in the last outward trip of the Baltic in company with M. Grunnwald, a Russian officer, bound to St. Petersburgh, and that they are in contract with Russia for the destruction of the allied fleet in the Baltic, by means of Taylor's Submarine Armor and Colt's Submarine Battery. They are to receive £100,000 sterling for the clean job, or a proportionable sum for all services short of that.

THE ENGLISH QUARTER OF GRAIN.—There is some misapprehension existing, says an exchange as to the quantity of grain contained in an English quarter. It is eight bushels, but not eight Winchester bushels, which is our measure. The quarter contains eight Imperial bushels, about eight and a quarter of our bushels. The Winchester bushel was the standard in England until 1826, since which time, the Imperial bushel has been the standard.

NEW RECIPE FOR MAKING ICE CREAM.—The following recipe is from a Connecticut lady: it is the best and quickest method of making ice cream we have seen. "Take one teacup of cream, one tea cup of sugar, one egg; beat the egg and sugar well together; flavor as you please, and then stir in light snow until it is frozen as stiff as you wish. It is quickly made, and first-rate.

THE GOSPEL TRIBUNE.

PROSPECTUS.

The first number of a monthly paper, to be known as above indicated, is proposed to be published in Toronto within a few months, and not later than the First day of July, 1854. The work in size and appearance, to be at least equal to the Missionary Record or Christian Observer; and as much superior to either in style and execution as the subscription list will warrant.

DISTINCTIVE OBJECT:

To enlarge the limits of Communion and Church-Membership, among Christians, to the greatest possible extent; and to circumscribe those bounds to the exclusion, if possible, of all other characters, without otherwise disturbing the Membership of existing Churches; till acknowledged Christian Character shall constitute the only passport, at any time, and the perfect passport at all times, to every Communion and Church worthy of the Christian name; "that the world may believe" in Christ, even as he prayed.

GENERAL OBJECTS:

The promotion of Religious, Moral, Intellectual and social improvement, under the guidance of Divine Revelation, submitting every move and measure to the test of Gospel Principles.

SUPPORTERS:

The distinctive and general objects of the work are such, as to claim for it the patronage of all classes of men, excepting those wedded to other pre-requisites of Communion and Church-membership, than acknowledged Christian Character; and here it is recorded with great pleasure that the encouragements tendered, thus far, are in strict accordance with the above general claims.

ORIGIN AND PROGRESS:

This movement has long been contemplated. For twenty years the subscriber has made the distinctive object of the GOSPEL TRIBUNE his special study: examining carefully and personally the denominational aspect of Religious Societies,—their reciprocal bearings, their mutual relations, and the nature of their combined influence on the evangelization of the world. Latterly, his position as Publisher of the SCRIPTURE MANUAL, has probably afforded him the best possible facilities for personally testing the strength his positions, and for the attainment of certain important information, but little of which he had previously been able to obtain. All may rest assured, however, that no undue advantage will ever be taken of the frankness and candor with which Christians of every name, as well as sceptics of every class, have freely expressed their convictions in the presence of the Travelling Colporteur; the capacity in which the Publisher is still extending his observations through Canada and the neighboring States.

CO-LABORERS:

Of distinguished worth and of well-known literary ability, are already secured in the several sections of Canada, and in the States of the American Union; and arrangements are now in progress, to obtain from living responsible writers in Britain, important assistance in the development of the TRIBUNE'S Mission.

TERMS AND NOTICES:

The Terms are One Dollar per Annum in advance,—otherwise Two Dollars, it being found that one half of the Subscriptions, not paid in advance, are worse than lost. Editors—friendly—will render assistance by noticing this Prospectus All parties willing to aid, may at once commence soliciting the names of Subscribers. Two books —the Scripture and Laconic Manuals—fully gilt, and the Paper one year, will be forwarded to the person who first sends the names of ten Subscribers; and one of either of the books, in substantial leather binding, or the Paper one year, to every one who sends ten names. Subscriptions and all other communications for the Paper to be sent, post-paid, marked Money, (if inclosed) and addressed, ROBERT DICK, Box 411, TORONTO.

Sermons and Lectures, promotive of the TRIBUNE'S object, will be delivered by the Publisher throughout the Province as frequently as shall be found compatible with his other duties.

(Signed) ROBERT DICK.

Toronto, March 25th, 1854.

CALL FOR A NATIONAL EMIGRATION CONVENTION OF COLORED MEN,

To be held in Cleveland, Ohio, on the 24th, 25th and 26th of August, 1854.

MEN AND BRETHERN:—The time has now fully come, when we, as an oppressed people, should do something effectively, and use those means adequate to the attainment of the great and long desired end—to do something to meet the actual demands of the present and prospective necessities of the rising generation of our people in this country. To do this, we must occupy a position of entire equality, of unrestricted rights, composing in fact, an acknowledged necessary part of the ruling element of society in which we live. The policy necessary to the preservation of this elemen must be in our favor, if ever we expect the enjoyment, freedom, sovereignty, and equality of rights anywhere. For this purpose, and to this end, then, all colored men in favor of emigration out of the United States, and opposed to the American Colonization sheme of leaving the Western Hemisphere, are requested to meet in CLEVELAND, OHIO, on TUESDAY, the 24th DAY of AUGUST, 1854, in a great NATIONAL CONVENTION, then and there, to consider and decide upon the great and important subject of emigration from the United States.

No person will be admitted to a seat in the Convention, who would introduce the subject of emigration to the Eastern Hemisphere—either to Asia, Africa, or Europe—as our object and determination is to consider our claims to the West Indies, Central and South America, and the Canadas. This restriction has no reference to personal preference, or individual enterprise; but to the great question of national claims to come before the Convention.

All persons coming to the Convention must bring credentials properly authenticated, or bring verbal assurance to the Committee on Credentials—appointed for the purpose—of their fidelity to the measures and objects set forth in this Call as the Convention is specifically by and for the friends of emigration, and NONE OTHERS—and no opposition to them will be entertained.

The question is not whether our condition can be bettered by emigration, but whether it can be made worse. If not, then, there is no part of the wide-spread universe, where our social and political condition are not better than here in our native country, and nowhere in the world as here, proscribed on account of color.

We are friends, too, and ever will stand shoulder to shoulder by our brethren, and all our friends in all good measures adopted by them for the bettering of our condition in this country, and surrender no rights but with our last breath; but as the subject of emigration is of vital importance, and has ever been shunned by all delegated assemblages of our people as heretofore met, we cannot longer delay, and will not be further baffled; and deny the right of our most sanguine friend or dearest brother, to prevent an intelligent enquiry to, and the carrying out of these measures, when this can be done, to our entire advantage, as we propose to show in Convention—as the West Indies, Central and South America—the majority of which are peopled by our brethren, or those identified with us in race, and what is more, destiny, on this continent—all stand with open arms and yearning hearts, importuning us in the name of suffering humanity to come—to make common cause, and share one common fate on the continent.

The Convention will meet without fail, at the time fixed for assembling, as none but those favorable to emigration are admissable; therefore no other gathering may prevent it. The number of delegates will not be restricted—except in the town where the Convention may be held—and there the number will be decided by the Convention when assembled, that they may not too far exceed the other delegations.

The time and place fixed for holding the Convention are ample; affording sufficient time, and a leisure season generally—and as Cleveland is now the centre of all directions—a good and favorable opportunity to all who desire to attend.—Therefore, it may reasonably be the greatest gathering of the colored people ever before assembled in a Convention in the United States.

Colonizationists are advised, that no favors will be shown to them or their expatriating scheme, as we have no sympathy with the enemies of our race.

All colored men, East, West, North and South, favorable to the measures set forth in this Call will send in their names (post-paid) to M. R Delany, or Rev. Wm. Webb, Pittsburgh, Pa., that there may be arranged and attached to the Call, five names from each State.

We must make an issue, create an event, and establish a position for ourselves. It is glorious to think of, but far more glorious to carry out.

Agricultural.

Clean Culture.

It is a fact, that ground, which is kept from vegetation, will not dry up so much, as that on which a crop is grown. There are many who doubt this, but if they will make a proper examination, I think their doubts will be removed. Make an experiment: take a piece of ground in your garden, or elsewhere, where it is free from vegetation, and hoe it every day, or often enongh to keep all vegetation from starting. Sow another piece adjoining with grass, or some kind of grain. After a drouth of two or three weeks, examine them by digging into them with a shovel or spade. The earth of the grass or grain plat will be found dry, like ashes, to two or three inches. Below that it will be found quite moist. Or if there is a tree in your field, see if the ground is not much dryer near it than on similar ground out of the reach of its roots. The fact is, the roots of vegetation bring the moisture from a far greater depth than could be done by simple evaporation. Now from all this we deduce the following argument in favor clean culture: this is—a culture which permits no useless vegetation to grow among cultivated crops: the advantage of which would be to give the whole benefit of the moisture and nutriment to the crop, instead of giving a portion of it to worthless weeds. In a dry time we frequently hear farmer say, it will not do to work my corn and potatoes; they need all the grass and weeds to keep them from drying up. Now, as we have shown, this is all a mistake; the grass and weeds make it dry up faster and deeper. But it is alleged that corn has been injured by working or plowing in a dry time: we admit that it is true under the following circumstances: If corn has got too large before it is worked, injury is then done. The reason is, the roots are extended and the plow cuts off so large a portion of them that there is not enough left to support it and it soon withers.

But it is only when the roots have become widely extended, and are torn and mutilated in the operation of working it, that any such consequences follow. If it is worked as it ought to be, while small, no fear of injury need be entertained.—Rural New Yorker.

Killing Wire-worms by means of Cobs.—A correspondent of the Michigan Farmer speaks highly of the practice of placing corn cobs in the hill of corn as a preventive of the injuries of wire-worms, as given in the Rural, of April 1st, The worms eat into the cob and leave the young corn alone. The editor has found this remedy an excellent one, and suggests that at the time of hoeing, one of the boys gather up the cobs and burn them, wire-worms and all.—If left in the cob they would wax fat, and increase there just as rapidly as they would if left alone altogether. It would be some trouble to stick corn cobs round each hill of corn in a large field, but where wire-worms are destructive, if it prove as certain a preventive of injury as is claimed, it would pay.

Don't Eat Horse Radish too Freely.—It is almost hazardous to say anything against a condiment so universally used and relished as this; but a word of caution is needed. Horse radish is highly stimulating and exploring to the stomach, and this effect is almost always followed by lassitude and weakness. We have met with several cases where persons have ignorantly used this root so freely as to be scarcely able to labour at all. Where it is needed as a medicine, a small quantity of horse radish is doubtless beneficial. But we are quite sure, from considerable observation of its effects upon ourselves and others, that any person using a spoonful or more, at a meal, will suffer in consequence, although the cause of this suffering may not be perceived, since it produces stimulating effects for the first hour or two after eating it.—Am. Ag.

Washing Sheep.—Sheep may be washed to any number, without subjecting the party employed to the unpleasant practice heretofore followed, of standing for hours in a cold stream. Take a large hogshead, knock out one head, set in it the water, place a few stones, or two or three bushels of gravel in the bottom, so as to sink it, leaving, say nine inches of the stones above the water. Then take four stakes with hooks on the top ends, and drive them into the bottom of the stream, so as to hold the hogshead firm; lay a temporary platform from the bank and get inside the vessel, and thus you may pursue the work in perfect comfort, wetting only the arms. This is a decided improvement, and should be generally adopted.

How Much Pork Will a Bushel of Corn Make?

This I consider an important question, and one that all farmers ought to be able to answer. I will answer the question by giving the result of an actual experiment, which is the only way of obtaining information.—Some years ago I was desirous of obtaining information as to the best and most profitable way of fattening hogs. I inquired of my neighbors and friends, and found some in favor of close floored pens, and others large dry lots; and as to the amount of opinions were as various as their countenances. I was just beginning to farm, and as I was desirous of knowing the best way of fattening hogs, I determined to try the different plans, and also how much pork a barrel of corn would make. I made a floored pen and covered in. Weighed three hogs and put them in the pen. I also weighed three of the same size and put them in a dry lot—average weight 175 lbs. I fed six barrels of corn to six hogs. They were forty days eating the corn—with a plenty of salt and water. Their average gain was 75 lbs.—The hogs in the lot gained the most. One that was fattened in the lot gained 88 lbs. One in the pen gained 84 lbs.; the other four were not so thrifty. These hogs were about fourteen months old when slaughtered. I put them up the 25th of October. There was a good deal of sleet and snow during the month of November, which gave the hogs in the pen an advantage they would not have had if the weather was favorable; they ate the same quantity of grain in the same time. It also shows that one bushel of corn will make 15 lbs. of pork; and that the six barrels of corn made $11,25c. worth of pork, at 2½ cts. per lb.; and that the farmer gets 12½ cts. for his labor of feeding per bushel, over selling at 25cts. per bushel.

Hogs will fatten faster in September and October, than they will in colder weather. —Ohio Cultivator.

Week's Weather.

On Friday evening the 19th, a heavy shower passed over the city, and the weather became cooler. It rained heavy a part of Saturday, and was rather cool. the thermometer on these two days was at about 54 during the day, and one time as low as 44 in the morning. Wind part of the time west and part east. Sunday morning was cool, thermometer 52. The trees were in full blossom only during the last week in May. The weather during May has been cool—no frosts for several days prior to the 20th. I heard a Baltimore Oriole in the trees near my residence on the 18th, a thing of rare occurrence about Toronto. This is the most beautiful bird of Canada, and of singular habits. The white wild lillies were out in bloom from the 15th of May to the end of the month. Cold showers of rain occurred several times on Sunday from the west.—During the day the thermometer stood at an average of 52; at night it fell to 47, the wind shifting to the northwest. I observed a humming bird sucking the sweets from the yellow flowery currant in my garden on this day, the 21st of May. Monday, sunny, wind northwest, thermometer in the morning in the wind 45. The weather was rather cool all day, at night the thermometer stood at 50. The ground is still damp and cool. I saw a whippoorwill in the air to-day.—Tuesday sunny, wind west, thermometer 51 in the morning. There was a frost on the ridge above Toronto. (Wednesday 24th, beautiful and sunny, but cool, wind northwest, thermometer in the morning after sunrise, 46. This is cold for the season, the buds are still only about half blown; apple blossoms are only just coming out.) The weather is pleasant for health and travelling, but too cool for vegetation. Wednesday towards noon became warm, the thermometer stood at 64 in the middle of the day, 62 at sundown, and 60 at night. The Queen's birthday (the 24th) was a delightful day, the wind shifted to the east, and about nine o'clock it rained. Thursday was a lovely warm day, a refreshing rain having occurred: wind northwest, thermometer in the morning 59. At noon this day the thermometer rose to 72 in the shade. On Thursday evening a heavy rain fell for an hour—thermometer stood at 3 o'clock 71. Friday sunny and rather windy, wind northwest, thermometer 57, in the morning.—Son of Temperance.

Vegetable Garden.—The operation of gardening at this season must depend on the weather and condition of the ground. Seeds not easily injured by frost should be sown, such as peas, beets, parsnips, lettuce, radish seed, onion seed and sets, early carrots, asparagus seeds for new beds, and plant out two year old roots, cabbage seed, &c. Uncover spinach, parsley, lettuce &c. Trench ground for horseradish, and set pieces of old roots in rich soil. Dress rhubarb, and manure thoroughly, if not already done. Give close attention to frames, &c., and cover on cold nights. Give air on fine days. Tomato, pepper and egg plants, which have grown thickly, should be pricked out into other frames. Start Lima beans in sods inverted, within doors, so as to be ready for planting out for early crops, so soon as the weather is settled. Set out beds of sweet majoram, winter savory, pennyroyal and other perennial herbs by dividing the roots of old plants. Plant sweet potatoes in hot beds for sprouting, and cucumbers in frames for forcing. As a general rule in gardening, make deep soil, manure heavily and use plenty of seed. Better to thin out than to re-sow.—Farm Journal.

Taming Horses.

In our account of the U. S. Ag. Society, allusion was made to some successful experiments made at the Maryland State Fair, by Mr. Offutt of Lexington, Kentucky, in subduing almost instantly, the most vicious horses. A correspondent having desired further information upon the subject, we addressed a letter to a gentleman in Maryland, who replies as follows:

"In reply to your favor of the 11th, I regret that I am unable to give you any satisfactory information. Mr. Offutt certainly possesses some wonderful and incomprehensible power over horses, but the why or wherefore is to me inexplicable. All I know is that he takes the wildest and most unmanageable animal and compels him to follow him about like a dog. He also has a theory relative to breeding animals which he has lately published in a volume, but he will only sell the work to particular persons, and then always with secrecy. He professes to be able to tell the disposition and performances of an animal simply by his formation, and also says he can teach any one to breed any particular points or qualities in an animal by an infallible rule.—Country Gentleman.

The Prospect.—In the country all is bloom. Present appearances indicate that the fruit crop this season will be remarkaby abundant. The blossoms have fallen from the cherry and other stone fruit trees, and the young fruit is beginning to make its appearance. The delicately tinted apple blossoms form the most pleasing sight of all. Along the line of the Northern Railroad the orchards, through which the quiet cottages of the farmers shine like pictures, gives the country a gay appearance and makes one feel proud to be a Canadian. The various shades of green of the woods also add to the beauty of the picture—the dark pine and the light green maple forming a pleasing contrast.—The fall wheat looks healthy; and the whole face of nature seems cheerful, gay and prosperous, and bespeaks a teeming harvest. —Colonist.

Condition of Hungary—Excited State of the People.

"Our Own Correspondent" of the Daily News, "sitting under the protection of Izzet Pacha and a Turkish fortress" sends a record of his impressions during a recent tour in Magyar lands. A portion of his letter is as follows:—"It is only a few months since I travelled in the land of bondage and the land of promise, and neither the banks of the Nile nor the deserts of Syria, can offer a comparison of slavish tyranny with the present mal-administration of poor, conquered, wronged, bleeding and wrathful Hungary. In those countries despotism is indeed the law, but the laziness and good nature of the officials, and the readiness to pocket small bribes in some measure saves the inhabitants. But in Hungary there is a watchful dragon, a great goggle-eyed ogre of a police, an organized and vast army of the meanest and most bloodthirsty spies, that never sleep, that condescend to every trick, to the most dastardly meaness, to the foulest treachery, to the smoothest deceit, in order more securely to entrap their victims. But, fortunately, the attention of the conquered kingdom, Hungary, is fully aroused. One sentiment of hatred, mistrust, of teethgnashing vengeance, of resolute waiting for the earliest and smallest opportunity, animates the whole Magyar population. If I should say that of the six million of Magyars (there are six more of various races) ninety-nine in 100 of all classes are confirmed in their deep-seated hatred of their oppressors, I should fall short of the reality. In three months and more, I never saw ten except spies and officials, who were otherwise minded. Indeed, many of the officials are with the people. At Pesth I conversed with a master workman, who trusting in my nationality, opened his heart. He said nobody dared to trust any except his tried friends; and presently, he mysteriously pointed to a broadframed man, stealing along in the shadow on the opposite side—"That's a rascally spyling," (Spilzt) said he. "He was once on our side, and has betrayed hundreds to prison and death. He goes into all the hotels. But we all know him now." I cannot help remarking with what astonishing quickness the Hungarians detect the presence of the vermin called spies. I have entered a room where two hundred people were assembled, and on the instant, in half a glance, it has been whispered in my ear, 'There are two that I wonder to see here; they may be invited suspicion—we must be very careful!" In a smaller company, I have seen one or more leave the room. On asking why?—"There is one more than enough in that room." In the country I was at a gentleman's house; two days after I left and in his absence, the house was searched. It is common for a Hungarian nobleleman, of the first rank and standing, to be ordered up at midnight and go round his own house, holding a light perhaps, or smoking his pipe, in slippers, while these foreign gentry turn everything upside down; open drawers, peep into secretaires, cut open bed clothes, take up the floor, to find papers or proclamations from Kossuth. Meantime, the people gnash their teeth, detest their rulers, name their boys Lajos, and wait for the time. Wherever I saw any one distinguished for natural gifts, ability, education, or patriotism, he or she (for gentle ladies and highborn dames are served the same way) was sure to have been imprisoned for three months to two or three years. Hundreds sit in hopeless prisons. "Now, see," said the Countess of ——, "this is what my neice did (showing two statuettes)—this is the angry fatherland, and this the weeping patriot. See the hollow eyes. The tears are all run out; there are no more tears to shed. My neice, for teaching young girls to love their country, is imprisoned at ——750 stairs above the ground."

The Policy of the Nebraska Leaders.

The following pleasant and suggestive article is from the Southern Standard, an Administration paper published at Charlestown, South Carolina. It is a frank, bold statement of the policy of the Administration upon the Slavery question, which our readers will do well to look at by way of refreshing themselves. It will amply repay perusal:

"A general rupture in Europe would force upon us the undisputed sway of the Gulf of Mexico and the West Indies, with all their rich and mighty productions.—Guarded by our genius and enterprise, a new world would rise, as it did before under the genius of Columbus. With Cuba and St. Domingo, we could control the productions of the tropics, and with them, the commerce of the world and, with that, the power of the world. Our true policy is to look to Brazil as the next great slave power and as the Government that is to direct or license the developement of the country drained by the Amazon. Instead of courting England, we should look to Brazil and the West Indies. These two great slave powers now hold more undeveloped territory than any other two Governments, and they ought to guard and strengthen their mutual interests by acting together in strict harmony and concert. Considering our vast resourses and the mighty commerce that is about to expand upon the bosom of the two countries, if we act together by treaty we cannot only preserve domestic servitude, but we can defy the power of the world. With firmness and judgement, we can open up the African slave-emigration again to people the noble regions of the tropics. We can boldly defend this upon the most enlarged system of philanthropy. It is far better for the wild Africans themselves. Look at 3,000,000 in the United States who have had the blessings not only of civilization, but of Christianity. Can any man pretend to say that they would have been better off in the barbarian state of their native wilderness; and has not the attempt to suppress by force, this emigration, increased the horrors of the 'middle passage' ten-fold? The good old Las Casas, in 1519, was the first to advise Spain to import Africans to her colonies, as a substitute for the Indians, who from their peculiar nature, were totally unsuited to bear the labors of Slavery. Experience has shown that this scheme was founded in wise and Christian philanthropy. Millions of the black men, yet unborn, will rise up to bless his benevolent memory. The time is coming when we will boldly defend this emigration before the world. The hypocritical cant and whining morality of the latter-day saints will die away before the majesty of commerce, and the power of those vast productions which are to spring from the cultivation and full development of the mighty tropical regions in our own hemisphere. If it be mercy to give the grain-growing sections of America to the poor and hungry of Europe, why not open up the tropics to the poor African? The one region is as eminently suited to them as the other is to the white race. There is as much philanthropy in one as the other. We have been too long governed by psalm-singing schoolmasters from the North

It is time to think for ourselves. The folly commenced in our own Government uniting with Great Britain to declare slave-importing piracy. Piracy is a crime on the high seas, arising under the law of nations, and is as well defined by those laws as murder is at common law. And for two nations to attempt to make that piracy which is not so, under the law of nations, is an absurdity. You might as well declare it burglary, or arsony, or anything else. And we have ever since, by a joint fleet with Great Britain on the coast of Africa, been struggling to enforce this miserable blunder. The time will come that all islands and regions suited to African Slavery, between us and Brazil, will fall under the control of those two slave powers, in some shape or other, either by treaty or actual possession of the one Government or the other. And the statesman who closes his eyes to these results has but a very small view of the great questions and interests that are looming up in the future. In a few years, there will be no investment for the two hundred millions, in the annual increase of gold on a large scale, so profitable and so necessary as the developement and cultivation of the tropical regions now slumbering in rank and wild luxuriance. If the slaveholding race in these States are but true to themselves they have a great destiny before them."

The propositions being set forth are, in brief:

1. To take Cuba.
2. To conquer St. Domingo and reduce its inhabitants to slavery.
3. To unite with Brazil and perform the same conquering and enslaving process on all the other West India Islands.
4. To enter into an alliance with Brazil for the establishment and fortification of slavery throughout South and North America.
5. For this object to develop the Amazon country and take possession of the Gulph of Mexico and all the adjacent tropical regions.
6. To re-open the African slave trade.
7. To boldly defend this scheme upon the "most enlarged system of philanthropy."

Such is the programme of the future proceedings under the new Nebraska dispensation. We trust the reader has carefully perused it, as stated by our Southern contemporary in the above extract. It is seldom he will find more of what is called "letting the cat out of the bag" in the same compass. Let him not turn away doubting or distrusting the correctness of this representation in regard to the designs of the Nebraska dynasty. He may depend upon it, that what is here shadowed forth is no dream, and no vagary. It is a faithful picture of what is the fixed and determined policy of the Nebraska leaders. The conception of this future, we happen to know, is distinct and vivid among the champions of the new dispensation, and they are firmly bent upon its regular and systematic accomplishment. The Nebraska bill is but the first, and as it has been heretofore regarded, easy step in this comprehensive plan of Africanizing the whole of the American hemisphere, and establishing Slavery upon what its advocates regard as an impregnable basis.—Tribune.

Cuba—The Reason.—While Northern deceivers are seeking to delude the people as to the real object for which Cuba is sought, and to obtain which the Cabinet mean to pick a quarrel with Spain if it can, the Richmond Enquirer throws off all disguise and avows the real policy of the South. Will the people permit this plot to be carried out? It says:—

"Our views of the policy of this measure as, of every other, is determined by the paramount and controlling consideration of Southern interests. It is because we regard the acquisitions of Cuba as essential to the stability of the system of slavery, and to the just ascendency of the South, that we consent to forego our habitual repugnance to political changes, and to advocate a measure of such vast and in some respects, uncertain consequences. * * * We must re-enforce the powers of slavery as an element of political control, and this can only be done by the annexation of Cuba. In no other direction is there a chance for the aggrandizement of slavery. The intrigues of Great Britain for the abolition of slavery in that island, are pursued with a zeal and an energy which cannot fail of success unless the United States interfere to prevent such a consummation."

Free Cuba.—We presume it is understood at Washington that the Fillibuster preparations for the invasion and conquest of Cuba were never more active and formidable than they now are, and that Slidell's move in Congress for a repeal or suspension of the neutrality laws, so far as they restrain our citizens from fitting out or embarking in military expeditions against, Spain or the dependencies, was a part of the game. Were that repeal effected, Cuba would not remain in Spanish hands three months longer.

The Fillibusters feel sure of the profound sympathy of the great body of the Cuban Creoles, but they will never more run their necks into a noose by relying on the active aid of those prudent patriots, as they did in the expedition which proved so disastrous to Crittenden, Pragay and their compatriots. They now understand that the Creoles will help them whenever they are able to do without help, and not before. Hence they are collecting arms, munitions, money, vessels, &c., on a scale and with a secrecy and caution unknown to their former operations. They will not move until they feel confident of their power to meet and beat all the Spanish troops in the "ever faithful" Island in a pitched battle, with the advantage of position against them. Yet unless adverse circumstances shall intervene they will probably be afloat within a few weeks. And if the telegraph should announce that Gen. John A. Quitman (ex-GovernorMississippi) is at the head of the of invading force, our readers may understand that they go in to win.—N. Y. Tribune.

Nebraska once more.—We place little confidence in Congress for the cause of freedom and humanity. The people must take up the question and settle it. Let associations be formed to buy up the territory; let a bounty be offered for free emigration; let the free and hardy Germans, and the generous and thrifty sons of New England and the West, be encouraged to go and occupy the soil; let Christians undertake the colonizing of Nebraska as a religious duty; let them go with the press, the school, the Bible, the church, and in their "squatter sovereignty," without intervention from the general government, forever forbid the introduction of slavery upon that soil. The great contest for freedom must be, not upon the floor of Congress, but upon the soil of Nebraska itself—and the men of talent must be there to wage it, backed by the wealth, the talent and the moral power of the North.

If Slavery triumphs in Nebraska, within ten years it will be legalized in New York—Southern men will demand that they shall bring their "property" with them to the Springs and the Falls, or they won't stay in the Union! A temporizing Legislature and Castle-Garden merchants will concede the demand. The Journal of Commerce and the Herald will argue for it as essential to the very existence of the nation, and to the highest development of Christianity. Then our Fifth-avenue parvenue will insist that such a privilege should not be confined to their Southern guests, and will rid themselves of the annoyance of independent Irish servants and of saucy free negroes, by having their own negroes held under the law. The spirit and the machinations that carry slavery into Nebraska will do this before our eyes, and in our time. And thus the crime will grow till God's time of retribution comes in anarchy and blood. Christians, freemen, avert it now!—N. Y. Independent.

Alcohol and the Constitution of Man.

This is the title of a small and recent work aiming "to bring science to bear upon the prohibitory movement. It is not a new essay, moralizing over the evils of intemperance, the very idea of which may be wearisome; but is a scientific argument framed to show the physiological and therefore necessary antagonism of alcohol and the human constitution. It affords, therefore, a new kind of interest, and is well calculated to arouse dormant energy, and in this way contribute to call forth the action which is necessary at this juncture to carry out one of the grandest reforms of the day—the legal prohibition of selling liquor to drink.

The author also discusses the relations of the government to society, in reference to those who drink, and here presents cogent reasons for efficient legislative action. The following is an extract:

The Engineer who steps from his locomotive to the refreshment room, to procure a draught of brandy, goes back a changed man. He may return with as firm a tread and as erect a mien as he went, nevertheless he is no longer the man he was. The train has virtually changed engineers. Indeed, between the engineer without the brandy and him with it, there may be a far greater difference than between two different men. His brandied blood whirls through the system with unnatural speed. It stimulates him. Literally stimulus signifies a goad. So that the brandy goads, pricks or spurs the organism into excitement; brain and thoughts partake of the stimulation—are quickened, as the blood flies faster and the brain thinks faster, so he is altogether a "faster man," and will be very likely to run a faster train; and there are a thousand contingencies in which the destruction of the train and a score of lives, might be accounted for by this difference in the mental condition of the engineer. The general use of steam power in society, by momentarily suspending the fate of numberless thousands of human beings upon coolness of head, clearness of eye, and steadiness of hand, has added to this subject an element of alarming interest."—Wesleyan.

Southerners at the North.—The Times hears from a very creditable source, that some Southerners are already looking out for Northern Summer residences. It thinks that if the thing is once started, it must become popular; that a house on the Hudson or Connecticut, in the Highlands, or on the sea-shore, will be preferable for families, to a sojourn at any of the fashionable Springs; and that a great many people would buy a home for Summer life at the North, and transfer all their families, if it could be done within the bounds of reasonable economy.

This movement, should it prove to be one of any extent, on the part of the slaveholders, will at once lead to the struggle for the legalization of Slavery on Northern soil. Our Southern nabobs would, no doubt, prefer to bring their household slaves with them when they come North to pass the summer. This may be the next issue with the Slave Power, unless the annexation of Cuba should come first. There is no possibility of erecting any effectual barrier against the encroachments of this fell Power while the North remains in the Union. This truth is beginning to be seen and felt by many who, until now, regarded it as the wildest fanaticism.—A. S. Standard.

Mitchel and the Catholic Press.—The Shepherd of the Valley, the Austro-Jesuit organ of St. Louis, thus backs up John Mitchel's fervent aspiration for a plantation of fat negroes in Alabama:

"Mr. Mitchel has been attacked where he is invulnerable; we wish to God that all his opponents had his hardy honesty in little things. Mr. Mitchel does not condemn Negro Slavery. Mr. Mitchel is right; neither does the Church condemn it; for you and I may hold a hundred negro slaves (for my part, I wish, with Mr. Mitchel, I had them)—we may hold a hundred slaves, and go to communion to-morrow without freeing one of them; and the Church admits to her sacraments no one guilty of practices which she condemns. Why should a Catholic journalist in the North cry out against Mr. Mitchel for his? Because Slavery is unpopular in the North. It is not fair."

It strikes us that Mr. Mitchel, in view of the strange company into which, for a Red Republican and General Revolutionist, his aspiration aforesaid has brought him, must be forcibly reminded of that fearfully graphic passage in Isaiah, (xiv. 9, 10) wherein the mighty autocrat of Babylon is told that

"Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming; it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth: it hath raised from their thrones all the kings of the nations.

"All they shall speak and say unto thee, Art thou also become weak as we? Art thou become like unto us?"—Wesleyan.

Close of the Newbrunswick Legislature.—On the 15th inst., the Legislature of New Brunswick was closed with the following speech by the Lieut. Governor.

"You have brought to a close the business of this Session, and I thank you for your exertion. I trust that the consolidation and revisal of the Provincial Statutes may prove advantageous to the Country, and that the changes in the administration of the law, sanctioned in the present Session may afford satisfaction. The subjects of King's College, and the Audit Office will not fail to receive the considerations of myself and my Council during the Recess. I acknowledge with thanks the Supplies which you have granted for the Public Service.—Some portion of these Supplies, relating to Bridges, has been voted in a form which implies much confidence in me and my advisers. I can assure you that every precaution shall be taken to insure a proper outlay of the public funds. I feel confident that at Her Most Gracious Majesty will highly value the loyal feeling which dictated your Resolution, placing at my disposal the Resources of the Province for the defence of the Country and the honor of the British Flag. As representatives of the People, you will have the satisfaction of restoring to your Constituents, at a time of general prosperity, the public trust reposed in you at a time of depression. You have all heard with deep regret that Great Britain has been reluctantly forced into a War. In the name of the Queen I thank you very heartily for the expression of your loyalty and attachment to the Throne, which I shall not fail to lay before our Gracious Sovereign." Previous to the closing, nearly all the members gave expression to their sentiments on the occasion, highly approving of the course taken by the Imperial Government; and on motion of Mr. Earle it was unanimously resolved that the whole of the Provincial Revenues be placed under the control of the Governor, in case of emergency.

Coal or no Coal in Upper Canada.

A Collier, in the Owen Sound Lever writes:—

I have within two or three years been told by different persons that it was reported officially by a geologist to the government, that there was no coal in Upper Canada. I have at this moment I am writing lying before me on the table a well marked specimen of that kind of rock, known to all the mineralogists and coal miners as bituminous shale, (not slate clay, the schiefer-thon of Warren,) a most extensive stratum of which shows itself in a neighboring township, a fragment of which is in the specimen in my possession. When broken up it easily takes fire, blazes up with all the energy, splendor and heat, of the best cannel coal, differing from it only by its larger earthly residum (ashes) after combustion; this last being the inaurated clay of the shale divested of its naptha. If the geologist who is said to have made such a report to the government grounded his opinion upon the outcropping and order of certain strata, together with their direction, dip, and other indications; and provided he did not overlook one of the most remarkable and important indications in the above locality, viz., the presence of the rock just mentioned, bituminous shale, he would have been probably following the right track to arrive at a just conclusion. This rock has been found overlying almost every bed of coal that has been worked in Europe even to the depth of several hundred feet. If the gentleman that made the report in question, and supposing that he was both chemist and mineralogist, were fully sensible of the vegetable origin of coal, he must have been aware that naptha is by analysis proved to be one of its chief chemical constituents. Now I will ask him, if he admits this, where does he reasonably suppose, the naptha of the bituminous shale of the neighboring township comes from? The great probability is, that that bituminous shale in our neighborhood is the result of subterraneous fire acting on a coal bed, and forcing its naptha through an overlying bed of coal in which case if the whole of the naptha were expelled from the coal, the coal remaining would be anthracite. Sir Ben, Hall & Gregory Watt were the two first who incontestibly proved by actual experiment, the three physical differences and their causes between blazing coal and anthracite, and mountain limestone (statuary marble.) And afterwards in an excavation made through a whin dike in the Giant's Causeway in Ireland, the changes produced by high temperature under great pressure on a bed of coal and mountain limestone were exact fac-similes of these gentlemen's experiments, illustrating them on the grandest manual scale, and proving in the most incontestible manner, the soundness of the reasons that led to their experiments. The Lever remarks:—We beg leave to draw attention to the interesting letter of our correspondent "Collier," in refference to the important question 'is there coal in Upper Canada?' We have seen a large specimen of the shale he refers to, it was brought from the township of Collinwood, and its inflammable qualities were discovered by a settler there who made his chimney hearth with what he considered to be stone and was astonished to find that it burned all up!

A Homethrust.—At a social meeting at the house of a Democratic Senator, in Washington one day last week, some of the company were speaking rather contemptuously of President Pierce. Senator Seward, who was present, said:

"You are wrong, gentlemen, to speak disparagingly of President Pierce; he has done one thing which none of you could have accomplished."

"Ah! what is that? was demanded on all sides. "Why," replied Seward, he "has given dignity to the administration of John Tyler by the contrast of his own."

Bulwer's Failures.—Perhaps it may encourage young writers if I remind them that I was not successful at first in any one line that I attempted. My first attempts at prose composition were refused admittance into a magazine. My first novel was very little read, and it is not included in the general collection of my works. My first poetry was thought detestable—and my first play very narrowly escaped being damned.

Visit to a Frigate of the Baltic Fleet

It is a strange sight to inspect a frigate ready for sea, and to contrast with the order which prevails in every department the multiplicity of occupations which are being carried on. In one spot is the carpenter's shop, replete with tools of every description: and by its side sawyers are at work over their saw-pit, as though they were about to erect some substantial edifice on shore. There again are ropemakers, busily engaged at their occupation; and, because two hands are not sufficient, they are holding a third yarn in their teeth. At a huge cooking apparatus on the main deck, soup, and beef and vegetables are boiling for a crew, of 540 men; there sheep in the pens, and fowls in their cages, feeding as peacefully, and quietly as though they were on shore, instead of between two long rows of 32s mounted by a few 68pounders. Sailmakers are at work, too, and neither the navigation of the Baltic nor the reception of the "Roosians" appear to mar the jollity or harmony of the crew and marines as they eat their mess and sip their grog. You walk to one end of the main deck, and a chart shows the position of every man in the ship. There are fourteen men to each gun; there is a long train of men who hand the powder from one to another and to the guns; there are boarding parties, and those who attend on the wounded; others who carry shell, heat red-hot shot, or guard the magazines; each and all have their alloted place in the work of destruction; but the crew heed it not, and every one appears light hearted as though they were starting on a summer excursion.

But there is something more than light-heartedness and activity which arrests the attention of a visitor. On each side of the upper deck, ranked in deadly order, black and polished, are the thirty-twos and the four sixty-eights: at the bow is the long swivel gun, traversing any direction; and capable of sweeping at any point within a semi-circle of more than a mile radius; and there are, too, the brass carronades for the ships boats. In every possible place between the guns are racks filled with shot greased and shining; and there are red, dull, and rusty looking hollow shot; and there are furnaces for heating bails; and huge tongs for taking them from the fire and conveying them to the muzzles of the guns. On the main deck there is again the same array of guns along each side; four sixty-eights are in the centre and they are flanked on each side by thirty-twos. On racks overhead are the sponges and other utensils, rammers for charging the guns, short pistols, bright poleaxes, sharp cutlasses, shells in small square boxes strapped with iron bars, piles of muskets, boarding pikes, and piles of shot in every direction. Descend another stage, and you are in the midst of stores of all kinds. Here is biscuit for six months for more than 500 men, barrels of pork and beef, and puncheons of rum out of number. There are other stores in which you may literally find everything from a needle to an anchor: yarns and twine and ropes by miles, spare muskets, spare cutlasses, spare pistols, spare something of everything. Another stage you are below water level, and amid the levers and cranks and pistons of the colossal engines: another descent, and you are in the furnace room, where Eglish ventilators are driven by a shaft some forty or fifty feet thick. Pass through screw alleys, watertight doors, dark passages, half the length of the ship, and a massive iron shaft [illegible] revolving with furious velocity, to which were the screw attached, [illegible] 17 tons, 18 inches, 31 gales, [illegible] concussions and fires, would be [illegible] through the water, without wind [illegible] mile in five minutes.

Should [illegible] prove recreant to liberty, [illegible] spirit of liberty would shrink, and [illegible] pirations of human nature [illegible]. The curse of office-seeking demagogues is visible in the Federal and State Legislation. A wide-spreading, glorious, and free country is torn with factions arising out of the slavery question, and the fury of the storm seems to threaten even civil war. As dear as the preservation of the Union should be to every American heart, yet it would be better, infinitely so, to break up the Union, and form with British North America a grand Northern Republic composed of all the free states, than to yield the cutcheon of freedom to be blackened by the further inroads of slavery. Shall Americans permit their name to be a bye-word in the mouths of all good men—to be hissed for combining under the same flag the most [illegible] and the most degraded bondage? Shall free-born Northern Americans turn themselves into a brutal police to catch the victims of southern debauchery and slavery? Shall patriots, who are taught from your cradle the right of all men to liberty and the fruits of the labour of their hands, disgustingly change and falsify their words and deeds at Washington by binding all closer the chains of slavery over the American domain! Let us hope for better things, and let the northern people rise as one man, and stop the nefarious slave system. We are glad to see that a commencement has been made by a great meeting held at New York at which resolutions [illegible] unanimously, aided by [illegible] Protest yet! DEATH OF POET JAMES MONTGOMERY.—[illegible] Montgomery, the poet, breathed his last yesterday afternoon, at his residence [illegible], Sheffield, aged 82. He presided at the weekly board of the infirmary as late as [illegible] day, and walked home more than a [illegible] James Montgomery was [illegible] November 4, 1771, at [illegible] father was a Moravian minister, leaving his son in [illegible] he proceeded with [illegible] West [illegible] the poet's brother [illegible] died. When only 12 years old, the bent of the boy's mind was shown by the production of various small poems. These indications could not save him at first from the fate of the poor, and he was sent to earn his bread as assistant in a general shop. He thirsted for other occupations, and one day set off with three-and-sixpence in his pocket to walk to London, to seek fame and fortune. In his first effort he broke down, and for a while gave up his plan to take service in another situation. Only for a time, however, was he content, and a second effort to reach the metropolis was successful, as far as bringing him to the spot he had longed for, but unsuccessful to his main hope—that of finding a publisher for a volume of his verses. But the bookseller who refused Montgomery's poems accepted his labor, and made him shopman This eventually led to his becoming editor and proprietor of the Sheffield Iris. To the religious world, he is chiefly known for his contributions to our sacred hymnology. In this department he has acquired a name which will ever be remembered with affectionate regard. The venerable poet enjoyed a well-deserved literary pension of 150*l.* a year.

PAPER MAKING.

The great and increasing demand for paper has naturally directed the attention of scientific and practical men to the discovery of some other material than rags, from which to make the article. From the proceedings of the Scientific Association at Washington, we learn that a paper can be prepared from the wood of various trees, but except from two sources in England and one in France, and they not producing a good article, it has not ever been used until now. We are on the eve of successfully producing such. We have specimens of good writing paper—not as good as the best, for the means of working up the material are not what they will be—made of the fibres of hickory, of the cotton poplar, of white pine and of canebrake. The material is cut first of a proper length, then treated alternately with diluted acids and alkalies, washed, broken between rollers, bleached, and thus prepared to be worked up. If, under the microscope, the 'ultimate fibres' appear broken, as sometimes happens from using too great mechanical violence, or if they are made too tender by too great strength either of acid or alkali, the specimen is faulty. These processes are in the hands of practical unscientific men. The assistance of a practical scientific man at the mills would save much time, expence and the mortification of experimentnig to discover facts already well known to science. Indeed, the struggles of successful inventors would be much lessened in number and in their melancholy results, if inventsrs would study the general features of the sciences in whose details they are generally the most skilled.

A good white paper has also been made from straw, by Mr. Mellier. From the Troy Whig we learn that the Philadelphia Dollar Newspaper, as well as the Ledger, is printed on paper made from straw, by Mellier's process. This paper is really excellent and beautiful, says the Scientific American. It is much stronger than the paper made from rags; is firm and hard like linen paper, and is as white as any paper printed in the country. We are happy thus to herald the complete success of white printing paper from straw. If this complete success is not prematurely announced, there is a very large class who have reason to rejoice. The advance in the price of paper, owing to the increased consumption with no corresponding increase in the supply of rags, has been very great within the past eighteen months. If Mr. Mehier's plan for manufacturing from straw is a fixed fact, the invention is one of the most important recently announeed.

From Gleason's Pictorial.

Daguerrian Gallery of the West.

This establishmsnt is located in Cincinnati, on Fourth Street, between Main and Walnut, in Weed's large building. It occupies four rooms and one ante-chamber, on the third, fourth and fifth stories. Two of these are operating rooms, each twenty-five by thirty, and fitted up in the best manner.—One of these was prepared expressly for children and babies. This is quite an accommodation for those parents who wish to have the sweet faces of their little ones preserved, not only as mementoes of the past, but also to compare with the sterner features which ripened age shall give them. And then, when it is remembered how suddenly our little ones are snatched away from us, what father, what mother, does not wish to preserve the images of their little cherubs? The third room is the workshop where the plates are prepared and likenesses perfected. Possessed of the best materials and the finest instruments, Mr. Ball takes them with an accuracy and a softness of expression unsurpassed by any establishment in the Uniou.—The fourth room is the gallery; it is twenty feet wide by forty long. The walls are tastefully enamelled by flesh-colored paper, bordered with gold leaf and flowers. The panels on the south side and west end are ornamented with ideal figures. The noble form of the first is hid beneath an under dress of a warm drab color, over which she wears a sky-blue tunic, festooned on the shoulders and right thigh by splendid medallions. Her head is decked with a garland of evergreens, her raven locks flow loosely down her neck; from her right arm hangs an open ornamenting; the panels of the west end are delicately drawn, and very beautiful.

The first is arrayed in a green drab shirt, festooned on the shoulder with golden buttons —the mantle is azure color, and falls from the head over the back, completely enveloping it. The edges are grasped by the left hand, and brought gracefully to a point in front of the person—the arms, neck and upper part of her bosom are nude—her glowing cheeks and coral lips are in sweet harmony with the rose-bud which the right hand gently presses upon her virgin breast—the eyes are shut—the spirit is either in repose or thinking of holiness. She is the goddess of Purity. But who can describe the sweetness and tenderness of the last? She is richly attired in skirts of faint purple—a straw-colored mantle, tasseled at the ends, is thrown loosely over her shoulders—an auburn sash encircles her waist, and is tied in a slip-knot at the centre of the form. The half curled and half briaided hair hangs about the neck in careless ringlets, and is jewelled with the love-speaking rose—her spotless hand presses a dove to her heaving bosom, with whose sinless spirit she is now communing. From her angel face the expression of every evil thought is driven—while her feet, like those of Religion, stand upon the moving clouds, as upon the rock of ages. On the ceiling is a centre piece representing the aerial regions, in which Venus, the goddess of Beauty, is sitting recumbent on a splendid throne. The three graces arrayed in their gayest robes, are adorning her noble person. Behind her is Aylia holding a casket of jewels, from which Thalia is culling gems to deck her rich hair, while Euphrosuna holds a shining mirror before her. Excepting the climax, there is a noble piano by whose sweet notes you are regaled, while the skilful operator is painting your face with sunbeams on the sensitive yet tenacious mirror. As for the enterprising proprietor, he is the very essence of politeness—nor are his brothers less tinctured with this sweet spirit of human excellence and a disposition to please every one who patronizes them.

No wonder that there is daily such a rush for this gallery! No wonder that its throng of fashion and beauty is so dense!—Mr. Ball commenced his career as a daguerreotypist in the year 1845. At that time the art was in a very low state indeed in Cincinnati. There were but few who engaged in the profession, without means, enterprise or instruments, and customers were "like angel's visits, few and far between." The obscurity in which this divine art lingered, gradually cleared away as talent and go-ahead-activness shone forth in the profession; and to Mr. Ball we are indebted for placing it in its present proud position in Cincinnati. His early struggles were many and great—but his love for art and firmness of character overcame every obstacle to his advancement. Competition, it is said, is "the life of trade," and as Mr. Ball, with all his early disadvantages, struggled on and succeeded, it roused a spirit in the profession which has resulted in lasting benefit to the community, and has brought within so short a time the Daguerrian art to so much perfection. We said Mr. Ball's prosperity was a type of that of Cincinnati. Who can remember the single room of the artist in 1845, and glance at his magnificent suite now, but sees as it were a picture of the gradual advancement of Cincinnati from creaking shingles to Dayton stone-built scroll upon which she records her lofty inspirations. The face looks heavenward. And O, what an expression is in that countenance! 'Tis divine! 'Tis the creative power! She is the goddess of Poesy. The second figure is more delicately formed. Like the first she tiptoes the clouds. The Skirts are sea-green—a mantle, in which the hues of the lilac and claret are softly blended, folds itself around her waist, rolling down to the hem of her garments. A wreath of bay, gemmed with three roses, sits resplendant on her head—the eyes are cast down upon the strings of a guitar, from which her sweeping fingers are pouring the sweetest notes. She is the goddess of Music.—Though the feminine character is preserved in the form of the third, yet the proportions of the limbs are masculine. The softest tints of blue and lilac are mingled in her skirts, the mantle is dark drab, a pea-green veil falling from the apex of the head, over the shoulders, finishes the drapery. Her braided hair is coiled up into a beautiful cone —the feet, arms, neck, head and face indicate great strength and power—the left hand grasps a globe—the right hand is uplifted and holds the mathematician's compass between the fingers—her eyes beam with intelligence, and seem to be tracing the movements of stars and planets. She is the goddess of Science. The fourth figure is tall, erect, majestic; she does not move on tiptoe like the first and second, nor tread the clouds like the third, but stands firmly upon them as upon the everlasting rocks. A palmy garland encircles her expansive brow—her auburn hair is braided and lies folded upon her placid cheeks. In her left hand is the scroll of life, the right points to the regions on high—devotion overspreads the countenance—the uplifted eyes penetrate the sky, and the adoring spirit seems to be wrapt in the beatific vision. She is the goddess of Religion. The two figuers arms and legs, her majestic form is covered with white linen skirts, over which is a purple robe, bordered with gold and glittering with diamonds. Golden sandals cover her feet—her face is radiant with beauty. A white dove is nestling in the folds of her raiment, while another perches on the palm of her hand. An upset basket of flowers and seven cupids fill up the scene. Two hover above her, one holds a burning torch, the other a vase of flowers, from which he showers roses down upon her. Away in the distance are two more, on quivering wings; with trumpet and lyre they regale the beauteous goddess with rapturous music. A fourth flies towards her with the ripe fruit of love—the sixth stands ready to cast a purple robe over her, while the seventh is sitting down by a bow and filled quiver, from which he has plucked one, whose point he is feeling—his artful eyes declare him intent upon piercing her bosom with the sweetest passion that can fill the heart of the blooming goddess.

The north wall is ornamented with one hundred and eighty seven of Mr. Ball's finest pictures. Babies and children, young men and maidens, mothers and sires look you in the face. Jenny Lind, with other distinguished personages, and five or six splendid views of Niagara Falls are among the collection. There are also six of Duncanson's finest landscapes hanging upon these walls as ornaments; among which are the May Party in picnic and the Shepherd Boy—the depth and tone, the life and beauty of these pantings rank them among the richest productions of American artists. Every piece of furniture in this gallery is a master-piece of mechanical and artistical skill. The very seat on which you sit and the carpet on which you tread seem to be a gem culled from the fragrant lap of Flora; all of these, reflected by two bright mirrors in the east end, present you a scene replete with elegance and beauty—to cap the fronts. Mr. Ball's Daguerrean Gallery is situated in the very heart of the city, where the busy din of commerce and the rolling of carriages are heard from morning till night; and the streams of visitors that are continually pouring into his spacious saloons, show how wide spread is his reputation, and how successfully he has worked himself into popular favor. Mr. B. employs nine men in superintending and executing the work of the establishment. Each man has his own separate department, and each is perfect in his peculiar branch. We are so well aware of the indomitable industry displayed by the proprietor, that it is no conjecture of ours but our fixed opinion, that it will not be very long before Mr. Ball will be obliged, from the great increase of his business, to have rooms twice as large as he now occupies. His fame is spread, not only over his own, but through every State of the Union; and there is scarcely a distinguished stranger that comes to Cincinnati but, if his time permits, seeks the pleasure of Mr. Ball's artistic acquaintance. The art of daguerreotyping has made rapid progress since the day of its discovery. The struggles of Jacques Maude Daguerre to bring this beautiful art to perfection have excited the admiration of mankind. He was himself a man of extreme modesty and great personla worth, and was thoroughly devoted to his art. In 1824, only thirty years ago, he commenced his researches, starting at that point where Wedgewood left the process.—Substituting, after close chemical investigation, a new method of receiving the sun's rays, he found the process to work like a charm, and laid the foundation of an art, which subsequent efforts have brought to such a degree of perfection as to leave hardly anything more to be desired or achieved in the detail of its results—but science is always developing something new.

A Bazaar for the "Provincial Freeman."

It is a custom among reformers, to get up a Fair or a Bazaar, as they are here called, in aid of papers advocating the measures they seek to disseminate—in case where funds are needed immediately—where they are needed for prospective labors, or, in order to give greater notoriety to their efforts, &c.

This method of getting "aid and comfort," is regarded with more favor, than the long-established practice of soliciting from individuals, shillings, sixpences, or "any amount if you please." Another plan, of recent adoption, which has worked remarkably well—a modification of the last, is, to decide upon the amount necessary, say, from £25 to £250; divide the amount equally among a specified number, in such a way that the wealthy or well-to-do, only, can afford to contribute to the fund.

This plan has been known to bring back "good results," in a pecuniary way, to Anti-Slavery and other journals.

But the the different methods are too numerous to mention. Some plans are so delicately organized, as to never be permitted to approach the light.

Now, as the matter has been hinted to us, we wish to propose something to the friends and supporters of the Provincial Freeman in Canada.

We propose to them, not only to be subscribers to the paper, but to consider the propriety of holding bazaars, festivals, tea-meetings and similar gatherings, in Toronto, St. Catharines, London, Chatham, Dresden, Windsor and other places, where the project may meet with favor, in order to secure for the paper a permanent name; at the same time that they do what they can, and in the way they have been doing for the last few weeks, to extend its circulation.

Canadians are never behind in good works: they contribute largely to objects abroad; their liberality is so well known, that people from the great United States (the land of plenty,) come over here occasionally, and condescend to accept humble favors. This being generally known among us, the propriety of securing to themselves as Canadians, by united efforts, objects of acknowledged utility, will be seen at once. We shall refer to this part of the subject again, shortly.

The Provincial Freeman, has received many expressions of friendship from the good people of Toronto, and other places in the Province, and we desire, not only that its permanency shall be sure, but that it may be regarded as connected with the soil—a paper for the Canadas, as well as other parts of the world. From Nova Scotia, we hear good words of it; from the United States also, and all around and about, at home among the people. Is it asking too much, then, of the frends and supporters of good projects, to patronize the Freeman in this way? We think not. We know, in some instances, Bazaars have been made the source of much mischief—We recollect well when Philadelphia, in the U. S., was one scene of confusion among anti-slavery people, growing out of the holding of rival Bazaars for anti slavery purposes. The colored people of New York, also, were at one time as widely separated as possible, by one Fair, which was held for a paper, in that city. In truth, except the Bazaars held yearly in Boston and Rochester, the first for or by Garrisonians, the other by friends of, and for Frederick Douglass' Paper, we know of no place, in which, at some time or other, rival factions have not been at variance, growing out of these gatherings.

We do not, however, apprehend that obstacles would intervene in Toronto, to prevent any efforts of the kind, that the friends of this paper might make

The plan of operations being different in this country, such difficulties could hardly arise.

Long established liberal papers seldom resort to fairs, bazaars, tea-meetings, and they would not be likely to do so, unless from sheer greediness—a failing we do not, from our slight knowledge of them, even amongst them, being well supported, they are apparently satisfied. But for supporters of new, lately established papers, advocating anti-slavery and other necessary measures, the propriety of Bazaars could hardly be questioned. We shall refer to this topic, and consult our patrons, friends, &c., as preliminary to action in the matter. *

DR. PENNINGTON'S BROTHERS CARRIED BACK.—We heard when in the States a few days since, that the Nebraska Bill would kill the Fugitive Bill; but we think it has given life to it. We also venture the opinion, on what we believe to be sufficient data, that slavery will be permitted in the Northern States before the end of the struggle. We sympathize with the Dr. and his brother in their severe trials, but not more than we do with the men who are persuaded by the specious reasoning of Dr. Pennington and other leaders, to remain, rather than leave the bloody ground, because they were born there, or to help emancipate the slave, when they cannot maintain their own freedom. In this age of telegraphs and railroads, those who by word or deed detain a poor fugitive, to gratify their curiosity, by listening to this or that recital he may be able to give, or counsel any portion of the colored people to remain there, instead of settling speedily in a free country, knowing as they do the hopeless and dangerous state of the case at present, and what must inevitably be for a long time—those who so counsel, advise or persuade, are as guilty, we verily believe, as Batchelder or any other slaveholder or slave-catcher in the land. *

MIDDLETON, CONN., May 25th, 1854.

MR. SHADD, Sir—I have just received a bundle of papers from your office.

I shall send the subscription price of the same, in case I obtain certain information from you, which will be of great importance to me, and which was my main object in ordering papers from your office.

About two months ago, I entertained a colored gentleman at my house, who stated that he was the "Nat Turner" of insurrection notoriety; his name is Owen Davis. He appeared to be one of the noblest specimens of manly dignity, I ever saw. He made some statement, however, which staggered me, and led me to suspect he might be partially insane.

He stated there were fifty thousand colored soldiers in the British service, all in garrisons in Malden, C.W. You undoubtedly know the man; and I can inform me whether his statement is correct. I have been conversing with a colored gentleman to-day, about him, and we concluded that he was the greatest wonder ever seen; and I promised to write to you for information.

Mr. Davis promised to write to me some time next June, and it is my intention to visit Canada this summer, provided the information I receive from you, confirms Mr. Davis' statements.

I would enclose the money for the paper now, were I sure you would not forget to answer these enquiries.

Yours, with love for principle.
EDWIN BLAKE.

We venture to publish the above, though designed, we suppose, for private use, believing, that the writer will agree with us in the opinion, that too great publicity cannot be given to the movements of men whose designs are clearly traceable to the purposes of self-interest, and who really injure their people more, by their dishonorable course, [illegible] be repaired by the united efforts of the [illegible] themselves, in a generation.

No clearer evidence is needed of the misrepresentations made of Canada, by men pretending to have been in the Province, than this letter, neither of the prevailing ignorance of Canada, among people who live remote from the line.—We cannot confirm the statements made in the letter, but brother Blake will not suffer our inability to sustain accounts from Owen Davis, to prevent him from visiting this country, neither from taking our paper.

There may be such a man living in Canada, as he describes, but we have not heard of him, so cannot vouch for his identity.

There are about 40,000 colored people in Canada, not 50,000 colored soldiers in the little town of Malden. There are volunteer companies of colored soldiers, in places west, but no regulars, at this time, that we know of. During the rebellion, colored soldiers served the country very acceptably; and now, we frequently meet colored men who are pensioners, but neither at Malden, (which has not 5000 population white and colored,) nor at any other point, at present, do we believe many are to be found.

Davis has awakened to a knowledge of his identity with Nat Turner, rather late. We have always understood that Nat ended his eventful but heroic life, on a Virginia scaffold; and we have read, somewhere, a speech delivered by him at the place of execution. If it were possible to re-animate his mouldering bones, and set him "agoing," we would hardly suspect him of so much rashness or insanity, as Owen displayed.

We hope to see brother Blake in Canada, the present summer, notwithstanding our unfavorable answer.

We wish there were 50,000 colored soldiers along the line, but on this side of it. Could the colored people be induced to know the truth concerning the country, we might be enabled in a short time to chronicle such an exodus from the land of Nebraska bills, as would supply from its thousands, all drafts necessary to make up the deficiency between the present number of troops in Malden, and Owen Davis' men.

Canada is a great country, white Americans say, and we say the same, because we know it to be so, and we have no fear that any sensible man will return to the States, dissatisfied with it, after having made the necessary observations, that is provided he will divest himself of his prejudices against the government that ensures freedom to all. *

TO AND ABOUT CORRESPONDENTS.—We are very thankful to you, friends, for the many encouraging letters we receive, and we shall endeavor to merit the continuance of your favors in the epistolary line. Many communications are on hand, which should have been published before, but for unavoidable delay. It is needless to any such shall not be the case in future, as we do the best possible for us under the circumstances.

Our friend, T. H. Thompson, of Vienna, complains of not receiving his paper regularly. Inquire at the Post-office, Thomas. Send on that "article" at your earliest convenience, without fear

—One of our Philadelphia correspondents complains of omissions, &c., in his communication by which the sense is destroyed in some passages. We will beg the printers to be more careful in future. We know that from the typographical appearance of our paper we have often to take a share of the censure soliberally given to the schoolmaster when "abroad." In future we hope to be even with other papers in this matter.

—Mrs. Mary S[illegible]st. Catherines, shall have a paper as directed. Wm. H. Anderson.

—Miss Watkin[illegible]York, Pa., will please accept our thanks for her letter, and write whenever so inclined.

Negrophobia in St. Catharines.

Great dissatisfaction exists among the colored people of St. Catherines, because of the exclusion of their children from the government schools against all right and decency.

Mr. Jackson has been deputized to lay the matter before the General Superintendent for schools. We will give the details of this most glaring outrage upon the rights of British subjects, as gathered from the aggrieved themselves, at an early period.

A Bazaar in Toronto for "Frederick Douglass' Paper," &c.

Since writing the remarks to be found in another column, proposing a Bazaar for the Provincial Freeman, we see it announced that Miss Julia Griffiths, an English lady, Secretary to the Rochester Female Anti-Slavery Society, and assistant in the office of Frederick Douglass' Paper, will open a Bazaar in Toronto, about the middle of this month, under the patronage of the Toronto Anti-Slavery Society, to dispose of the unsold English and Irish goods of the Rochester Fair.

A lucky paper, that! The Rochester Bazaar is held every year for its support. It has, we are informed, a paying subscription list, numbering thousands. The first instalment of the UNCLE TOM FUND, was given by MRS. STOWE for its support. It has private patronage incredible, besides, very recently, an addition to its coffers has been made, called the "Thousand Dollar Fund,"—a sum contributed by one hundred persons, and gotten up, mainly, we are told, by a great effort on the part of Miss Griffiths, and now, Toronto must pay her golden tribute, by solicitation of the same untiring Miss Griffiths.

Barnum is distanced, and no mistake, in this succession of brilliant efforts to get the "tin!"—But how is it that the wire-workers of a paper opposed to emigration to Canada, are making arrangements to hold a Bazaar for its support in the country? Are the abolitionists of Canada, or, rather of the Toronto Society, opposed to free colored people coming into the Province to settle? and are these the initiatory steps to a public endorsement of Anti-emigration views?

We know that such is the opinion of a portion of the citizens here, but may they not be mistaken? We do not wish to be liable to a silent imputation of mis-representing the great people engaged in this movement—humble as we are, we would like to know more of the facts, as well to satisfy our minds, as to enlighten the public. We have had many inquiries made of us, recently, as to the movements of the Toronto Anti-Slavery Society, not one of which we could answer, of course, not knowing where to find it, to get any information. We think, however, that as there is a prospect of its being found about the "middle of June," anxious inquirers will then be able to see and hear to their satisfaction. Should they conclude not to lose a moment in the search, we would suggest an application to the parent Society, in New York City, U. S., through Lewis Tappan, Esq., the great embodiment of Anti-Slavery Society tactics for the States and the Canadas.

The Toronto Anti-Slavery Society have had Rev. Samuel R. Ward in England and other parts of Britain, collecting funds for newly arrived fugitives—because the necessary amount was difficult to raise here in a reasonable time for those needy ones. Now in the name of honor and humanity, what is the state of the case? Are those funds to be lavished on favorites in Yankeedom, because Mr. Ward has unfortunately fallen into disgrace with Lewis Tappan, Esq., and the right wing of the Toronto Society, for his devotion to the interests of colored Canadians, and his manly determination not to bow down sufficiently low, to please this one or that, who may have the shadow, but not the substance of anti-slavery?—Poor fugitives! We trust that you may not have to content yourselves in the coming and future winters with only the crumbs that may be left from the £1500 ($6,000,) raised by Mr. Ward for you. And poor people of another class, who blow the trumpet for, and prostrate yourselves at the feet of other people!

Well after all this array of facts and opinions, it may be well to look at the bright side: the coming "elephant" may be but a precursor of the "good time," when the distinguished organ of Anti-Emigration in the U. S., will cease its opposition to colored freemen who wish to settle in Canada—will emigrate hither instead of simply coming over to take away the money before our "hand" winter sets in, and pour forth its "clarion notes" as the organ of the Toronto Anti-Slavery Society, until the globe shall be shaken by the "awful sound."

But will not Miss Griffith leave a few coppers behind? The Underground emigrants come on in great numbers, and may "need" a little of something in the cold weather, besides, we know that the friends of Mr. Ward, and of the Provincial Freeman, talk about holding a Huzza for this paper about the same time! *

The Fugitive Slave Case in Boston.

THE ATTEMPTED RESCUE OF BURNS.

On the abrupt termination of the meeting in Faneuil Hall, the excited crowd rushed for Court-square, pell mell, shouting "Rescue him!" &c. Entering upon the Eastern-avenue, in the space of a minute or two, several hundred people had collected. The officers in the building closed the doors, when some dozen people, some of whom were colored, rushed up the steps, and commenced pounding on the doors. A pistol was shortly fired on the westerly side of the Court-House, when the crowd rushed around the building. Here, some two thousand people collected in a very brief space of time. Several pistols were fired in the streets.

The crowd immediately commenced an assault upon the south door on the west side, with axes, and a battering-ram, in the shape of a heavy beam, some twelve feet long, which was at once launched upon the stout oak door. The battering-ram was manned by a dozen or fourteen men, white and colored, who plunged it against the door until it was stove in. Meantime, several brickbats had been thrown at the windows, and the glass rattled in all directions. The leaders, or those who appeared to act as ringleaders in the melee, continually shouted: "Rescue?" "Bring him out!" "Bring him out!" "Where is he?" &c., &c. The Court House bell rung an alarm at 9½ o'clock.

When the doors were opened, two or three persons rushed into the entry, but the officers in the building, who were mustered in full force on the stairs, gave the valorous rioters so warm a reception with clubs and swords, that they quickly retreated to the streets. Two shots were discharged in the entry, which appeared to intimidate the rioters somewhat, and they retreated to the opposite side of the street. At this time, a large deputation of police from the Centre Watch-House arrived upon the ground, and, in a few moments, arrested several persons and took them to the Watch-House. Stones were occasionally thrown at the windows, and shouts continued to be made, but the firm stand of the officers stationed within the building, with the support the received from the police, prevented any further demonstration.

The saddest part of this outrage, on the part of the mob, rests in the fact that human life has been sacrificed

At the time the mob beat down the westerly door of the Court-House, several men, employed as United States officers, were in the passage-way, using their endeavors to prevent the ingress of the crowd, and among the number, was Mr James Batchelder, a truckman, in the employ of Col. Peter Dunbar, who, almost at the instant of the forcing of the door, received a pistol shot, (evidently a very heavy charge,) in the abdomen. Mr. Batchelder uttered the exclamation, "I'm stabbed," and falling backwards into the arms of watchman Isaac Jones, expired almost immediately The unfortunate man resided in Charlestown, where he leaves a wife and one or two children to mourn his untimely death.

At the time of forcing the door, and just as the fatal shot was fired, one of the rioters, who was standing on the upper step, exclaimed to the crowd, "You cowards, will you desert us now?" At this moment the exclamation of Mr. Batchelder, "I'm stabbed!" was heard, and the rioters retreated to the opposite side of the street.

In the meantime a white man rushed into the crowd and distributed several meat axes, with the blades enveloped in the original brown paper, two or three of these axes were subsequently picked up by the officers, and were deposited in the Centre Watch House.

Shortly after the death of Mr. Batchelder, Coroner Smith took charge of the body, and will hold an inquest to-day.

After the arrest had been made, the crowd, although excited, remained quiet, but a new element was introduced by the arrival of a military company. The Boston Artillery, Capt. Evans, were in the streets for their usual drill. When they marched up Court-street, the mob at once supposed them to be the U. S. Marines come to reserve order, and they were at once saluted with hisses, groans, and other marks of derision. Capt. Evans seeing an excited crowd, and not knowing anything of the disturbance, immediately marched his command down the west side of the Court-house, and halted in the square, the crowd giving way. When the cause of the appearance of the company was explained, the crowd gave them three cheers and the company departed.

By order of the Mayor, the Boston Artillery and the Columbian Artillery were ordered out, and about midnight they took quarters in the City Hall, where they remained during the night, waiting further orders.

A large force of officers were detained for duty during the night outside the Courthouse, and throughout the whole evening and night, an additional strong force was inside fully armed and prepared for any emergency.

Such arrangements have been made by the United States Marshal, and by Chief of Police Taylor, together with the orders of the Mayor, that any and all attempts at rescuing the fugitive or creating an evil disposed mob, will be met with the most certain and successful defeat.

The examination of the fugitive now in custody will be resumed at 9 o'clock, this morning, and none who are knowing to the facts, doubt that justice will be administered and the laws of the country duly executed.

The following persons were arrested for taking part in the riot, or for specific acts of violence or misconduct.

Albert G. Browne, Junr., a law student at Cambridge.

John J. Roberts, (white,) of Harrison-avenue, for extinguishing one of the gas lights at the easterly entrance of the Court-house.

Walter Finney, colored; John Wesley, colored; Wesley Bishop, colored; Thomas Jackson, colored; Henry Howe, white; Martin Stowell, white, of Worcester,

John Thompson, (white) one of the above parties, was foremost in the attack on the westerly door, and the chief of police, who was instantly on the spot, sprang through the crowd, and seizing the rioter, hurried him to the centre watch house, followed by a large crowd. All the persons arrested were placed in the lock ups in the centre watch-house, and the morning men of the North, Boylston and Centre divisions of the city police were promptly summoned by the chief and placed on duty outside of the Court-house.

After the door had been forced open, John O. Cluer attempted to effect an entrance, but was repulsed by the officials, and after demanding admittance "as a citizen of Boston," made a few blustering remarks and left.

The noise of the mob created a stampede in the Museum, and much alarm prevailed among the ladies. The performances were interrupted, and nearly half the audience left the house.

There was an immense audience at the Music Hall, on Sunday, to hear Rev. Theodore Parker. There was a general expectation that he would have a "Lesson for the Day," and the vast hall, with its double tier of galleries, could not contain all the people who sought admittance. Mr. Parker delivered a short extempore discourse on the subject uppermost in all minds, which we give in full. He then delivered a short discourse on another subject. When he rose to pray he read the following:

"Anthony Burns, now in prison, and in danger of being sent into slavery, most earnestly asks your prayers, and that of your congregation, that God would remember him in his great distress, and deliver him from this peril.

"From Rev. Mr. Grimes, and Deacon Pitts, a Burns' special request."

He said, in substance, (we cannot give his language precisely,) that this was the old form for such requests, but he did not like it. It seemed to ask God to do our duty. God was never backward to do his work, and we should do ours. He could not ask God to work a miracle to deliver Anthony Burns; although if He should see fit to do so it should be accepted with proper sentiments of reverence and gratitude. He had received the same request in another form, which he liked better, and read as follows:

"To all the Christian Ministers of the Church of Christ, in Boston:

"Brothers,—I venture humbly to ask an interest in your prayers and those of your congregations, that I may be restored to the natural and inalienable rights with which I am endowed by the Creator, and especially to the enjoyment of the blessings of liberty, which, it is said, this Government was ordained to secure.

"ANTHONY BURNS.

THE PURCHASE OF BURNS.

The Boston Chronicle of Monday says, that during the previous evening efforts were made to collect by subscription a sufficient sum to purchase the fugitive, as it was stated that his claimant offered to sell him in Boston for $1200. Many of the friends of Burns were opposed to the purchase, believing that some informality would be found in the documents; finally, at about 11 o'clock, the money was raised by subscription by merchants and colored men.

BOSTON, May 27, 1854.

We the undersigned agree to pay Anthony Burns, or order, the sums set against our respective names, for the purpose of enabling him to obtain his freedom from the United States Government, in the hands of whose officers he is now held as a slave.

This paper will be presented by the Rev L. A Grimes, pastor of the 12th Baptist Church.

A portion of this amount was subscribed on condition that the bargain should be consummated that night. The counsel on both sides were present in the court-room till 12 o'clock, but there was some apparently slight obstacle which prevented the consummation of the bargain. So confident were many that he would at once be liberated, a carriage had been brought, and was in readiness to convey him to the residence of Rev. Mr. Grimes. It was agreed that the proposal should remain open till Monday, and perhaps later.

"Two incidents connected with the subscription are worth mentioning. On Saturday evening, eight hundred dollars had been subscribed; it was thought important that the remainder should be obtained at once in the hope of consummating the measure that evening. One of our liberal merchants whose benevolence is practical and unostentatious, although he had already subscribed one hundred dollars, immediately advanced the requisite four hundred dollars and completed the subscription. This is the fact indeed. The other is true:—We are informed that during the day on Saturday, Rev. Theodore Parker was asked if he wished to put his name to the subscription paper. His reply was "I have nothing to subscribe but chains and hell to."

"A paragraph has appeared in one of the Sunday papers containing statements in connection with the names of Messrs. Thomas B. Curtis, and W.W. Greenough, which require correction. They were not appointed to negotiate the purchase of Burns, but were desirous, for obvious reasons, that he should be liberated before midnight on Saturday. They have never had or sought any interview with Colonel Suttle

HE MUST BE GIVEN UP.

(From the Boston Commonwealth of Monday.)

[illegible], Sims's counsel, stated before the Commissioner this morning, that he was willing to [illegible] at the market value as a slave. Proceedings were accordingly made to recover the property by paying the claimant's price for him. Suttle refused to give him up for $1 200. This was [illegible] peremptorily; but then he averred that he would have all reasonable expenses paid, and [illegible] was consented not to give the [illegible] property time. We hear that the Commissioner [illegible] him to conclude the arrangement [illegible] had been agreed on, and that Mr. H. [illegible] his influence to prevent it; and also that Suttle has received a despatch from Virginia, urging him to take the man back at any rate. The gentlemen who sought to buy off the claimant were in consultation on the subject until midnight, Saturday. What the result was known, the following handbill was put in circulation:

"THE MAN IS NOT BOUGHT!

"HE IS STILL IN THE SLAVE PEN IN THE COURT HOUSE.

"The kidnapper agreed both publicly and in writing, to sell him for $1,200. The sum was raised by eminent Boston citizens, and offered him. He then claimed more. The bargain was broken. The kidnapper breaks his agreement, though even the United States Commissioner advised him to keep it. Be on your guard against all ties. WATCH THE SLAVE PEN. Let every man attend the trial. Remember Monday morning at 11 o'clock."

We stated, Saturday, that this man-hunt in Boston was deliberately contrived, and intended as an outrage to the principles and feelings of men in the Free States, to be perpetrated by way of jubilee over the passage of the Nebraska Bill. That was not at one of our hotels, Friday evening, by a gentleman from Northern Virginia, and was told to us by the gentleman to whom he said it, and whom he seems to have mistaken for a Southerner. The final refusal to sell the man plainly confirms this statement.

BOSTON, Monday, May 29.

Anthony Burns was brought into the Court-room at 10½ o'clock this morning, not ironed, but [illegible] guarded. Except the members of the bar, and reporters, no person was admitted without a written pass from the Marshal. There was an immense crowd outside, but they kept very quiet. The [illegible] seems to be among the best [illegible] attempt at rescue would be [illegible].

The Court at 6 o'clock, adjourned till 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

INCIDENTS OF THE AFTERNOON.

The [illegible] Co.," from Worcester, having arrived [illegible] situation and some cheers, one of the leaders attempted to address the crowd from the Court-house steps at the western entrance, but was immediately seized by the police and conveyed to the station-house, and, on attempting to repeat the movement, their banner (with two placards) was taken from them, and the Club dispersed. It is an elegant silk banner, bearing the following inscription: "Worcester Freedom Club—True to the Union and Constitution." On the reverse, "Freedom National Liberty, Equality and Fraternity—Slavery Sectional—and a figure of the Goddess of Liberty."

THE KIDNAPPED SLAVE PEN.

One of the [illegible] fitted that Boston Court-House, Saturday morning, resembled a "beleaguered fortress." It should have said "Bastile," or "fortified slave pen." Some of the windows on the west [illegible] to [illegible] and the southwesterly one show [illegible] signs of the fierce contest that took place [illegible] persons. To our reader [illegible] may be interesting to give some description of the building. It is a large [illegible] granite, strongly [illegible] blocks of granite [illegible] above the basement, and the interior consists of rooms, stairways and [illegible] passages. Its north end fronts on Court-street, from which there are wide spaces on each side of it. Just south of the Court-House is the City Hall, which fronts southerly on School-street, with a well-kept yard before it.

Each of the two placards bore the following: "Shall Freedom or Slavery triumph?—Let Massachusetts speak.

The crowd about the Court House at 5 o'clock, could not have been less than 10,000 persons.

The members of the Worcester Freedom Club, and others, assembled in Tremont Temple, addresses were made by Mr. Garrison, and others, Dr. Mitchell, of Worcester, presiding.

A petition to Congress, for the repeal of the Fugitive Slave Law, was placed in the Exchange Reading room to-day, and has already received a large number of signatures, embracing many well-known merchants, who in the case of the fugitive Sims, two or three years since, were among the most prominent and active upholders of the law.

There is a deep feeling in the community against the rendition of Burns, which is controlled only by respect for the laws of the land.

BURIED ALIVE FOR THREE WEEKS.

The English and French papers which arrived by the last steamer give an exciting account of a man buried alive for three weeks

'Great excitement has been felt at Lyons respecting the efforts made to rescue a poor fellow named Giraud from the dreadful position in which he had been for nearly three weeks, namely, at the bottom of a well, with the dead body of a companion by his side. It is supposed the latter sank under the violence of his emotions, and, in particular of fear. At one moment he used to sing, at another he gave way to the most terrible apprehensions; and, again, he made use of the most violent and abusive language towards the persons who were endeavouring to save him.

'Between three and four in the morning of the 21st, he had taken some soup, and in an hour after, without anything leading to the supposition of his speedy death, he breathed his last, without any pain, but in a state of great mental depression. Evidently, said a late number of the 'Gazette de Lyon,' the uncultivated nature of this man was far from having the strength and composure of which the resignation of his young companion in misfortune now gives proof. Giraud has his back towards the east, with a plank under his feet. As it is loaded with sand, every movement from below upwards is interdicted. The sand in which he is buried to the waist, and which presses on him tightly, renders it impossible for him also to make any movement in a horizontal position. A plank lies against his stomach and another against his back. However, he has succeeded in introducing between the [illegible] and his stomach the ends of his jacket, which afford him some warmth. His hands and arms are at liberty.

'Above his head, and in various directions about his body, is a network of planks, barrelhoops, of gravel and sand, held together only by the most artificial means, and it is through this mass of rubbish that he receives what he wants, that he hears what is said to him, and dimly sees a kind of twilight. On the 14th of April, the sandy soil, in rushing in on the two unfortunate men, like a torrent of water, produced a large excavation, which forms, as it were, a sort of cell, with a wide chimney above, made by the bore of the well. The sides of the bore stayed up by pieces of planks, arranged at certain distances, and it is these which, by crossing each other, form over Giraud's head a sort of roof, of which the slightest shock may destroy the equilibrium, and bring the whole mass on the unfortunate man.

'It is that circumstance which renders the attempt to rescue him so exceedingly delicate and difficult. The soil in which the workmen are endeavoring to effect their excavation is a mixture of pebbles, mixed up with coarse sand, and not possessing the slightest cohesion; it is sufficient to touch any part of it with the finger to cause a portion of it to tumble down; and when a sharp blow is given, a considerable quantity is at once detached, even from the highest part of the cutting.'

"On Monday, the parish priest paid poor Giraud a visit. Lying down upon the ground, his grey head close to the orifice of the well at the bottom of which Giraud hangs on the confines between life and death, he addressed him as follows:

"My dear Giraud, I come to bring you consolation and encouragement. Your deliverance approaches. The brave soldiers who are striving night and day to accomplish it, do not walk alone. They are assisted on all sides by fervent prayers, in which I pray you to join with all your heart. Invoke the help of Mary, whose special 'fete' in this month is now about to be celebrated. In your present state it is not possible for you to confess in the ordinary way, but you need only desire to confess as soon as you are delivered, and to have a lively contrition for your sins, and that will be sufficient to entitle you to receive the absolution which I now give you.

"On being asked whether he had understood this exhortation, Giraud answered that he did so perfectly, and on his assurance in a firm voice that he was in the frame of mind desired, the cure pronounced absolution. An iron mask has been lowered to protect his face from the earth that crumbles down upon him when the engineers sound the earth by which he is surrounded."

PARIS, Thursday, May 4.

Giraud, the man buried alive at Lyons, was dug out yesterday, at 8, P. M. The state of his health affords no ground for apprehension.

The London Times says: "So great was the interest excited in high places, that the Empress of France received, by order, a telegraph despatch every day."

It is said that "Wm. H. Mitchell, of Brooklin, brother of John, has invented a machine for composing and distributing type. It is said to be an improvement on machines for the same purpose hitherto patented."—Mr. William Mitchell appears to be a decidedly wiser man than his brother, and will be of infinitely greater value to society.

FARMS IMPROVED BY KEEPING SHEEP.—To some extent, keeping sheep is found to improve a farm, as they consume much feed that is left by other stock and lost, and at the same time enrich the ground, and give it a better and smoother appearance.

Obituary.

Died, in this city, on the 28th inst., Mrs Ethalinda Lewis, wife of Mr. Joseph Lewis, in the 43d year of her age.

The deceased was a true Christian, and a sincere friend of the slave, and the fugitive was ever warmly welcomed and kindly cared for by her.

Mrs. Lewis was an old member of the Cincinnati Anti-Slavery Society, and, on her emigrating to this country, to flee the prejudice she shared in common with her people, she seized the opportunity to connect herself with an anti-slavery body. She has been an efficient member of the Ladies' Society here, since its formation.—Though unnoticed through a protracted illness and to the end by the members of the Society,—in whose service she may be said to have materially shortened her career, she was kindly cared for by a large circle of colored acquaintances and friends.

May the fugitives have raised up for them (now that friends are failing,) many among their humble people, who will aid and encourage them as did Mrs. Lewis.

Notice

The Directors of the Provincial Freeman, Association, are requested to meet at the usual place, on Wednesday evening, the 7th inst., at 8 o'clock.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA

[illegible] attention has of late been directed [illegible] condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident [illegible], but comparatively little information [illegible] them has reached the public. The [illegible] in this country of the Rev. Samuel [illegible], who has been delegated by the [illegible] Society of Canada to make the case [illegible] Refugees more generally known, has [illegible] number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him. Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon race, or any other of the one great human family

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev S. R. WARD, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony,—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B GRIBBLE, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. THOMAS JAMES, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after affecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number:

It was moved by the Rev. J. Wemberley, Rector of Dorrington, seconded by the Rev. George Wilkins, and adopted:—

The First Cannon Shot.

BY CHARLES MACKAY, LL.D.

Hark! o'er Europe sounding,
The first, the signal gun;
The fire has burst, the blow is struck,
A fatal deed is done.

From north to south it echoes,
From east to west afar,
The insulted nations join their hands,
And gather to the war.

From restless slumbers waking,
The thunder in her ear,
Unhappy Poland starts to life,
And grasps her broken spear.

Old Rome grows young to hear it,
There's mischief in her glance;
And Hungary mounts her battle-steed,
And waves her fiery lance.

Not long shall last the combat,
Though Russia laughs to scorn;
The wrongful cause, if up to-day,
Is down to-morrow morn.

When France unites with England,
Beware defeat and shame,
Ye foes of right, who force the fight,
And fan the heedless flame.

Hark! o'er Europe sounding,
The first, the signal gun,
But when the last loud cannon peals,
'T will tell of victory won.

Be sure, ye proud aggressors,
Your honors shall not last long;
They may not, cannot, shall not win,
Who battle in the wrong.

Erick's Grave.

A RUSSIAN TALE.

It was a stormy evening, in the month of November, that a Russian nobleman, called Baron Jaroslay, his wife, their little daughter, Helena, and their faithful servant Erick in a heavy travelling chariot-and-four, driven by two postillions, drew up at the only inn of the little town of Kobrin, on the borders of Russia and Poland. They were returning from their travels in Europe: and, as the baron had already overstayed the time he had intended to be absent from home, and the weather every day grew worse and worse, he was anxious to press forward with all the speed possible. The fur caps of the postillions, the long manes and tails of the horses, and even the rough leather portmeanteaux, which were strapped on to the roof of the carriage, were white and crisp with frost; clouds of steam rose from the weary beasts as they were unharnessed, and made halos round the lantern which the hostler held in his hand; and the landlord coming up to the door of the chariot, observed that, of course his honor would not think of proceeding further.

"Not, if I were at liberty to follow mine own inclinations," said the Baron; "but, as, it is, I am pressed for time, and we must get on another stage to-night."

"It is a long one, sir," said the landlord; "thirty versts at the very least; and you have the forest of Rostov to pass. There the road is bad, and I dare say the snow is deep; and the wolves, these long nights, are getting hungry."

"O, I am not afraid of wolves," cried the baron; "they would not dare to attack a carriage so early in the year as this is. Let us have four good horses, landlord, and we may be in by nine; for it is not now more than half past six."

"Well, sir, a wilful man must have his own way; I only hope that you may not repent your determination. Horses on, directly Nicholas. But, may be, your honor and your honor's lady will take something hot, for you will need it before you get to Bolisov."

So a cup of spiced wine was brought for the travellers; and Erick had a double portion. He sat, wrapped up in a huge fur cloak, on a low kind of a box in front; for the Baron's carriage, though old fashioned, had been built in England. In a few moments the fresh horses were harnessed, the postillions cracked their whips, and, amidst the thanks and good nights of the landlord, the carriage rolled on.

"It is bitterly cold," said the baroness, as she pulled her cloak more completely round her, and took the little Helena on her lap; "it is bitterly cold, and a fearful night to travel in."

"If the moon can but break through the clouds, as she is trying to do, we shall have a pleasant ride yet," replied her husband. "What, Catherine, a Russian and afraid of a little snow!"

"Well, I am glad that we came on, too," said his wife; "it is pleasant to think that every mile is bringing us nearer home, and my own dear little Nicholas and Frederick."

They were now passing over a wide moor; the wind whistled mournfully round the carriage, driving and chasing the snow before it, for it was snowing heavily; the flare of the lamps cast a kind of ghastly haze on the immediate neighborhood of the carriage, and seemed to make the dark distance still darker.

"O, mamma," cried Helena, "let me come closer to you; it makes me quite afraid to look out of the window."

"Why, what should you be afraid of my love!"

"One is always afraid in the dark, you know, mamma; and, then, just listen to the wind, how it howls."

"My dear child, there is One to whom the darkness no darkness, and who maketh the winds His ministers. We are as safe in His protection here, as if we were in our own dear home, with a warm roof over our head, and a bright fire roaring up the chimney. See, the moon is coming out; we shall not have to journey in the dark."

Thus, amidst occasional questions and answers, the carriage rolled on for some miles. The clouds passed off; the moon was walking in brightness; the wheels rolled noislessly along over the snow; and as far as the eye could see was one glistening sea of white. And now the moor was almost passed; straggling trees, the vanguard of the great forest of Rostov, began to appear on both sides; they became thicker and thicker: and the earth swelled up into banks, and sank into valleys, where there are primroses in the early spring, and daisies and cowslips as summer came on.—But even the hollows could scarcely be traced, for the snow had drifted much; right and left, thousands of pines, which would make a twilight even in the summer noon, were now almost shrouded in darkness, except where an occasional gap or crevice in the branches made the white ground yellow with moon gold. Here and there a larch spread out its white, feathered arms; and occasionally, a leafless oak might be seen, sturdy in its winter nakedness, and moaning dismally to the wind. On passed the carriage and still the pines clustered thicker, and (except in the very road) the shades grew deeper; and there was that solemn sound which is made by the crashing and roaring of a hundred thousand branches.

"What is Erick looking at?" asked the baroness; for the box was so low that its occupier might be seen from the front windows of the carriage.

"I cannot tell," replied her husband; "but he must have good eyes if he can make out anything."

"Hark! what was that?" cried his wife, as a long, low, melancholy howl, different from the wind, and yet like it, was heard for a moment, and died away.

"It is the wolves," answered the baron; "this cold weather makes them turn restless."

"There it is again. It is certainly nearer."

"Erick," said his master, letting down the front window, "tell the boys to drive on; we must keep out of the way of the wolves."

"On with you, my men!" shouted Erick—and then, in a lower voice, he said, "I doubt if we can altogether keep out of their way, sir."

"How is that?" asked the baron, alarmed.

"There is a large pack of them, sir, and they are in scent of us, I fear; at least, they are much nearer than when I first heard them, ten minutes ago. There they are again. They cannot be half a mile off."

"What are we to do?" asked the baron; "I know you, as a Courland man, are more used to these things than I am."

"Why, sir," replied the servant, "if they come up with us, we will take no notice of them, except they attack us; may be, as they are timid creatures, the glare of the lamps and the sight of us will keep them off and in an hour we shall be in. But I would advise you, sir, to draw the bullets from your large pistols, and load them with swan shot; it is more to the purpose to wound a good many than to kill one or two."

"O, papa," cried Helena, as the baron took his pistols from the top of the carriage, "what shall we do?"

"We shall do what we can, my dear child, for ourselves, and God will do the rest for us. There is no great danger in these wolves, except in the very depth of winter; and, if there were, He who delivered David from the paw of the lion and the paw of the bear, and Benaiah from a lion, as this is, in time of snow, and Daniel from the seven hungry lions, can deliver us also."

"Now," said her mother, "now, my love, is the time to see whether we have faith in God, or not. It is easy enough to trust in Him when everything seems safe and comfortable around us; but, when we feel our weakness, then is the time to believe in His power."

"They are coming, sir," said Erick.

The baron looked; and, about a hundred yards back, to the right in the wood, he could just make out a grey mass, moving through the trees, and leaping out into the carriage track. They did not howl, but bayed fearfully; and, as they trotted swiftly along, you might hear the shuffling and rustling of the snow under their feet. They moved steadily, and altogether; but evidently gaining on the carriage. The postboys plied both whip and spur; and the horses themselves, in an agony of fear, broke out into a canter, in spite of the heavy snow.

"Do you think there is danger, my dear husband?" asked the baroness.

"I cannot tell," said her husband.—"They do seem disposed to attack us yet: but they are certainly savage. It is for the horses we have to fear first."

"Are they gaining on us?"

"A little; but they are not putting out their speed: they could be up with us in a moment, if they liked."

Thus the carriage flew along, for about five minutes: Erick never took his eyes of the pack, and the baron, thrusting himself out fram the left-hand window, watched them as carefully.

"Are your pistols loaded, sir," asked Erick.

"All—with swan-shot."

"I have two loaded with ball, and two with shot; so we shall do."

The pack was now no more than ten yards from the carriage; there might be about two hundred in it. On they came; ears pricked up, eyes glaring and bloodshot, tails stretched straight out, tongues hanging down. At their head ran an old, strong grey wolf, the leader of the pack. They all came nearer, nearer, nearer still: at last, with a ferocious howl, the leader sprang on one of the wheel horses, and at the same time received a bullet through his head from Erick, who was prepared for him.

"Now, Sir," said he, "if you will let me have a piece of string, we may be able to make something of it."

"A piece of string?" cried his master; "yes, here it is; but to what end will it serve?"

"Why, sir, you see wolves, like cowardly creatures as they are, are always suspecting a trap; so I will just tie a stick to this string and let it drag behind the carriage. It will keep them off, I dare say, ten minutes."

Erick was right: the stick was dragged along at the distance of about ten yards, and for some time the pack kept behind it, and were plainly afraid of it. At last they began to grow bolder, seemed to have discovered the trick, passed it, and were again making up to the carriage.

"They will be upon us in a moment," cried Erick: "when I cry, Now, sir, be ready to fire on them from one side, and so will I from the other"

"Very well," replied the baron. Helena sat with her hand in her mother's, looking up to her face, and seeming to gain comfort from that. Her mother's face was sad, but very calm; she was evidently praying, and thinking more of her child than herself, and yet still more than either of the mercy and power of God.

"Now, sir," cried Erick.

Master and servant fired at the same moment: there was a savage yell from the foremost in the pack; and three or four fell.

"Load again, sir," cried Erick: "if this lasts, you will want all your pistols soon."

After they had fired once or twice, the wolves were no longer frightened by the report and flash; and they began to surround the coach on all sides.

"There is but one thing left," said Erick: "we must cut the traces of one of the leaders, and turn him off: that will divert them for a little while." And, turning to the foremost post-boy, he ordered him to cut the traces of his off horse. The man obeyed: the terrified animal started off to the right, into the forest; and, with a loud yell the whole pack rushed after him.

"Thank God for that," cried the baroness. "Then we may be saved after all."

"Aye, madam, if He pleases," replied the servant: "but this relief will not last long: and they will be upon us again."

"How far do you imagine that we are from the post house, now?" inquired the baron.

"Some half-hour," aswered Erick: "but they will chase us up to the very doors. I never knew them more fierce. Hark! they have got him."

As he spoke there came a scream, or rather shriek, as of a person in agony, far from the right; a shriek so horrible in its sound, that, once heard, it could never be forgotten. Helena and her mother both exclaimed, "What can that be?"

"It is the poor horse," replied the baron: "they are tearing him to pieces. A horse's shriek is the most horrible of all horrible things."

"Drive on, my men, for your lives," shouted Erick. "They will be back presently."

The snow became deeper; and the road worse; and the three horses, worn out with fatigue, ill supplied the place of four fresh ones. On the right hand the wood thinned a little, opening a kind of a glade in the centre of which was a frozen pond. As the travellers passed it, the pack of wolves appeared dashing up the valley, baying as they had done at first; only now the jaws and heads of many were steeped with blood.

"We must let another go," cried Erick, "or they will be too much for us; but we must take care what we are about. You and I, sir, will fire at once: and then do you, Peter," he added, addressing the foremost post-boy, "cut the traces of your horse, jump down, and leap up here by me."

This was done and the pack were again drawn off. The remaining pair of horses strained their utmost, and all the travellers listened for any sign of the reappearance of their enemies. The baron spoke twice to Erick, but received no answer; he seemed quite taken up by his own thoughts. At length, the carriage reached the top of a hill; and, at the distance of apparently two miles before it, a clear steady light was to be seen.

"Thank God! there is Bolisov!" cried Erick: "now then, sir, I believe that you are safe," As he spoke, the pack again was heard in the distance; and though the post light grew larger and brighter every moment the wolves gained on them, and in a few minutes surrounded them.

"It must come at last, my dear master," said Erick. "I have served you and your father these twenty years, but I never did you better service than I now intend to do. If we all remain together, we shall be all torn to pieces; I will get down, and with my pistols, I shall, I trust, be able to keep them at bay a few minutes. You press on with all speed; leave me here. I know you will take care of my wife and child.

"No, Erick!" said the baroness: "we will not allow this. We will all be saved or all perish together. I could not bear to escape at the price of your blood."

"No, indeed, Erick," said Helena.

The baron looked at his wife and child, and said nothing.

"Besides, I will try to climb a tree," said Erick; "may be they will give me time.—But If I delay a moment longer, we shall all be lost together."

"God bless you, Erick," cried his master: "God bless you; and he will bless you. If you perish, I will look on your wife as a sister, and bring up your children as one of my own."

"Thank you, sir," said Erick firmly.—"Now God be with you all. Fire, sir, two pistols at once!" And, while the baron fired, Erick leaped to the ground. On dashed the horses; the pack terrified for a moment, stood still and bayed. Almost immediately, the travellers heard the report of a pistol: in about a minute after, of two, close together; but they heard no more.

And now they are within a hundred yards of the strong, log-built inn; the pack is close behind them; the post-boy cracks his whip; the baron fires; the whole party shout; and, as the carriage dashes up to the door, it opens, and a fresh blaze of light is poured into the road. The wolves turn; and the baron and his family are in safety.

Of Erick no trace was ever found. His pistols were discovered next morning, where he had been left; three discharged, and one still loaded. It is supposed he had no time to fire it, before he was pulled down. I need not tell you how nobly the baron fulfilled his promise to his wife and child.

On this same spot now stands a cross, bearing on one side of its pedestal the name and story of Erick; on the other, the legend —"GREATER LOVE HATH NO MAN THAN THIS THAT A MAN LAY DOWN HIS LIFE FOR HIS FRIENDS."

And now, what are you to learn from this story? What but this? If there have been found those who are willing, for their friend's sake, to give up the dearest thing they had, even their life, will you not be ashamed at your selfishness in being unwilling to give up the smallest trifle for those that you love? It is all very well to read of the triumphs of the cross; but when will you show them? Not while you seek your own pleasures, not while you do our own will, not while self is uppermost in everything you take in hand. This if you consider, you will show your remembrance of a greater love than that of Erick: the one endured even to death for benefactors and friends, the other for offenders and enemies.

NIAGARA FALLS SURPASSED.—It is very surprising, says a late writer, that two of the greatest natural curiosities in the world are in the United States, and scarcely known to the best information of our geographers and naturalists; the one is a beautiful fall in Franklin, Habersham county, Georgia; the other a stupendous precipice in Pendleton district, South Carolina. They are both faintly mentioned in the late edition of Morse's Geography, but not as they merit. The Tucco fall is much higher than the Niagara. The column of water is propelled beautifully over a perpendicular rock, and when the stream is full, it passes down without being broken. All the prismatic effect seen at Niagara illustrates the spray of Tucco. The table mountain in Pendleton district is an awful precipice of nine hundred feet. Many persons reside within five, seven or ten miles of this grand spectacle, who never had the curiosity to visit it. It is now visited by curious travellers, and sometimes by men of science.

MARTHA MASON,
A SONG OF THE OLD FRENCH WAR

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Robie Rawlin, frosts were falling,
When the ranger's horn was calling,
Through the woods to Canada;
Gone the winter's sleet and snowing,
Gone the spring time's bud and blowing,
Gone the summer's harvest mowing,
And again the fields are gray;
Yet away, he's away;
Faint and fainter hope is growing,
In the hearts that mourn his stay.

"Martha Mason, Martha Mason,
Prithee tell us what's the reason
That you mope at home to-day;
Surely smiling is not sinning;
Leave your quilling, leave your spinning:
What is all your store of linen,
If your heart is never gay?
Come away, come away!
Never yet did sad beginning
Make the end of life a play!"

Overbending, till she's blending,
With the flaxen skein she's tending,
Pale brown tresses smoothed away
From her face of patient sorrow,
Sits she, seeking but to borrow,
From the trembling hope of morrow,
Solace for the weary day.
"Go your way, laugh and play:
Unto him who heeds the sparrow
And the lily, let me pray."

"With our rally rings the valley—
Join us!" cried the blue-eyed Nelly;
"Join us!" cried the laughing May:
"To the beach we all are going,
And, to save the task of rowing,
West by north the wind is blowing,
Blowing briskly down the bay!
Come away, come away!
Time and tide are swiftly flowing,
Let us take them while we may!

"Never tell us that you'll fail us,
Where the purple beach-plum mellows
On the bluffs so wild and gray.
Hasten, for the oars are falling;
Hark, our merry mates are calling;
Time it is that we were all in,
Singing tideward down the bay!"
"Nay, nay, let me stay;
Sore and sad for Robie Rawlin,
Is my heart," she said, "to-day!"

"Vain your calling for Rob Rawlin,
Some red squaw his moose-meat's broiling,
Or some French lass, singing gay;
Just forget as he's forgetting;
What's the use of always fretting?
If some stars must needs be setting,
Others rise as good as they!"
"Cease, I pray; go your way!"
Martha cries, her eyelids wetting;
"Foul and false the words you say!"

"Martha Mason, hear to reason, Prithee putta kinder face on;"
"Cease to vex me," did she say.
"Spake you true, instead of lying,
If I knew the pines were sighing
O'er his grave, and wild birds crying,
I, as now, would say you nay.
But away, far away,
Turns my heart, forever trying
Some new hope for each new day.

When the shadows hide the meadows,
And the sunset's golden ladders
Climb the twilight's walls of gray,
From the window of my dreaming
I can see his firelock gleaming,
And his smile of welcome beaming
Brightly on his homeward way;
But away, swift away,
Glides the fond delusive seeming,
And I kneel again to pray!"

Look up, Martha! Worn and swarthy
Glowed a face of manhood worthy.
"Robie!"—"Martha!"—all they say.
O'er went wheel and reel together,
Little cared the owner whither;
Heart of lead is heart of feather,
Noon of night is golden day!
When true lovers meet each other,
Why should prying idlers stay?

Cities of the Plain.

In the Old Testament scriptures there is an account of the utter overthrow and destruction of certain cities, the inhabitants of which aroused the Divine vengeance. It has always been a favourite theory with many moderns, that the Dead Sea covered the site of the cities of Sodom and Gomorroh, and unless we err in our recollections, Lieut. Lynch gave that opinion an emphatic endorsation. Indeed our gallant officer had no doubt, that he found Mrs. Lot, who, we are told, was transformed into a pillar of salt for looking back as she ran.

A book has just been published in England, and we presume will soon appear in this country, which will give the quietus to the popular ideas on this subject. It seems that Monsieur de Saulcy, a member of the French Institute, could not coincide with the popular notions of the overthrow of the cities of the plain; regarding them as unauthorized by the Scriptural history of the event. His desire to vindicate the correctness of his views induced him to visit the Holy Land. Accordingly, he left for the scene of his labors in 1850, being accompanied by his son, the Abbe de Michen. and several intelligent friends. In that and the following year he pursued his archæological explorations with the happiest results.

He was abundantly supplied with means, and having secured a strong body-guard of infantry and cavalry, he was enabled to proceed with his mission without danger from the nomadic tribes of Arabs. He directed his attention, first, to a careful examination of the Dead sea. Beneath the stinking waters of this remarkable sea, popular tradition had located Sodom and Gomorroh; but he was soon convinced that like the apples that were once believed to grow upon its borders, the popular idea had no foundation in fact.

But he found the cities of the plain and rode among their ruins. His eyes looked upon their widely extended remains, bearing even now the marks of that terrible visitation—"fire from Heaven"—which consumed and destroyed them. Upon the shore and in the valleys where they originally stood, this French savant discovered their blackened ruins.

It is surprising that they have not sooner been discovered. The Holy Land has been a point of interest with all travelers and explorers in all times. From the crusades until the present hour, men have flocked thither and trodden the land more full of sublime memories than any other portion of this babbling earth.

But we easily account for the failure to discover these relics of the olden times. Men have always visited the Dead Sea, and as they looked upon its sluggish salt waters have regarded them as shutting up in darkness the cities accursed of Heaven. Hence no traveler has sought after the cities of the plain, and it has been reserved for the French savant of the present day to bring to light the strong confirmation of the Old Testament records. We trust that our American booksellers will soon give to the American public the results of Monsieur de Saulay's researches.—Richmond Enquirer.

MEAT CURING AT SALT LAKE.—The citizens of Utah, and especially those residing in the vicinity of the Salt Lake, are enabled to "cure" meat in an improved manner, as the following paragraph sets forth:

"Experiments have been made upon the properties of the water of Salt Lake, Utah, for preserving meat, by Mr. Stansbury and his associates. A large piece of fresh beef was suspended from a cord and immersed in the lake for over 12 hours, when it was found to be tolerably well cured. After this all the meat they wished to be preserved, was packed into barrels without any salt whatever, and the vessels were then filled with lake water. No further care or preparation was necessary, and the meat remained perfectly sweet, although constantly exposed to the atmosphere and sun. They were obliged to mix fresh water with the brine to prevent the meat from becoming too salt for present use."

☞ Onions finely chopped and mixed with Indian meal, are highly commended by the Farming Mirror, for fowls, once or twice a week at least. They are said to prevent and cure the gapes, and many other diseases to which fowls are subject.

THE GOSPEL TRIBUNE.

PROSPECTUS.

The first number of a monthly paper, to be known as above indicated, is proposed to be published in Toronto within a few months, and not later than the First day of July, 1854. The work in size and appearance, to be at least equal to the Missionary Record or Christian Observer; and as much superior to either in style and execution as the subscription list will warrant.

DISTINCTIVE OBJECT:

To enlarge the limits of Communion and Church-Membership, among Christians, to the greatest possible extent; and to circumscribe those bounds to the exclusion, if possible, of all other characters, without otherwise disturbing the Membership of existing Churches; till acknowledged Christian Character shall constitute the only passport, at any time, and the perfect passport at all times, to every Communion and Church worthy of the Christian name; "that the world may believe" in Christ, even as he prayed.

GENERAL OBJECTS:

The promotion of Religious, Moral, Intellectual and social improvement, under the guidance of Divine Revelation, submitting every move and measure to the test of Gospel Principles.

SUPPORTERS:

The distinctive and general objects of the work are such, as to claim for it the patronage of all classes of men, excepting those wedded to other pre-requisites of Communion and Church-membership, than acknowledged Christian Character; and here it is recorded with great pleasure that the encouragements tendered, thus far, are in strict accordance with the above general claims.

ORIGIN AND PROGRESS:

This movement has long been contemplated. For twenty years the subscriber has made the distinctive object of the GOSPEL TRIBUNE his special study: examining carefully and personally the denominational aspect of Religious Societies,—their reciprocal bearings, their mutual relations, and the nature of their combined influence on the evangelization of the world. Latterly, his position as Publisher of the SCRIPTURE MANUAL, has probably afforded him the best possible facilities for personally testing the strength his positions, and for the attainment of certain important information, but little of which he had previously been able to obtain. All may rest assured, however, that no undue advantage will ever be taken of the frankness and candor with which Christians of every name, as well as skeptics of every class, have freely expressed their convictions in the presence of the Travelling Colporteur; the capacity in which the Publisher is still extending his observations through Canada and the neighboring States.

CO-LABORERS:

Of distinguished worth and of well-known literary ability, are already secured in the several sections of Canada, and in the States of the American Union; and arrangements are now in progress, to obtain from living responsible writers in Britain, important assistance in the developement of the TRIBUNE'S Mission.

TERMS AND NOTICES:

The Terms are One Dollar per Annum in advance,—otherwise Two Dollars; it being found that one half of the Subscriptions, not paid in advance, are worse than lost. Editors—friendly—will render assistance by noticing this Prospectus. All parties willing to aid, may at once commence soliciting the names of Subscribers. Two books —the Scripture and Laconic Manuals—fully gilt, and the Paper one year, will be forwarded to the person who first sends the names of ten Subscribers; and one of either of the books, in substantial leather binding, or the Paper one year, to every one who sends ten names. Subscriptions and all other communications for the Paper to be sent, post-paid, marked Money, (if inclosed) and addressed, ROBERT DICK, Box 411, TORONTO.

Sermons and Lectures, promotive of the TRIBUNE'S object, will be delivered by the Publisher throughout the Province as frequently as shall be found compatible with his other duties.

(Signed) ROBERT DICK.

Toronto, March 25th, 1854.

CALL FOR A NATIONAL EMIGRATION CONVENTION OF COLORED MEN,

To be held in Cleveland, Ohio, on the 24th, 25th and 26th of August, 1854.

MEN AND BRETHREN:—The time has now fully come, when we, as an oppressed people, should do something effectively, and use those means adequate to the attainment of the great and long desired end—to do something to meet the actual demands of the present and prospective necessities of the rising generation of our people in this country. To do this, we must occupy a position of entire equality, of unrestricted rights, composing in fact, an acknowledged necessary part of the ruling element of society in which we live. The policy necessary to the preservation of this element must be in our favor, if ever we expect the enjoyment, freedom, sovereignty, and equality of rights anywhere. For this purpose, and to this end, then, all colored men in favor of emigration out of the United States, and opposed to the American Colonization scheme of leaving the Western Hemisphere, are requested to meet in CLEVELAND, OHIO, on TUESDAY, the 24th DAY of AUGUST, 1854, in a great NATIONAL CONVENTION, then and there, to consider and decide upon the great and important subject of emigration from the United States.

No person will be admitted to a seat in the Convention, who would introduce the subject of emigration to the Eastern Hemisphere—either to Asia, Africa, or Europe—as our object and determination is to consider our claims to the West Indies, Central and South America, and the Canadas. This restriction has no reference to personal preference, or individual enterprise; but to the great question of national claims to come before the Convention.

All persons coming to the Convention must bring credentials properly authenticated, or bring verbal assurance to the Committee on Credentials—appointed for the purpose—of their fidelity to the measures and objects set forth in this Call as the Convention is specifically by and for the friends of emigration, and NONE OTHERS—and no opposition to them will be entertained.

The question is not whether our condition can be bettered by emigration, but whether it can be made worse. If not, then, there is no part of the wide-spread universe, where our social and political condition are not better than here in our native country, and nowhere in the world as here, proscribed on account of color.

We are friends, too, and ever will stand shoulder to shoulder by our brethren, and all our friends in all good measures adopted by them for the betterng of our condition in this country, and surrender no rights but with our last breath; but as the subject of emigration is of vital importance, and has ever been shunned by all delegated assemblages of our people as heretofore met, we cannot longer delay, and will not be further baffled; and deny the right of our most sanguine friend or dearest brother, to prevent an intelligent enquiry to, and the carrying out of these measures, when this can be done, to our entire advantage, as we propose to show in Convention—as the West Indies, Central and South America—the majority of which are peopled by our brethren, or those identified with us in race, and what is more, destiny, on this continent—all stand with open arms and yearning hearts, importuning us in the name of suffering humanity to come—to make common cause, and share one common fate on the continent.

The Convention will meet without fail, at the time fixed for assembling, as none but those favorable to emigration are admissable; therefore no other gathering may prevent it. The number of delegates will not be restricted—except in the town where the Convention may be held—and there the number will be decided by the Convention, when assembled, that they may not too far exceed the other delegations.

The time and place fixed for holding the Convention are ample; affording sufficient time, and a leisure season generally—and as Cleveland is now the centre of all directions—a good and favorable opportunity to all who desire to attend.—Therefore, it may reasonably be the greatest gathering of the colored people ever before assembled in a Convention in the United States.

Colonizationists are advised, that no favors will be shown to them or their expatriating scheme, as we have no sympathy with the enemies of our race.

All colored men, East, West, North and South, favorable to the measures set forth in this Call will send in their names (post paid) to M R Delany, or Rev. Wm. Webb, Pittsburgh, Pa., that there may be arranged adequately to the Call, five names from each State

We must make an issue, create an event, and establish a position for ourselves. It is glorious to think of, but far more glorious to carry out.

The Potato Deterioration and Improvement.

I have been a tolerably close observer of that esculent vegetable, the potato, cultivating it with great success, notwithstanding the curl rot, or malady, as it is called.—Since I have ascertained the fact of the potatoe being a mountain plant, I have looked as far back as 1846, and have since that period cultivated it on upland, and it may be from that source that I owe part of my success.

There are four principal reasons which my experience tells me are the causes of the decay of the potatoe. They are—first late planting; second, cutting sets; third, ravages of insects; fourth, thick or close planting.

First. I usually plant as soon as the ground is sufficiently dry to plough. In so doing I think they have the benefit of that cool moisture incidental to the growth of potatoes, thereby enabling them to come to a state of maturity before the extreme heat in the latter part of summer. Two years ago I planted my potatoes in April and at harvesting I had no rotten ones, and on the 3rd of June of the same year I let a neighbor have some of the same sort of seed which I had planted, and he planted them, but in a short time after he harvested them they nearly all rotted. I have observed this in many other instances.

Second. I never cut my sets except when I do it to try experiments, as I believe they lose much of their juices and vitality. Last year I planted 66 hills with uncut sets of medium size. I then cut some large ones through the middle, dropping the seed ends in one pile and the stems in another, and 66 hills with sets of the stem ends had one gallon of affected tubers, and those from the seed ends had three-fourths of a bushel of affected ones, and the former yielded a bushel and a half more than the latter.

Third. There are two kinds of insects worthy of notice. One is a small black bug about the size of the flea, that jumps very like that insect when approached, which gnaws the cuticle off the leaves and young shoots; it also works on cabbage, turnips, radishes and pepper-grass. The other is a large variety, growing from a half to three-fourths of an inch long; some of them are of a dusky-brown hue, while others are brown striped with yellow. They were so numerous here three years ago that they devoured the leaves of my potatoes, beets, beans, and many other vegetables; they then travelled off to the woodland, falling aboard of vegetation there, and devouring it like so many herbiverous animals. My potatoes are more generally injured by those little pests than by any thing else. A good preventive is to sift dry unleached wood ashes or slaked lime over them while they are wet with dew or rain which I believe acts as a lunar caustic, at once destroying them. They soon disappear, at all events. Perhaps you or some one conversant with entomology, can give the names of these insects.

Fourth. A great many people having a small lot of ground for potatoes, will, in order to get the largest yield, crowd them in three times as close as they ought to be; and the result is, they throw up a bunch of weak tops and smother each other, and shut out the air and light, which are particularly essential to the growth of the potatoe—the haulm rots next the ground, the outside leaves curl and mildew, and in a week or so die, and the fetid juice passes down and affects the tuber, which very soon sets up decomposition. Is it not then a wonder that the potato, under so many states of deprivation for more than a century past, does not become entirely extinct?

In addition to the above causes may be mentioned the bad management of pitting.—I have noticed a great many farmers here who defer digging their potatoes till late in autumn, after the fall rains have come, on, and then have to take them up in a wet state and put them away, which is very detrimental to them. They should be taken up in dry weather and left in the sun to dry, and then carefully pitted or stored in a dry cellar.

Last season I cultivated a small plot of ground (one-eighth of an acre), to ascertain the expense of culture. It was a north-eastern aspect, and the soil was composed of sandy and clayey loam, intermixed with vegetable mould. It was broken upon the 10th of April and left to the 2nd of May, when there were five loads of well-decomposed stable manure spread on and ploughed in to the depth of ten inches. It was then well harrowed and furrowed off three and a half feet each way, and two sets dropped in a hill, six or eight inches apart, and covered four or five inches deep. They were cut cross-wise, the seed ends being planted in one place and the middle and stem ends in another; and and those from the seed ends on being harvested were not only of a smaller size, but had more pronged and more affected ones than the others, there being a half a bushel in all, which I charge to late planting and cutting sets. As soon as they were up sufficiently high, they were ploughed, with three furrows in a row, and hoed, with a broad flat hill hollowing in the middle to conduct rain. This included all the work or care they had.

The following is the bill of expenses of cultivation:

April 10	Breaking up the lot,	0. 18
" 30	Hauling three loads of manure	37
May 2	" two " d. and plowing,	75
" 2	Spreading manure	37
" 2	One fourth bushels of seed	62
" 2	Planting the same,	37
June 8	Ploughing and hoeing	50
" 15	Digging and pitting.	1 31
	Total.	$4 61

The middle part of last season was warm and dry here; there was not rain enough in six weeks to lay the dust on the public highway. The drought, however, did not appear to impede the growth of the potato much, the haulm looking green and fresh, and entirely covering the ground, so that it could not be seen, and the ground was perfectly mellow and porous. The crop was excellent, yielding 60 bushels of lage tubers; one was 15 inches long, and weighed 3 pounds—another, a pronged one, would hardly go into a peck measure, and weighed 5 pounds. The crop averaged 48 fold to the seed, and 480 bushels per acre.—Co. Genesee Farmer.

Preserving Flowers.—A friend has just informed us that fruit and flowers may be preserved from decay and fading by immersing them in a solution of Gum Arabic in water two or three times, waiting a sufficient time between each immersion to allow the gum to dry. This process covers the surface of the fruit with a thin coating of the gum, which is entirely impervious to the air, and thus prevents the decay of the fruits, or the withering of the flowers. Our friend has roses thus preserved which have all the beauty and fragrance of freshly plucked ones, though they have been separated from the parent stem since June last. To ensure success in experiments of this kind, it should be borne in mind that the whole surface must be completely covered; for if the air only gains entrance a pin-hole, the labor will all be lost. In preserving specimens of fruit, particular care should be taken to cover the stem, end and all, with the gum. A good way is to wind a thread of silk about the stem, and then sink it in slowly in the solution, which should not be so strong as to leave a particle of the gum undissolved. The gum is so perfectly transparent that you can with difficulty detect its presence except by the touch.

Here we have another simple method of fixing the fleeting beauty of Nature, and surrounding ourselves ever with those objects which do most elevate the mind, refine the the tastes, and purify the heart.—Country Gentleman.

The St. Domingo Intrigue.

The following resolution, pregnant with results far more serious than will generally be suspected, was submitted to the Senate yesterday, by Mr. Douglas:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the expediency of recognising the independence of the Republic of Dominica, and of opening diplomatic intercourse with the same.

To understand the import of this resolution fully, the past history of our diplomatic relations with the Island of St. Domingo, should be explored, and the secret policy pursued towards it by every administration since Harrison's, should be known. We have only time and space to glance at one or two of their leading features.

While Mr. Calhoun was Secretary of State, a man by the name of Hogan was sent out to St. Domingo on a secret mission, the ultimate object of which was to do something there to counteract the successful effort at self-government, making at the other end of the island, by the Haytians. Mr. Hogan's report was so absurdly false, that Mr. Calhoun was ashamed to publish it, nor has it ever been permitted to see the light. Subsequently the Dominicans—that is, those occupying the eastern extremity of the island, the successors of the ancient Spanish colonists—revolted from the Haytians, by the connivance, it is supposed, of President Boyer. When Soulouque was chosen President, he marched an army into the east, with the intention of restoring the integrity of the republic. He reached Azua, about half the distance, when, in consequence of the unusual dryness of the season, and the impossibility of getting food for his horses, he was obliged to retire. Soon after his return to the capital, he gave notice of his intention to renew hostilities the following year—1850.

Meantime, a new intrigue was set on foot by a former United States consul at Mexico, and two men by the names of Green and Walsh—who have made themselves somewhat notorious since in connection with Haytian matters—to secure the recognition of the independence of Dominica by the United States, upon such terms as would render that republic a desirable place of emigration for the planters of the Middle and Southern States, with their slaves. To enhance the value of their services to the Dominicans, and of course to improve the conditions and privileges to be secured to the projected American colony, they also undertook to prevent Soulouque's executing his purpose of renewing his attacks upon the Dominican territory. For this purpose Walsh was sent to Port-au-Prince, the capital of Hayti, by Mr. Fillmore, with instructions to co-operate with the English and French consuls resident there, in threatening him with the joint intervention of the three governments, if he persisted in his design of invading Dominica.

This absurd proceeding on the part of Mr. Fillmore, was treated by Soulouque with more respect than it deserved, for it was not resented; but the Emperor declined to give any pledges for the future. The correspondence which passed between the intervening commissioners and the Haytian government, together with the despatches of Walsh to the State department, appeared at length in the Evening Post, about three years ago, and we venture to say that our government never appeared to less advantage in any controversy with a foreign power.

At the very time that Mr. Fillmore, through his swaggering, ill-bred and reckless commissioner, was trying to bully the Haytian Government, which, by the way, we had never recognised, into an acquiescence in the revolt and secession of two-thirds of its territory for the benefit of another government, which, also, we had never recognised, he was reading Kossuth and his companions long homilies, at Washington, against entangling alliances and foreign intervention. He could not permit the American Government to gasp a sigh for the wretched Hungarians, because, he said, it it was not the policy of our government to take any part in the controversies of other powers; and at the very time he was secretly at work trying to frighten a feeble and ignorant people, who were making an effort to govern themselves and to deserve a position among the independent nations of the earth, into a concession which would inevitably result in constant border wars, and unceasing waste of blood and money as long as it lasted; for we undertake to say that it is not possible for two governments to be maintained together in peace in the Island of St. Domingo. At all events, that unhappy country has never had any such fortunate experience since anything has been known of it by the civilized world. Columbus found the Indians of the East warring upon the West, when he landed there; and the hostile relation has never ceased, we believe, since then, except during the short period of Boyer's administration, when the island was united under the Haytian flag.

Partly in consequence, perhaps, of the intervention of the three leading powers, of which we have been speaking, and partly, we suppose, for want of resources, Soulouque has not renewed hostilities since the armistice proclaimed in 1849. Meantime, the intrigues in Dominica have been progressing. Mr. Fillmore was not re-elected, and of course for some time the subject did not receive much attention in the State department. The time for its consideration by President Pierce, however, finally arrived, and the result was the mission of a secret commissioner, to the city of St. Domingo. He reached that city in February last, and we presume the motion of Mr. Douglas is based upon the despatches received from him. In view of this presumption, it may be well for the public to know something more of this commissioner. It is no other than the redoubtable and immaculate Colonel Montgomery, alias Mrs. Storms, formerly editress of the Sun, and companion-in-arms of Beach the elder, with whom she visited Cuba and other foreign parts, in times gone by.

At the close of that engagement, she became a follower of the American army in the Mexican war, where she may have had the good fortune to make the acquaintance of Brigadier-General Pierce, and produced an impression of which this is one of the fruits, and where she certainly did find a friend in husband in one Mr. Cazneau, whose name not yoke, she now bears. He is the ostensible, she is the real, commissioner. He was in Texas when the commission was issued, but as she was esteemed the better man of the two, it was sent to her at New York city. She immediately took passage to St. Domingo, and sent him word by mail to follow her, which he, like a dutiful husband did, arriving six weeks or two months after her.

What her precise instructions were, we are not advised. We can only infer them from the tenor of her conversations and behavior when she arrived there, as related to us by an eye and ear-witness. She evinced a strong disposition to invest in real estate in the city of St. Domingo, and encouraged others to follow her example, saying quite freely that there soon would be a change in the state of things there—that the country would belong to the United States in less than six months, and advised property holders to improve their buildings, and prepare for an extensive American immigration.

We will now briefly state what we understand to be the scheme of this commissioner, and of the parties with whom she or he acts. The Government, of course, we assume to be innocent in the premises.

By appearing in the attitude of protectors to the Dominican republic against Soulouque, and by securing the recognition of her national existence, and qualified protection by the United States, they expect in return certain grants of territory, and such privileges in the occupation and enjoyment of it, as will induce emigration from the United States. But this is only the first act in the drama. The government of Dominica is very feeble, and utterly destitute of political and financial resources. There is no prominent man in the Dominican republic, not excepting Santana, nor any one who possesses the confidence of the people, or intelligence and experience enough to conduct the government a week, if he were to die. The commerce of Dominica has dwindled down to a very insignificant affair, its currency has depreciated to the prime cost of its manufacture, about five cents worth to the dollar, and its revenues are so small, that they hardly suffice to pay the President his trifling salary, and supply oil to the single lighthouse which the government still maintains at the city of St. Domingo.

In a country thus conditioned and thinly populated by an enervated and inferior race, it would be a very easy matter for one or two hundred Americans, by bribery or intimidation to overcome the government, alter the Constitution so as to legalize Slavery, and open a new slave market on a soil upon which more blood has been shed in defence of freedom, than upon any tract of its size on the face of the earth. Annexation to the United States would be the next and an easy step; and we should find ourselves, before we dreamt of it, a coterminous neighbor of the Emperor of Hayti. How long it would take to pick a quarrel with such a neighbor, and shoulder him into the sea, we need not stop to calculate.

Such is the scheme which was projected many years ago, and which now appears to be coming to a head. We trust the instructions and despatches of Mr. Cazneau will be laid before the Senate and the public, before the resolution of Judge Douglas is finally disposed of, that we may know what are the grounds upon which it is proposed to make a distinction between the sovereignties of Dominica and Hayti. Hitherto our government has refused to recognise any negro sovereignty. We wish to know what reasons are given for making Dominica an exception.

There can be no objection to the extension of such a national courtesy to the Eastern Republic, provided it can be done without violating the rights of Hayti, which ought to be respected by us all the more faithfully because she is incapable of resenting such violation; but we wish to have the reasons for making an exception to the policy hitherto pursued in reference to negro sovereignties.

We wish to know whether the vote upon the recognition of Dominica is to settle the policy of this government in reference to Hayti and Liberia, or whether an attempt is to be made, under color of Mrs. Cazneau's fables, and the false representations of those who are connected with her in this Dominican intrigue, to make the government believe that Dominica is any the less a negro government than Hayti or Liberia. If so, be it our care to see that such representations do not obtain credit with the country, long.—Evening Post.

The Richest Man in Virginia.

Correspondence of the Richmond Whig.

Gentlemen: I have thought for some time, I would write for your paper something in relation to the richest man in Virginia, and the largest slaveholder in the Union, and perhaps in the world, unless the serfs of Russia be considered slaves; and the wish expressed in your paper, a few days ago, to know whom it was so wealthy in Virginia, induces me to write this now.

Samuel Hairston, of Pittsylvania, is the gentleman. When I was in this section, a year or two ago, he was the owner of between 1,600 and 1,700 slaves in his own right, having but a little while before taken a census. He also has a prospective right to about 1,000 slaves more, which are now owned by his mother-in-law, Mrs. R. Hairston, he having married her only child. He now has the management of them, which makes the number of his slaves reach near three thousand. They increase at the rate of near one hundred every year; he has to purchase a large plantation every year to settle them on. A large number of his plantations are in Henry and Patrick counties, Virginia. He has large estates in North Carolina. His landed property in Stokes alone, is assessed at $600,000. His wealth is differently estimated at from three to five million dollars: and I should think it was nearer the latter. He has overseer who are compelled to give him a written statement of what has been made and spent on each plantation, and his negroes are all clothed and fed from his own domestic manufacture; and raising his own tobacco crop, which is immensely large, as so much clear gain every year, beside his increase in negroes, which is a fortune of itself.

And now for his residence. I have traveled over fifteen States of this Union, and never seen anything comparable to his grand garden, except some of those in the Mississippi delta, and none of them equal it. Mrs. Hairston has been beautifying it for years; and a good old minister, gazing near the place, and describing in praise, said, "it was as beautiful as Mrs. Paradise, sir," or, as a friend who visited Hairston's," city for the first time, remarkington's public grounds were nearly as Washed, at "the p nuel Hairston's." He is a hands ome as Sa gentleman, and has never plain, unassuming the world, though he made any noise in ces, the McDonoughs could vie with the Br strange that, while and A stors; and it is ive with the Union, their wealth is co-extens ndred miles from he is not known one h w the wealthiest home. I believe he is no Astor is only man in the Union, as Wm. B the estates of worth about $4,000,000, and while Mr. city people are vastly overrated, that will Hairston can show the property bring the cash at any moment. Mr. Hairston was raised within a few

Great Western Railway.

As I promised you an occasinoal note of my travels, I occupy a few moments in expressing my admiration of the Great Western Railway route, through Canada. I was most agreeably surprised in finding so fine a road, and one so well managed. It passes through a lovely country, and exhibits, to the eye more delightful and variegated scenery, than can be found on any other route in the United States. Your own beautiful Lake St. Clair first greeted the eye, and as we passed along its margin on a beautiful sunny morning, in view of sail and steam vessels, it brought a general exclamation of admiration from our whole company.

After leaving the lake, the country is generally timbered land for 50 or 60 miles, but the road is completely lined with beautiful wild flowers, which contrasting with the dark green foliage of the forest, rendered the scenery beautiful beyond description. The ladies in our company were delighted that we had decided to take this route. The scenery about London is different, but magnificent, while near, and at Hamilton, few places in the north can boast of its equal. But I have not time to express my admiration of the whole country through which we passed.

What added to the pleasure of our excursion, was the fact that yesterday was Queen Victoria's birthday, which was celebrated upon the whole line of the road. The locomotive which conducted our train was decorated with flowers and upon the forward beam a standard was erected, bearing St. George's cross, or the meteor flag of England, supported on each side by the "Star-Spangled Banner." As we glided along through the country, we were greeted by the doffing of beavers, by the gentlemen, and the waving of handkerchiefs by the ladies, and I must own what you may hereafter take me to task for; that is, I saw more handsome girls in Canada yesterday, than I ever saw before in my life. Of course, I except those of our company.

Suffice it to say, I am much pleased with my excursion through Canada. I never received more gentlemanly treatment from the officers of a railroad in my life, and did I know their names, I should give them to the public. I could say much more about the appearance of Lake Ontario, Sir Allan McNab's castle, mountain scenery, &c., &c., but time will not permit. We are here at the falling of the waters. Everything is lovely about the Falls this morning, after a nice refreshing shower during the night.—Cor. of the Detroit Daily Advertiser.

Attempt to Kidnap a Free Man, who Died in Self-Defence.

On Thursday of last week, a man named McLeod, who had been stopping in and about Xenia for a few days, and who is represented as being a disreputable person, left that town in a buggy, and drove towards Selma. A few miles out he overtook a colored man whom he suspected of being a fugitive slave, and asked him to get in and ride on to the next cross roads. The negro thanked him and got into the buggy, but at the first farm house McLeod said he must feed his horse, and persuaded the negro to wait. McLeod went into the house and succeeded in making a bargain with the farmer to help in securing the supposed slave for half the reward. The negro was invited into a room to eat, was seized, tied with ropes, and placed in the buggy to be driven toward Cedarville on the railroad. The man who had assisted and his son accompanied McLeod. After proceeding a mile or two, the negro broke his rope, and then ran for the woods chased by all three of the party. The old man nearly overtook the negro, when the latter turned and dealt a blow so powerful that it broke the arm of his pursuer, but he was soon after caught, beaten, and tied into the buggy again. Before they had proceeded much farther, the negro broke the cords a second time, and had nearly escaped, when McLeod grappled with him, and, the others coming up, a fight ensued, in which the negro was beaten until he fell dead.

The party placed the corpse upright against an oak tree at some distance from the road, and fled. The body was discovered, and on Saturday the murderers were arrested, when the frightened son of the farmer confessed to the circumstances above narrated. The three culprits are now lying in Xenia jail. The excitement in the surrounding country is intense.—Cincinnati Commercial, May 29.

The Perfidy accomplished.—The Nebraska Bill has passed. Our worst forebodings are realized. A meagre majority of thirteen, bought over by promises, or drilled in by party tactics, have decided that Slavery shall henceforth be a national institution, an aggressive system, a permanent and growing interest in our national policy.

What now remains for the friends of freedom and of the Constitution? First, action, prompt, energetic, comprehensive, unanimous action, upon the field where liberty is threatened. Let Kansas be taken at once in the name of freedom by colonies of free, enterprising, religious men, moving by hundreds and by thousands, selecting the best points, and carrying with them the Christian ministry and the free press. For this let money be poured forth like water. Here we may have a Colonization Society that will tell directly against Southern chattelism. Let freemen possess the soil and keep it free. Who will volunteer in this great crusade of Liberty?

Next, there remain to us courage, faith and hope. It is in the power of the North to prevent the admission into the Union of any State that may be erected in these territories. For this there must be united, concentrated action. All party distinctions must be merged in the one great contest for liberty. Is there spirit, patriotism, principle enough at the North for this? Let each man carry this daily in his thoughts and in his prayers. Let him speak of it to his neighbors. Let him prepare to give his testimony efficiently at the polls.

The strife of principles is not ended; it is only begun. Heretofore Liberty has been national, Slavery sectional. Shall this order be reversed? Shall Slavery become a national institution, and Liberty only a sectional privilege, to be more and more restricted as the behests of slavery shall demand? This is the question for every American to ponder. This is the question for the North to settle.—Independent.

Preparations for Carrying on the War.

The misgivings of those who were disposed, like Lord Ellenborough, to fear we might not be going to war in earnest, must have been effectually removed, we should think, by the second supplementary estimates on Friday last. Independently of our two powerful fleets, it is proposed to make a greater addition to our land forces than has ever yet been made in this country in a single year; and with this augmentation of the numerical strength of the army, all other conditions of military efficiency are to correspond. It will also suffice, we should imagine, to dispossess the Czar of his impressions respecting the parsimony of a British parliament, when he observes the manner in which this increase was voted. There was literally not a single voice raised against the outlay; on the contrary, exception was taken in one particular to the smallness of the demand, and it was asked rather querulously whether the mere trifle of £8,250 was all the government meant to lay out in gunpowder—barely allowance enough, as it was observed, "to fire away in one battle."

Our readers will be desirous, perhaps, of seeing the sum and substance of what has been done since the opening of the session in the way of increasing our military force. The original estimates laid before parliament in February carried with them an augmentation of some 10,000 men, at the additional charge of £262,470. This reckoning, however, lasted but a very short time, and at the beginning of March a supplementary army estimate was introduced providing for a further addition of 15,000 men. This made the whole increase, 25,000 men; but on Friday last, Mr. Sidney Herbert moved another supplementary estimate for 15,000 more, so that altogether no fewer than 40,000 soldiers will be added to the army this year, 1854.—If we take into account also the current supplies which ordinary or extraordinary casualties may render necessary, it will be found that 50,000 recruits, at least, will be required in the ensuing year. The additional charge incurred by the vote on Friday evening was £300,000.

Forces of the Allied Powers.

The Paris Moniteur contains the following important announcement in reference to the war, and the intention of the two powers to undertake still more extensive operations against Russia:—

The French and English governments have agreed in the adoption of all the measures of precaution which the present war may render necessary. With this object the Emperor has just decided on the formation of two camps of manœuvering. The first, consisting of 100,000 men, will be established along the shore of the Manche, between Montreuil and St. Omer. The second, consisting of 50,000 men, will be formed near Marseilles. The English government, on its side, are preparing troops and a fleet capable of transporting, in case of necessity, the forces which they may judge necessary either in the Baltic or in the Black Sea.

The Paris correspondent of the Times remarks:

"It is not difficult to guess for what object the camp of 100,000 men is formed, and there is little doubt that the opinion of superior officers of the army with reference to an expedition to the Baltic is well founded. It is said that both Revel and Helsingfors will be occupied, and the shutting up of the Gulf of Finland completed. The object of the establishment of the camp in the south is, to have reinforcements at hand for the army of the East, and very probably to make a descent on the Crimea, while the combined fleets attack Sebastopol. The government naturally keep their plan of operations enveloped in secrecy, but any one who is aware of the determination of both England and France to act with the utmost vigor, and thereby shorten as much as possible the period of the war, will not be much in error in his supposition as to the ultimate destination of these forces.

The establishment of the camp between Montreuil and St. Omer, is thought to be as much directed towards Prussia as towards the Baltic or the Gulf of Finland, and in case Prussia showed symptoms of foul play, it is not improbable that that army, joined by a formidable Belgian contingent, would find its way to the banks of the Rhine. It is whispered that the Emperor reserves to himself the command of this fine army, and that he will establish his camp at Pont-de-Brie, where his uncle had once his head-quarters. He will have his Guards with him. The corps of 50,000 men at Marseilles, will, it is said, be commanded by General Rostolan.

The Baltic Fleet.

The Doncaster Gazette has just received from a gentleman resident in Hull, the following interesting intelligence in connection with the Baltic fleet, and the preparations on the part of the Russian Emperor:—

Hull, Thursday, May 4, 1854.

"I have just seen two gentlemen who arrived here by the "Helen McGregor" steamer from Hamburg. One left Cronstadt and the other St. Petersburgh, about 13 days ago. The one from Cronstadt says that the Emperor is putting large heavy pieces of flat iron down in the river with sharp heavy spikes fastened in the centre in order to pierce our ships as they sail towards the port. The Emperor was down there himself looking over the different forts; and he asked one of his Admirals about the safety of the place from the attack of the combined fleets. The Admiral's reply was, that it was of no use keeping the ships-of-war in the port as they would be sure to be burnt or destroyed. And that it was arranged that they should be brought out and placed on a line across the river or gulf, so as to act as a battery; the admiral adding that they might be the means of doing a great deal of damage to our fleet; if they were shattered to pieces in that position it would not matter. They have 3000 guns in the different batteries there.

Two or three English merchants have built houses in the immediate neighborhood. The Emperor has seized them, turned the owners out, and made use of them for barracks for his troops; 100,000 men of all arms are located there, and about 200,000 more all along the coasts of Finland, some at one place and some at another. At St. Petersburgh there was the greatest consternation, and the English were leaving as fast as they could. One poor fellow who had got his little property converted into cash, was seized and robbed, except a handful of sovereigns, which he snatched and with which by good luck he escaped. It was the opinion of a great many people [English] who could not get away, that in some districts, they might expect to be murdered by the Russians all at once, if things should go adverse to the Emperor's wish. He said they would give all they had to leave the country. Sir Chas. Napier is dreadfully feared by the Emperor and his troops.

"We have letters here from some of the pilots every week. Hull has the honor of piloting Sir Charles's flag ship and that of the French Admiral. I know the men well and we have important news from them all along. The Duke of Wellington's guns are splendid. One of the pilots has returned from ill health, and he gave me a glowing description of her firing all her guns broadside. They can be brought to bear so as to strike a space not larger than a good door or window, and they can direct the shots with so much precision, that a very small boat, placed a mile distant was shattered to pieces by the first shot. It is considered by nautical men that a broadside from the flag-ship was equal to and would do as much damage as all Nelson's fleet. I believe Sweaburg is the first place Sir Charles intends to attend to; but he will do nothing until the French fleet arrives to share in the glory."

Mosque Property.—"A most important change has taken place in the domestic policy of Turkey. The Mosques have absorbed real estate in very much the same way that the Monasteries did in the middle ages. At first, as a natural expression of regard for its Religion, the Turkish Government excused all property vested in religious corporations, from liability to forfeiture or taxation. In process of time, as the despotism of Turkey made the property of all individuals liable, at any contingency, to confiscation, and at all times to taxation, it was found very convenient by individuals to enjoy the immunities possessed by the religious corporations. Hence the practice has long obtained, of vesting the title to property in these religious corporations; reserving the use of it, however, to the original owner, and his heirs. Thus the property was safe, and the State was cheated out of taxes as well as its chance of escheats. The Mosques had at last come to own two-thirds of all the real estate in the Empire, and the burthens of State have been borne by the remaining fraction. The Sultan has now taken a step somewhat similar to the suppression of the Monasteries in England, France, Spain, and many other countries. He has declared this immense property to be the property of the State. This will soon treble the revenue derived from this source. The Sheikh-ul-Islam, and Ulemas and Softas,—the Mahomedan parti pretre—are of course in a tremendous state of excitement and indignation. The privileges granted to the Christians were bad enough, but this is incomparably worse. They say they have gone to war with Russia because the Czar wanted them to tear two leaves out of the Koran. And now they have got Allies who compel them to lock up the whole book from henceforth forever."—N. Y. Church Journal.

An Indian Funeral.

We copy, says the San Francisco Evening Journal, the following recital of an Indian funeral and attendant circumstances, from an interior journal. We recollect nothing more strange and interesting in all our knowledge of the customs and habits of a primitive people:

On last Saturday I was informed by a friend, that he had just found, an Indian dead, near Wilson's Carrall, about a mile West of Columbia. He stated that the night previous, at about dark, he saw the same Indian drunk; it was snowing at the time, he believes that he laid down and froze during the very cold night. With my friend I hurried over to the spot; and before we got half the distance the hills resounded with Indian yells,—denoting death. Approaching near where the body lay, it was a most affecting sight! There were a dozen old Indian squaws, some rolling upon the body on the ground in a most lamentable and agonizing manner, and howling piteously. In about an hour after, they put the body in a blanket, and the squaws gathered around wherever they could get their hands, and, commenced carrying it in the direction of their ranchero, about half a mile distant; but they had not proceeded far before their miseries were increased by the discovery of another of their tribe dead —he having tumbled head-foremost into the T. C. W. Co's ditch, in the neighbourhood of their ranchero. Upon the finding of this body, the male Indians, who with a few exceptions, took no part in the howling over the first body found, now became perfectly frantic, running in all directions over the hills and along the ditch, howling most terribly, and wildly acting, as if looking for more victims of Rum. The terrible noise being heard a great distance, brought miners and the Indians 'from every direction,' armed with their bows and arrows; and upon reaching the crowd of Indians surrounding the bodies, they would madly throw themselves upon the bodies in the wildest anguish, and there remain until pulled off to make room for the next. Every American present was affected, and looked with astonishment at the agonizing grief of the old squaws, hardly able to stand with age, while a continued stream of tears rolled down their withered faces. But now for the most horrible sight I ever witnessed in my life. The Indians had gathered and closely packed about a cord and a half of wood, ready to receive the bodies in accordance with their custom, to be burned to ashes. Just before putting the bodies upon the wood-pile, an old Indian, who knew me, asked me to look at the bodies, and being glad of the chance, I of course consented. He after some effort, got the squaws off the bodies so that I could see their faces, when, in the last one found, I recognized an Indian who had, on three different occasions, told me of the Indians having liquor and got me to go and take it from them, he himself finally falling a victim to it.

At about two o'clock, P. M., they placed the bodies, face downwards, upon the wood-pile, together with everything belonging to them; the pile being about six feet square. The fire being placed in at the four corners, soon began to blaze amid the most pitcous howlings of a hundred Indians; and as the fire grew hot, one of the Indians frequently threw himself in on the bodies, as if willing to burn; and as the fire grew hotter yet, the squaws would have to be pulled off the bodies, then on fire; and several of them had their hair burned off their heads. Each of the squaws had some relic to throw in upon the fire, such as bead worked baskets, fancy things, shawls, and blankets. At 4 P. M. I left, much instructed in savage affection, it being stronger than I ever expect to witness again in my life. I hope never to witness another such horrible sight as an Indian funeral.

Toronto and Hamilton.

We recently paid a flying visit to Hamilton, going up by the morning boat, the 'Passport,' from this city, and expecting to return the same evening. But, to our surprise, we learned that no boat leaves Hamilton for Toronto, in the evening, and so we were compelled to stop over night in the 'ambitious little city.' This arrangement of the Steam Boats, appears to us a very disadvantageous one. Why should two boats leave Hamilton for Toronto, in the morning, and both too, at the same hour, instead of one in the forenoon and one in the afternoon?—We found also, that several parties who were brought down to Hamilton, by Rail, and by various other conveyances, were detained in the City of 'Dust' over night, instead of being permitted to proceed on their journey, as they desired to have done. But, while complaining of the arrangements at Hamilton, in this respect, we should not forget to mention, that in another matter closely connected with the public travel and conveyance, the Hamiltonians possess a decided advantage over the Torontonians. We allude to the Wharfage charges. At Hamilton this abominable nuisance is unknown; while here it is practiced to an extent that is a disgrace to the City. We saw, ourselves, but a day or two ago, an instance of this kind. A poor Scotch Emigrant from Aberdeen, who was proceeding to Paris, U. C., stopped here for a day, to see an acquaintance. His chest was landed, and wharfage impost being demanded, the poor man declared he was going to stop to see acquaintances. He refused to pay the fee charged, and preferred putting his chest in the store room, during the short time he remained. The poor Aberdonian then marched up town, found out his acquaintance, (by the way a Clergyman and a Professor in one of our Colleges,) and left on the following day for Hamilton, to proceed to Paris. The boat on which he passed up, from here to Hamilton, did not stop at the wharf, at which the man stopped the day previous, and the result was, that he had to employ a carter to convey his chest from the one wharf to the other, to pay wharfage at both, and to pay cartage and storage into the bargain. Now if this is not a piece of imposition as great as can well be conceived, then we know not what is. Such conduct as this, renders our good city a by word with all travellers, and ought immediately to be redressed.—Patriot.

A Caution to Dealers in Poor Liquor.—A Stillwater correspondent of the Minnesota Pioneer narrates the following amusing incident which transpired at the Spring term of the Circuit Court of St. Croix County, Wisconsin:

The Judge of the Circuit Court lately in session at Hudson, in Wisconsin, gave a charge to the Jury in a certain action tried before him, which excited considerable merriment in the court-room at the time.

The action was to recover the value of certain liquors sent from below, and consigned for sale to the defendant. Evidence was given on the part of the defendant to show that the brandies, &c. were made of forty cent whiskey, and drugged at that; whereat the Judge appeared quite indignant, and charged the Jury nearly as follows:

"Gentlemen of the Jury: Pure unadulterated liquor is a wholesome and pleasant beverage, and as far as the experience of the court extends, conduces to health and longevity; but a bad article of liquor, gentlemen, or what is worse, a drugged article, cannot be tolerated, and if dealers from below will send up into this beautiful country, so blessed with the smiles of a benign Creator, such a miserable quality of liquors as the proof shows this to be, in this court, gentlemen of the jury, they cannot recover."

Editorial Correspondence.

Kind Readers,—I am pleased and grateful that the Provincial Freeman is afloat. I am glad to have this medium through which to speak to you about many matters, which seem to me to be quite important.

You will, I hope, not be surprised if your enterprise do not meet with very cordial encouragement from some abolitionists. Abolitionists differ and vary in their knowledge and estimate of the negro. Some think we are not to be encouraged to be anything more than a sort of half way set of equals. Others desire and claim for us a full recognition of our equal and inalienable rights. The former class, like the Yankee Quakers, desire that we should be free; but, as to our being regarded and treated as equals, that is another thing. This class are always desirous to keep us with the short frocks of childhood on. They assume the right to dictate to us about all matters; they dislike to see us assume or maintain manly and independent positions; they prefer that we should be a second-rate set of folks, in intellectual matters. A thousand times would they rather see us tied to some newspaper that represents us as being about mid way betwixt slaves and men, than to see us holding up a bold front, with a press worthy of entire freemen. Such will always doubt "whether you are on the right track," or "whether you have just the right man at the helm," or, "whether a movement of the sort is needed at this particular time," or "whether it is best to encourage 'our dear colored brethren' in going too far," &c. &c. Some people doubt and deny the abolitionism of this class. I simply call them a good sort of folk, who are not exactly up to the idea of human equality. They have been so long accustomed to inferior and degraded Blacks, that they scarcely know how to regard us in any other light. Unfortunately, too many of these occupy leading positions. Happily, however, such are scarcer in Canada and in England, than in the United States. Let no man be discouraged or disappointed, if too many of this class in Canada, even, give you the cold shoulder, as it is called.

Many who are not careful to call themselves abolitionists, will treat your enterprise with much more practical, tangible favor.

Again, I beg you not to lose heart, if many of our own people act as nearly as possible like enemies. Some of them always so treat all efforts of such character. Then, be the friends of the paper black or white, professed abolitionists or not, welcome them, and regard and treat every man less according to what he appears and professes to be, than what he is, as declared by his actions.

In future letters, I shall take great pleasure in giving you somewhat detailed accounts of my sojourn in England. Of course you will not expect me to write as if I had nothing else to do—were independent and at leisure. I never was busier. My private and professional engagements were never more numerous; my own personal business never more embarrassed nor perplexing. I never had a less dim and remote prospect of spending my days at home, in the midst of my family, like other men, than I have now. And, may I add, that I never felt more devoted to the welfare of my people, or more hopeful of the ultimate triumph of our cause.

I am quite hopeless as to the peaceable abolition of American slavery, by moral means only. I have some ideas about commercial and agricultural opposition to the "matchlessly horrible Bastile," which I shall unfold to you before any of us shall be much older. But as for moral force, repentance, religion, I must first see some faint signs that the initial ideas of elementary religion, or, indeed, of common honesty, have any control over that people, before I can believe that a measure so just towards the oppressed, shall find any degree of favor among the great majority of them. They trample under foot every one of their avowed principles. They forswear every article in their Puritan creed; they belie their every profession, whether of morals, politics or religion. They have, now, no conscience, no character, no manhood. "That's too severe," says One. Wait, Mr. One. I write with the creed of the Puritans, the Bible of all Christians, the Declaration of Independence, and the Federal Constitution before me, on the one hand; and the Fugitive Slave Law and the Nebraska Bill, on the other. I write in view of the fact that one man of six, in that country, with the full and free consent, not only, but by the direct fiat of 99-100ths of the remaining five sixths, are slaves. I was born a slave; and the infernal institution by which my fathers were, and my brothers are, crushed and imbruted, thrives under the express sanction of the majority of the leading religionists of the Northern States.

"But Uncle Tom is read now, Mr. W." Yes; and so is the Bible; and one is treated as much as a piece of fiction as the other.

"You forget, that great opposition is manifested against the Nebraska Bill." So there was against the annexation of Texas, up to the time it was annexed!

"But the people are fully roused now." So they were in 1848. Where have they been ever since?

"Yet there is a strong secession feeling at the present time." It was stronger in 1832, for then it did something. How long did it last?

"Wise men do not believe the Nebraska Bill will pass." So wise men did not believe about the passage of the Fugitive Slave Law.

"But I read in anti-slavery newspapers, that our 'cause never appeared so auspicious as at this moment.'" I have read that annually for twenty years; in the mean time, Arkansas, Florida and Texas have been added to the number of Slave States; and California made about half and half; and the Douglas-Nebraska plot threatens to be successful; the Fugitive Slave Law and its horrible execution, being a part of the National, and the new constitution of Indiana, and the Free Negro enslaving law of Illinois, parts of State Legislative history. Indeed, the American States grow worse, instead of better, daily, hourly, constantly.

Let us, however, do what we can, by the elevation, improvement and evangelization of the native or adopted British Negro; by adding our quota to the swelling tide of universal public sentiment against slavery; by holding up Yankee character in the light of its facts; to hasten the day when, peacefully, if possible, but if not peacefully, by what cause or causes soever, American Slavery shall be overthrown, and then the despotism of no country can long survive.

Allow me to ask your attention to some business matters. In the British Empire, we have not to devise means, and adopt measures to be free or to regain lost or withholden rights. What we need now to learn, is how to use our liberty, and to make it serviceable to the crushed millions of our native land. My own mind is, that the happiest way in which we can do both of these, is to seize every means and opportunity for our individual advancement in all things.—One of these advantages is, the tillage of the soil. I mean profitable, paying tillage. Let every man among us buy land. And let it be bought and tilled, with the distinct understanding, that there is a most abundant two-fold market for everything, almost, that we can raise in Canada. Wheat, flax, pork, &c., will always command a good price in England, and in the British West Indies.—Besides, in the latter we can find for what we send, an abundance of tropical productions to exchange. Then, too, by machinery, which I shall hereafter describe, a most profitable business can be done in the refining of sugar, which can be bought in Jamaica, unfit for our market, but capable of being so refined as to pay well for importation and refining. Thus the free in Canada can trade with the free of the West Indies, both being profited, and both contributing to the elevation of our British American colonies, into successful competition with the North and South of the United States. Let us, then, as speedily as possible, become producers and traders in wheat, flour, pork, fruit and lumber of Canada, and cotton, sugar, tobacco, coffee, &c., of our British tropical Islands. Thus shall we elevate ourselves, and serve the cause. But more of this hereafter.

Accident.—A serious accident occurred in this city recently, on Adelaide street. The boiler in Parkes' Foundry exploded. One man, a wood turner, had his skull fractured.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

Dear Sir:—Your issue of Saturday last, which I have only received this evening, contains an article, headed, "A Bazaar in Toronto for "Frederick Douglass' Paper," which, for the sake of friends at a distance, may require a word or two in reply.

In the first place, the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada have no connection in any way with the contemplated bazaar. The announcement referred to, in the Freeman, arose from the writer in Frederick Douglass' Paper confounding the "Ladies' Association for the relief of Colored Fugitives," with the Anti-Slavery Society,—an error which is very frequently committed.

I understand that the ladies of that Society have agreed to aid in forwarding the interests of a paper which they consider to be doing much for the cause of the slave, by encouraging, and I dare say, visiting the bazaar.

I doubt not that they would be equally ready to aid in any movement made in behalf of the Provincial Freeman, if the friends of that hitherto well-conducted paper should condescend to make application.

I pass over the unbecoming manner in which you speak of the Anti-Slavery Society, and of Lewis Tappan, Esq., whom you are pleased to call the "great embodiment of Anti-Slavery tactics for the States and the Canadas," and beg to inform you that your statement in regard to Mr. Ward's having fallen into disgrace with Lewis Tappan, Esq., and "the right wing of the Toronto Society," is simply untrue. Mr. Ward never stood higher in the estimation of both parties, than he does at present; and will not, I think, be greatly obliged to those who seek to elevate him with a few at the expense of truth.

I cannot conclude without expressing my regret that the writer of the article alluded to, who, if I am not mistaken, is a member of the Committee of the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, should have indulged in such depreciatory remarks respecting those whom he knows to be friendly to the cause he has at heart, or have evidenced anything like feelings of envy at the success of a brother.—Such a spirit is not one likely to conciliate, or to gain that respect and confidence, to which the colored man is equally entitled with his white brother: and which, amongst Britons, he will ever ultimately gain, when he is really worthy of them.

Very truly yours,

Thomas Henning,
Sec. of the A. S. Society of Canada.

Toronto, 6th June, 1854.

REMARKS.

We are charged in the above, direct, with falsehood, envy, self-importance and what not; and indirectly, with want of fealty to Lewis Tappan and the Toronto Society; and, to crown all, another, and an innocent person, has been selected as the scape-goat, to carry away our sins—having, meantime, the assurance of a Briton, that should he and his people behave properly, their superiors will consider the propriety of giving them their due. Cool! We have spoken truth, and our readers will not lose sight of the fact, that our most significant assertions are silently admitted.

Thomas Henning, whom we suppose to be talking for himself, and not for the Toronto Society, and who knows more about the arrangements, it seems, than those who made them, is particularly solicitous about "friends at a distance." Is it, then, the old story of what people abroad, will think and say of us, and not how do we deport at home? But, if we admit what Mr. H. would have us believe—that he is talking for two societies, we must give him credit for his address in conducting their case; so far, we think, he is certainly well posted in the style of remark most suitable for, and to be used when talking to negroes, by "friends" even; and did he not take a measure of satisfaction at the thought himself, he would hardly, in this day, and with his evident love of popularity, venture to risk his anti-slavery reputation, by perpetrating the foregoing.

The ladies, he "understands, have agreed to aid Frederick Douglass' Paper, &c.," and he doubts not that they would aid the Freeman, if the friends of the same "should condescend to make application."

How vividly we are reminded of the negro-hater by that paragraph! Slaveholders say all negroes are alike. Abolitionists of the Tappan school, would have the colored people of Canada and the United States, bear in mind, that they would have them lose sight of the difference of their respective positions, as disfranchised citizens of a slaveholding republic, and adopted members of the freest and best government on earth—would subject them to the same conditions, marshal them under the lead of a pet colored brother or two of their choosing, now living in the States—set them up as objects for the world to pity, and so be dragged down with the victims of Yankee oppression, or be swallowed up in the leaders. But the author of the letter, and such friends, committed two grave mistakes just here. Colored Canadians will not submit to leadership from any colored man in the States, whether chosen by the Toronto Societies, at the dictation of Mr. Tappan, or by voluntary offer on his or their own part; nor will the friends of the Provincial Freeman, apply for aid solicited for, and belonging to newly arrived fugitives. The paper must cease to exist before they will consent to an imputation of taking such funds; and, though they do desire the countenance of all good people, and despise none, (as Mr. Henning would imply), they will rely upon the sympathy of those not connected, officially, or otherwise, with the Abolition Society proper, before they will beg from those who make haste to invoke opposition to the Freeman, at the same time that they recommend to the people here, a paper opposed to Canada and the right of colored men to settle herein.

But we have spoken unbecomingly of Lewis Tappan, Esq., and have misrepresented their united feelings towards Mr. Ward. We have not!—and if Mr. Henning knows anything about it, he knows we have spoken truth.

It is easier, however, for Mr. Henning to make assertions, than to prove them. No one man in Toronto, nor out of it, can rightly charge us with speaking unbecomingly in this case, either of Mr. Tappan, or of the Society. Lewis Tappan is not the god that we worship,—neither are we to lose sight of the principles and actions of a portion of the Toronto Society, in a goose-like admiration of their social position.

"Mr. Ward never stood higher." How high did he stand with them, when he stood lower than now? We would not believe that, if we said it ourselves! Had Mr. Henning showed equal readiness to sustain the agent of the Toronto Society, in his natural right to liberty of speech, against the published mandate of Lewis Tappan, (who, by the way, is made equal to the entire Society here) and by implication, lord over all, we might be disposed to doubt facts in our possession.—The thought respecting Mr. Ward's obligations to us is gratuitous. That gentleman has position; he has not to be elevated by us,—was not by Mr. Tappan, nor the big half of the Society here, including Mr. Henning. He has lived long enough, probably, to estimate those aright who fear to offend the many.

But why should Mr. Henning identify us with the only colored member of the Committee? Are not not the colored people to have one representative in the business department of the Society, since Mr. Ward resigned the agency? Has our unfortunate article furnished the opportunity to ostracise, probably, the most active member of the Committee.

Why not call the gentleman's name out in meeting, Mr. Henning? How can a colored person speak of the approaching bazaar becomingly, without feeling "envy at the success of a brother?" And how dare he do it any how?

The last question staggers us. Mr. Henning tells the man he has conjured up, what Britons will let him have some day.

On what do his Britons "feed?" has he yet to learn that colored men are men, and that they will not ask respect from Britons who give such clear evidence of prejudice as himself, when they are worthy? No, no, Mr. Henning, you are as much mistaken there, as you are about the writer of that bazaar notice. You have been wasting precious time and much "powder," not upon a brother Committee member, who never gave you the slightest occasion—your equal in every way—but upon one who would not be admitted to a seat in your committee. *

Burns sent Back.

The brave people of Boston have permitted Burns to be carried back before their eyes, submitting themselves the while to abuse and maltreatment from the U. S. troops.

These are the people who prate so much about liberty, justice and bravery. Henceforth let them keep silence.

It was thought by some that the abolitionists of New England would not submit to such an outrage, but we were not of the number. We have known of them too long.—They might make a stir, were their own personal liberty about to be wrested from them; they talk flippantly enough about what "our fathers" did, &c., but their counsel to the colored man, is, "bear it patiently." They are not so ready to help him to his liberty, but rather encourage his capture, by advising him to remain where he is, knowing well that were he to leave their skirts he would add to the defence of this country, something they are unfavorable to. *

☞ The readers of the Freeman will be pleased to see the letter from the Editor, Mr. Ward; it will be taken by them, we trust, as evidence of what he will do in the future for the paper.

The non-appearance of articles from him heretofore, has been subject of remarks, no way favorable to those connected with the Freeman, who have said all along that he would write. This letter will put them at ease on that point.

Our corresponding Editor, Mr. McArthur, writes from Pictou, Nova Scotia, that he will furnish his quota also. *

☞ A communication which was received from Amherstburg, some time since, but unavoidedly delayed, will appear next week; which we assure, gentlemen, will be the earliest period possible. We wish to see justice done to all parties. *

Another step in the subjugation of the North is about being taken in this City, in which the State of Virginia appears as the complainant. The reader will recollect the discharge by habeas corpus of the Lemmon slaves, who were proved to have been voluntarily brought by their owner into this State. The slaves were subsequently freed by purchase. The State of Virginia now take, offense at the law of the State of New York which declares that slaves brought into our jurisdiction voluntarily shall be free, and, having got an appeal from the action of Judge Paine, sends up her Attorney-General to endeavor to overthrow the local law of this State and extend the local law of Virginia over us. It is hard to say what the slave power will not do; but we are tolerably confident that this attempt to legalize slaveholding in the Empire State will fail. The modest demand of Virginia is substantially that slaveholders may bring their slaves to New York, go to Saratoga with them, and turn white men of the State into a committee to watch them, and see that they do not run away from their masters. This is one of the first steps towards that glorious consummation looked for by Toombs, when he shall triumphantly call the roll of his slaves on Bunker Hill.—N. Y. Tribune.

They will be sure to get what they claim. The present race of Northern cowards are hopeless for any purpose but talk. Southerners know it and calculate accordingly. *

For the Provincial Freeman.

The Rev. Dr. Pennington's Brother and two Nephews returned to Slavery from the City of New York.

Philadelphia, May 28, 1854.

The hearts of the friends of the fugitive probably have never been more suddenly and painfully horrified at hearing of the arrest of any unfortunate victim of the Fugitive Slave Law, than they have within the last two days, on hearing of the arrest and return of the brother and two nephews of the distinguished Dr. J. W. C. Pennington, of New York City.

The arrest was made last Friday morning, in the most pirate-like manner. Indeed, it seems no more than truth to state that in point of piracy and heinousness, the conduct of the U. S. Commissioner and U. S. Marshal may justly be compared with those whose office it was to perform the horrid deeds of the Inquisition. So private were the movements of the Commissioner and Marshal, that they actually allowed no time or chance for the friends of the fugitive to procure a hearing even after the manner of the infamous Fugitive law—to say nothing of an impartial trial. But the counsellors, Judge Jay and his colleague, with other friends, when inquiring to see the prisoners and to know their whereabouts, were lyingly told by the Commissioner and the Marshal, that they wanted no counsel—that they had owned their master, and had been given up and gone. And it was only by the most diligent search that the horror-stricken fugitives were found to be secreted in a room in the very building then occupied by the Commissioner, &c. But before a Habeas Corpus could be procured and served on the slave-hunters, they were gone, having about ten minutes start of the friends with the warrant, which gave them sufficient time to get out of the State.

Only think! This day week, Stephen and his two sons, after having duly counted the cost of their freedom, and feeling assured that it could only be won by the most brave and earnest effort in seeking it by flight, started, determined to rest not until the victory was theirs. After a successful journey of over one hundred and fifty miles, which they had travelled in twenty-five hours from the time they first set out, they found themselves in the hands of the Underground Committee, who heard with the deepest interest and sympathy their tale of slavery and great anxiety for freedom. The father, being intelligent (reads well) was able to give a very straight and connected account of his life of slavery, and also the state of anxiety which at present prevails in the breast of the slave, to obtain his freedom. Probably none but those who saw and conversed with them, can form any idea of how intelligent and interesting they were—of the high and noble value they had set upon their liberty; and especially of the source of joy and gratitude they manifested in contemplating their success thus far, and their flattering prospects, which seemed to warrant them that henceforth they should be the owners of themselves, instead of the tyrants from whom they had fled. In short, their appearance forcibly impressed those who saw them, that they had been designed to fill more than ordinary stations. But alas! how soon and terribly were their hopes, as well as those of their friends, dashed in ruins, and the yoke again placed upon their defenceless necks by their merciless oppressors.

The Committee, into whose hands they fell, before reaching New York, spared no pains to render their success sure; which resulted in their landing safely in that city—the father twenty-five hours, and the sons nineteen before they were arrested—sufficient time, it would seem, for their friends to have placed them beyond the reach of their infernal pursuers, if their vigilance had been as duly aroused as were their owners. It is true that it is much easier now to see wherein steps might have been taken to have secured their freedom, than it was before the dreadful outrage was perpetrated; and under the circumstances, I suppose we can do no better than to regret that the least oversight was permitted to stand in the way of their safety.

It is the opinion of some here, as well as in New York, that the hunters were aided or instructed in this city by a "stool pigeon" or traitor; and to this their success in so readily finding their prey may be attributable. That there are those among us who for a few paltry dollars would be base enough to betray a fellow-man, there can be no doubt. Indeed, the Committee have always felt it to be their duty to be exceedingly cautious on all occasions, and especially of certain characters who are known not to be trustworthy; but whether the opinion that a traitor acted as a tool of the hunters, be correct or not, one thing is certain—it must be quite obvious to all reflecting minds now, that it was no more than might have been expected on the part of the owners, who knew of the Dr.'s whereabouts, that his relatives would very naturally go to him; hence the secret of their being traced to New York.

But sad and unfortunate as this affair has been, it will not stop the Underground. It will increase its success. It will doubtless make many friends for the slave and the fugitive. Also, I am not without the hope that Dr. P.'s brother and nephews will yet be free.

The riot, growing out of the arrest of Burns, a fugitive, in Boston, will make thousands of abolitionists, and will teach slaveholders and the South generally a lesson which will be very unpalatable to them, especially just now, while they are rejoicing over the passage of the Nebraska bill, &c. Really the signs of the times do seem to indicate, at last, that the North begins to see and feel the folly of her past conduct, in the innumerable concessions made to the South, and that she will now take a defensive position. Some of the leading Whig papers, which have, until the present, advocated the compromises, &c., and have heretofore lavished any amount of abuse upon abolitionists, for what they were pleased to consider as fanatical and treasonable doctrines, are to-day about as fanatical and treasonable as the most anti-slavery paper to be found. And who knows what may grow out of the beginning in Boston? A civil war or a dissolution of the Union may be upon us ere we realize it. For my own part it is matter of unspeakable gratification to my own mind to see the elements in motion. One poor servant of Uncle Sam and the abominable Fugitive Slave Law, who was made a Deputy Marshal of the U. S., for the occasion, was shot dead in the riot in Boston, last Friday night. How many more may meet with a similar visitation yet remains to be seen. The telegraph this afternoon holds out very sanguinary prospects.

Your readers like the Provincial Freeman very much; but some would like to hear a little more on the subject of the quality and price of lands, the various productions of the soil, &c. &c. On those subjects you are both interested and posted, and I doubt not you will gladly furnish your readers, at an early day, with an occasional editorial on the subject alluded to.

Yours truly, W. S.

Railway Disasters.

Accident on the G. W. Railway.—Last night an accident occurred on the evening train due at Windsor, by the breaking of the rim of one of the wheels of the hindermost passenger car, a short distance from Chatham. The car was overturned, and disconected, but without any one in it being hurt, except by a few bruises, none of which were severe.—Free Democrat.

Accident on the G. W. Railway.—We regret to announce the accidental death of William Dixon Worthington, one of the conductors on the express train, Great Western Railroad. The melancholy event took place on Thursday last, the 1st inst. The deceased thought there was something wrong with the wheels of one of the cars, and stepped down to the bottom step of the platform, and holding on to one of the iron braces, extended his body outward so as to get a full view of the train. While in this position his head came in contact with a post of one of the cattle guards, causing instant death. The accident took place about 16 miles east of Chatham; the body was brought to London for interment. Worthington was an honorable, intelligent, amiable young man, highly esteemed by his acquaintances; was son of Thomas Worthington, Esq., of the customs department, and nephew of Thomas C. Dixon, M. P. P., and was in the 23d year of his age. Too much caution cannot be used, by all connected with the running of cars, or on railways, and we do hope, that the lamentable accidents of the past, will have the effect of inducing the utmost caution for the future.—Prototype.

Disaster on the G. W. Railroad.—An emigrant train on the great Western Railway started from Hamilton yesterday with a large number of Norwegian emigrants, whose interpreter said they wanted to come through to Windsor. In stopping at one of the stations it was found out that a good number of them intended to stop at London, but as the train had passed that point, the conductor carried them to Chatham, and then left them.

At Chatham they were put on board a freight and a second class, and started for London, but after proceeding a part of the way, the engine ran over a cow, which threw the train off the track, and smashing the engine and car, killing seven persons instantly and wounding a number of others severely, one has since died, making the number of dead eight. The further particulars we have as yet been unable to learn, but those are bad enough. The night was not a very clear one after the moon set, and though the engine was supplied with a cow-catcher, the animal got under it by some means other.—Free Democrat.

☞ It is stated that the expenses attending the rendition of the Fugitive, Burns, will stand between $30,000 and $50,000. In connection with this case, we notice that a movement is on foot in Cambridge, among the law students, to refuse further attendance upon Commissioner Loring's Lectures at the Law School.—Globe.

Reciprocity.—A private despatch from Montreal, just received by telegraph, informs us that Mr. Hincks had just returned from Washington, and that the Reciprocity papers had been signed.—Colonist.

Canada Coming?

A SONNET.

Let her not come! Let no more Northern soil
Grow black where stripes and scars make Nature groan!
Let her not stain the snows of that high zone
With blood and sweat wrung from the bondman's toil.

Rather, we go to her! There, no dark "spoil,"
Torn from poor Afric, rills the air with moan!
There, Freedom claims ONE land to call her own,
When driven from Bunker Hill and Faneuil Hall.

Yet, let her come! Come as the North should come—
Bearding the Southern lion in his lair!
A Goth—a Vandal—deaf to every prayer—
Till not one slave shall pine 'neath heaven's blue dome.
There's still one spot where man can yet be man:
Catch Canada at slave-catching if you can!

May 28, 1854. PLYMOUTH ROCK.

The Army and Navy.

Lord John Russell has announced the intention of the Ministry to amend the Militia Acts. Sir James Graham has given notice of a bill for the better encouragement of our sailors, and more effectual manning of the navy in time of war.

It does not follow from either of these propositions that will be submitted to parliament without delay, that any actual increase is about to be asked for the regular numbers of the regular forces by sea and land, beyond the additions that have been already voted during the last and the present session of parliament. It it is obvious, however, that both of the intended movements are dictated by the responsibilities of actual war. In the session of 1853 the artillery force demanded our first attention, and was increased by 2,000 men and 3,000 horse. Seven thousand additional sailors were voted, and 3,000 marines. These were absorbed in the Black Sea Fleet, in addition to the usual Mediterranean complement. 10,000 were taken for the army, and this power was made available in enabling us to provide from home, and from the Mediterrannean garrisons and West India reliefs, the efficient force of twenty-five thousand infantry, two thousand horse, and three thousand artillery, sappers, and engineers, &c., which make up our most effective first contingent to the army of the East. At the commencement of the present session 10,000 men were added to the marine forces, and 10,000 to the land army. Later in the session a vote was taken for 15,000 more soldiers. All these, together, make an addition of 35,000 men to the army; to which, if we add, 5,000 spared from Canada and the West Indies, and 5,000 from Ireland, will give a reinforcement of 35,000 troops of the line, to supply the place of the 25,000 more that may be wanted before long. There are already two fleets in the Black Sea and the Baltic, capable of any achievement in war. Two more ships of the line, the Powerful and Waterloo, were commissioned on Monday, and several small steamers are put into active service every week, almost every day. But for them it is not to be expected that parliament will be required to vote more men than those already provided for the service of the year, and the whole of which, we believe, have not been yet obtained. The propositions of Sir James Graham will, therefore, if we are rightly informed, resolve themselves into the mode of securing, and of fairly rewarding the services of all the sailors who are, or shall be required for the purposes of war. The numbers authorized to be taken up are provided for in the ordinary and extraordinary naval estimates for the year.—London Observer.

Arrival of the Niagara.

Halifax June 9.

Breadstuffs—Dennistoun & Co. say, that in the early part of the week the market was tolerably active, but at the close, prices fell off 1s. Ohio 40s a 42s. Wheat had been in fair demand through the week; a slight decline from the rates current; 12s 9d per 70lbs. The following is Lempriere, Mulligan & Co's quotations: Western Canal flour 38s; Ohio 39s; white and yellow corn 41s.

Halifax, June 6th, 1854.

The Niagara, from Liverpool, Saturday 27th, arrived here at an early hour. No news from the seat of war of a decisive character. Silistria was hard pressed by the Russians at the latest accounts. Advices from Venice state that negotiations looking to an adjustment of the present difficulties between Russia and Turkey, had been again offered.

Brown, Shipley & Co. quote a decline in cotton during the week, of ⅛ a ¼ for ordinary, middling and lower grades; at the close a speculative feeling was prevalent, but few holders pressing. Sales 40,000 bales, of which speculators take 2,000, and exporters 5,000

Corn—In early part of the week higher prices were paid, though market remained firm, 49s for white, 44s for mixed and yellow.

The following is Gardner & Co's report:

Provisions—Beef firm with fair demand.—Pork firm with probability of advance.—Lard has declined.

London money market exhibits increased stringency. Consols had closed 89¾ a 89¾.

Late advices from India have an unfavorable effect on Manchester Markets, which have considerably declined.

Arrival of the "Arctic."

The "Arctic" reached her dock at 2 o'clock. It is stated that the French Army in Turkey has been augmented to 170,000 men.

The Protocol has been signed by the Representatives of the four powers, asserting their intention to maintain the integrity of Turkey.

Austria and Prussia demand the evacuation of Turkish territory.

The Russians were endeavouring to cut off communications between Varna and Silistria. The Arctic brings dates to the 28th, one day later than the Niagara. The combined fleets were still before Sabastopol.

The Boston Fugitive Slave Case.

Boston, June 3.

Richard H. Dana, one of the counsel for Anthony Burns, was knocked down in the street last night with a slung shot and badly hurt

The examination of the eleven persons arrested for riot and the murder of Batchelder, on Friday night of last week, is going on in the police court to-day. A large crowd is in attendance, and numerous witnesses are being called.

The church bells at Manchester were tolled for an hour, yesterday, on the receipt of the announcement that Burns was to go back to slavery.

About one o'clock this morning three images were found suspended to the flag-staff on the Common, having the following names attached:

1st. "Marshal Freeman, Chief of the Boston ruffians, slaveholders and bloodhounds."

2d. "Benjamin F. Hallet, U. S. District Attorney, and Attorney General to the Prince of Darkness."

3d. "Commissioner Loring, the Ten Dollars Jeffries of 1854."

The excitement relative to the slave case has almost died away

Some of the officers who had charge of the slave Burns have returned to this city. They report that they left the fugitive on board the revenue cutter Morris, at half-past six last evening, twenty miles from Boston.

Burns is in charge of U. S. Deputy Marshal John H. Riley, and four assistants.

The U. S. artillery troops were landed at Fort Independence going down, and the U. S. Marines at the navy yard at Charlestown, by the steamer on returning. Col. Suttle and Mr. Brent are on board the cutter

Union of the British Colonies.—Hazard's Gazette, published at Charlestown, Prince Edward's Island, has this paragraph:

The Union of the Provinces.—The rumor gains ground from private letters that Lord Elgin's principal object in returning to resume the government, is to effect a union of the North American Colonies; and that having crowned his long and successful career in Canada with that important act, he will be appointed Governor General of India

The Pay.—The bribes are being seen and the receivers of them known at Washington. Walbridge is to control the Consulship to Honolulu; Ingersoll to go to Turin or Stockholm; M'Donald, a custom house berth; Old's son has received a place and the traitor is reported have said, "that he was not such a———— fool as to be satisfied with a territorial Governorship." Houston of Alabama is already helped; Florence is sick; Lilly and Vail are to be provided for, &c, &c. Has the Nebraska bill passed without bribing? Did the Executive not use the bribes? —Pittsburg Dispatch.

☞ The Buffalo Democracy says: Her Gracious Majesty, Queen Victoria, as she is styled by her loyal subjects, has been pleased to send an autograph letter and $100 to a fugitive slave in the employ of Clark & Pond, millers, at Fulton, N. Y., in return for a barrel of specimen flour sent her by the negro

☞ The captain of a merchant vessel unloaded in Turkey, feared to leave a part of his cargo exposed during the night. "It will not rain," said a Mussulman. "But somebody may steal them," replied the captain. Oh, never fear," rejoined the Turk, "there is not a christian within seven miles."

☞ Archbishop Bedini recently gave a sumptuous entertainment, in Rome, in honor of ex-President Van Buren, who, however, did not attend.—Among the Americans present were Bishop Fitzpatrick, of Boston, and ex-Bishop Ives.

☞ By telegraph from Washington, we learn that Augustus Pattan, President of the South Carolina Senate, died a day or two since.

Land Sales.

A correspondent inquires concerning lands. In reply we give the following abstract of lands now for sale:

Mr. Edward Emery, of London, C. W., advertises an important sale of Town lots, to take place on the 19th day of June. Terms of payment, one-eighth down, or by notes at three or six months, if required; the balance in ten equal annual payments, with interest.

F. B. Beddome offers for sale a valuable farm also 2½ miles from London, parts of Lot No. 1, 2d Concession of Lobo; also wild lands, lot 3, 1st concession, four miles from the town.

Mr. H. B. Hope, Toronto, offers 400 acres in North Gwilliambury, 50 acres in North Orillia, 100 in Tay, 100 in Medonte.

S. M. Sandford offers lot 19, 3d Concession Township of Vespra, containing 190 acres—40 cleared, within 3 miles of Barrie. East half lot 9, 13th Concession, Innisfield, near Barrie Depot Northern railroad. South half No. 15 7th Concession, Nottawasaga, 20 acres cleared.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti-Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage.

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon raise, or any other of the one great human family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. Ward, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada, and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony,—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B Gribble, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. Thomas James, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statements of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, respecting the condition of the Fugitive Slaves on their arrival in Canada, and publishing their escape from the United States, and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, at once and temporary assistance, this Meeting do highly approves of the object of the mission and wishes itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number:

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established agents not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us authorizing them in our name to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto LYMAN BROTHERS, & CO are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO

The Old Grist Mill.

BY H. STODDARD

The grist mill stands beside the stream,
With leaning roof and leaning wall
Beyond that when the winds are wild,
The miller trembles lest it fall.
But moss and ivy, never sere
Renew it ever from year to year.

The dam is steep, and weeded green;
The gates are raised, the waters pour,
And tread the old wheel's slippery steps.
The lowest round for evermore,
Methinks they have a sound of rest,
Because they cannot climb up higher.

From morn till night in autumn time
When yellow harvests load the plains,
I love the farmers to the mill,
With back and wide-loaded wains;
Bring heap of golden grain,
And fill and fill and fill again.

[illegible] and clean,
[illegible] under,
[illegible] round
[illegible] floor,
[illegible] down the spout
[illegible] comes pouring in

[illegible] the window'd elan
[illegible] on the sultry breeze
[illegible] a setting swarm
[illegible] golden, winged and beaked bees,—
[illegible] at that blacksmith's door
[illegible] blows and forges roar.

O my pleasant, quaint old mill!
Reminds me of my early prime;
Changed since then, but not so much
As time by decay at time,
Which is also passed from year to year,
Of hope and fear and love and fear.

[illegible] the stream of life,
[illegible] garners sweeps along,
[illegible] flood gates of my heart
[illegible] wheels of song,
[illegible] ripened harvest brought
[illegible] golden field of thought.

One of our Legal Fictions.

MRS. NORTON.

The prayers were made, the benediction given, the bells rang out their lusty epithalamium, and by the law of the church and the [illegible] land, Charlotte and Robert Desborough were henceforth one—one in interest, one in life. No chill rights or selfish individuality to sow disunion between them; no unnatural laws to weaken her devotion by offering a traitorous asylum against him; but, united by bonds none could break—their two lives wedded together, one and indivisible for ever—they set their names to that form of marriage, which so many have signed in hope, to read over for a long lifetime of bitterness and despair. Yet what can be more beautiful than the idea of an English marriage? This strict union of interests—although it does mean the absorption of the woman's whole life in that of the man's—although it does mean the entire annihilation of all her rights, individuality, legal existence, and his sole recognition by the law—yet how beautiful it is in the ideal! She, as the weaker, lying safe in the shadow of his strength, upheld by his hand, cherished by his love, losing herself, in the large being of her husband: while he, in the vanguard of life, protects her from all evil, and shields her against danger, and takes on himself the strife and the weary toil, the danger and the struggle. What a delightful picture of unselfishness and chivalry, of devotedness, and manly protection; and what sacrilege to erase so much poetry from the dry code of our laws!

Like all newly-married women, she would have looked with horror on any proposition or the revision of the legal poem. Liberty would have been desolation to her, and the protection of the laws she would have repudiated as implying a doubt of her husband's faith. She had been taught to believe in men, and to honor them; and she did not wish to unlearn her lesson. The profound conviction of their superiority formed one of the cardinal points of her social creed; and young hearts are not eager to escape from their anchorage of trust. She was a willing slave because she was a faithful worshipper; and it seemed to her but fit, and right, and natural, that the lower should be subservient to the will of the higher. For the first few weeks all went according to the brightness of belief. The newly-bound epic was [illegible] in letters of gold and blazoned in the [illegible] colors of youth, and hope, and love; and believed the unread leaves would [illegible] the story of those already turned and that the glories of the future would [illegible] the glories of the past. She believed as others, ardent and loving, have believed; and she awoke like them, when the [illegible] fruit of knowledge was between her [illegible] the dead leaves of her young hopes [illegible] the ground at her feet.

[illegible] gold of the blazoned book was soon [illegible]. Its turned leaves told of love, [illegible]; but of a love, whose passion, [illegible] was burned out, left no friendship or [illegible] sympathy to keep alive the pale [illegible]. On the contrary, quarrels soon took the place of fading caresses, and bitter words [illegible] the lost sounds of fond phrases; no [illegible] union wove fresh ties in place of [illegible] banes that burnt like flax in their [illegible] fire; but, with the honey-moon died out [illegible] affection which ought to have lived through [illegible] probation of time, suffering, and distress. [illegible] been a love-match, but it was an ill-assorted match as well; and want of sympathy soon deepened into bitterness, and thence fell backward into hatred and disgust. The husband was a man of violent temper, and had supreme views on marital privileges. His wife, young, impassioned, beautiful and clever, was none the less a chattel; and he treated her as such. By bitter personal experience, he taught her that the law which gave him all but uncontrolled power over her as his property, was not always the duty of the strong to protect the weak, but might sometimes—even in the hands of English gentlemen—be translated into the right of the tyrant to oppress the helpless. From high words the transition to rough deeds was easy and natural. Matters grew gradually worse; quarrels became more bitter and more frequent, and personal violences increased. More than once, she was in mortal fear, with marks of fingers on her throat, and cuts and bruises on her head; more than once relations interposed to save her from further violence. In these quarrels perhaps she was not wholly blameless. The rash passion of a high-spirited girl was not the temper best suited to such a husband's wife. Less imaginative and less feeling, she might have borne the peculiar mode of showing displeasure to which he resorted; and had she been of a lower organization, she might have gained more power over a man who did not appreciate her intellect, or the beauty of her rich nature. As it was—he, too violent to control his temper on the one side: she, too rash and eager to conceal her pain and disgust on the other—their unhappiness became public, and by its very publicity seemed to gain in strength. Friends interfered, many thronging about her; some, to advise patience; some, resolution; some, to appeal to her wifely love, and others to her woman's dignity; and she, halting between the two, now consented to endure, and now resolved to resist. So, things went on in a sad unhinged manner; outbreaks continually occurring, followed by promises of reformation and renewed acts of forgiveness; but no solid peace establishment, and no real wish to amend. Once she left the house, after a long and angry scene, during which he struck her, and that with no gentle hand either; and she would not return until heart-broken petitions and solemn engagements touched her woman's pity, and changed her anger into sorrow. She thought, too, of her own misdeeds; magnified her own petty tempers and girlish impertinences which had been punished so severely; took herself to task, while the tears streamed from her dark eyes and steeped the black hair hanging on her neck, until at last imagination and repentance weighed down the balance of evil on her own side. And then he was her husband!—the father of her children, and once her lover so beloved! We all have faults, and we all need pardon, she thought; and so she forgave him, as she had done before, and returned submissively to his house. This was what the Ecclesiastical law calls condonation. And by this act of love and mercy, she deprived herself of even the small amount of protection afforded by the law to English wives of the nineteenth century.

They had now three children who made up the sole summertime of her heart. Only those who know what sunshine the love of young and innocent children creates in the misty darkness of an unhappy life, can appreciate her love for hers—three bright, noble boys. How she loved them! How passionately and how tenderly! Their lisping voices charmed away her griefs, and their young bright eyes and eager love made her forget that she had ever cause for regret or fear.

For their sakes she endeavoured to be patient. Her love for them was too strong to be sacrificed even to her outraged womanhood; and that she might remain near them, and caress them, and educate them, she bore her trials now coming fast upon her, with forbearance, if not with silence.

But, matters came at last to a climax; though sooner and on different grounds than might have been expected. She and her husband parted on a trivial question of itself, but with grave results: a mere dispute as to whether the children should accompany their mother on a visit to one of her brothers, who was avowedly (very extraordinary that he should be so, after the married life she had led!) unfriendly to her husband. It was at last decided that they should not go, and after a bitter struggle. Far more was involved in this question than appears on the surface; her right to the management of her sons, even in the most trifling matters, was the real point of contention; the mother was obliged to yield, and she went alone; the children remaining at home with the father. The day after she left, she received a message from one of the servants that something was wrong at home; for, the children had been taken away, with all their clothes and toys, no one knew where. In a storm of terror and agony she gave herself up to the trace, and at last found out their hiding place. But without any good result. The woman who had received them, under the sanction of the father, refused to deliver them up to her, and met her prayers and remonstrances with insults and sarcasms. She was obliged to return widowed and childless, to her sister's home in the country; like a wounded panther tearing at the lance in his side, a fearful mixture of love and beauty, and rage and despair. It was well for her that she did return to her sister's house instead of her own home, for, her husband, enraged at her persistence in visiting her brother against his consent, ordered the servants to refuse her admittance should she present herself, and "to open the house door only with the chain across it."

After balancing between reconciliation and prosecution, a divorce suit was decided on by her husband; expressly undertaken "because his wife would not return to him." By this suit, he attempted to prove that an old friend and patron, to whom he owed his present position and his former fortune, was the seducer of his wife. But, the case broke down; and the jury, without leaving their box, gave a verdict in favor of the defendant: a gentleman of known honor and established reputation. The crowded court rang with cheers, such as it had rarely echoed to before, as the verdict was pronounced; friends in every degree of life, old friends and friends hitherto strangers, supported her with their warmest sympathy; and if the readiness of the world in general to be kindly honest, and to set right a proved wrong, could have acted directly upon the law, or could have essentially served her without its aid, she would have had ample redress. The feelings may be soothed, but the wrongs remain.

And now began the most painful part of the sad epic, whose initiatory hymns had glided into a dirge: a dirge for ruined hopes and wasted youth, for a heart made desolate, and a home destroyed; a dirge for the shattered household goods and the fleetings of the fond visions of her heart.

The suit was ended, and the law had pronounced the accused wife innocent. But the law also pronounced the innocent mother without a claim to her own children. They were the father's property absolutely and entirely. He placed them with his sister, a lady who shared his propensity for corporeal punishment; and who flogged the eldest child, a sensitive and delicate boy of six years old, for receiving and reading a letter from his mother. "To impress on his memory," she said, "that he was not to receive letters from her!" The yet younger one was stripped naked, and chastised with a riding whip. Yet the law held back these children from their mother's love, and gave them to the charge of those who thought their education fitly carried on by such means. Time passed, and still the quarrel and the separation continued. By a small alteration in this same law of custody made by our lords, then deified and worshipped—she was at length permitted to see her boys. But only at stated times and at certain hours, and in the coldest manner. It was her husband's privilege to deny her all maternal intercourse with her sons, and he stretched his privilege to the utmost. No touch of pity dissolved the iron bars of the law, and no breath of mercy warmed the breast of the husband and master. Against the decree of the law, what was the protesting cry of nature? A hollow whistling sound among the reeds of a sandy waste, which no man heeded—which no voice answered.

Years trailed wearily on. Long years of tarning down her proud heart, laden almost beyond its strength; long years of battle with [illegible] sorrow of her childless life; long years when the mother's soul stood in the dark valley of death where no light and no hope were. But the criminal law swept on the beaten track, and no one stopped to ask over whose heart this great car of Juggernaut passed. The mother—she to whom GOD has delegated the care of her young—she on whom lie shame and dishonour if she neglect this duty for any self-advantage whatsoever; she—a man's wife, and a man's lawful chattel—had no right to those who had lain beneath her heart, and drunk of her life. The law in this respect is changed—mainly, because this sufferer laboured hard to show its cruelty. This misery inflicted upon her maternal love will be endured by no other English mother.

Pecuniary matters came in next, as further entanglement of this miserable web.—By the marriage settlements a certain sum of money had been secured to the children: the principal of which, neither the husband nor his creditors could touch. It belonged to the children and the mother, emphatically and exclusively. After many years of separation, the husband applied to his wife for her consent to his raising a loan on this trust-fund for the improvement of his estate. She promised that consent, if he, on his part, would execute a deed of separation, and make her a certain allowance for life. Hitherto she had mainly supported herself by authorship. After a demur of reducing the allowance she proposed, the agreement was entered into; and she then gave her consent that a loan should be raised on the trust-fund for her husband's sole advantage. She received in exchange a deed drawn up and signed by a lawyer and her husband, securing her the stipulated five hundred pounds a year for life. Three years after, her mother died, and the husband inherited the life interest of his wife's portion from the father. At the same time a legacy of almost five hundred a year, carefully secured from her husband by every legal hindrance possible, fell to her also from her mother. When her husband knew of this legacy, he wrote to her, telling her that he would not now continue his former allowance, which had been secured, as she believed, by solemn legal agreement. She objected to this novel manner of benefiting by a legacy; and refused to entertain the proposition of a reduction. Her husband quietly told her that she must either consent to his terms, or receive nothing; when she urged the agreement, he answered her with the legal poetic fiction, "that by law, man and wife were one, and therefore could not contract with each other." The deed for which she had exchanged her power over the trust-fund, was a mere worthless piece of paper.

This shameful breach of contract was followed by another law suit, where judgement was given in open court to the effect not only that the agreement in her behalf, signed by her husband and a legal witness, was valueless according to that stanza of the married idyl which proclaims that man and wife are one—not only that she had no claim on the allowance of five hundred a year—but that her husband could also seize every farthing of her earnings, and demand as his own the copyrights of her works and the sums paid for them. No deed of separation had been executed between them, and no divorce could be sued for by her. Nor, she had once condoned or pardoned her husband and so had shut herself out from the protection of the laws.

And all this is in the laws; the laws which throw a woman helplessly on the mercy of her husband, make no ways of escape and build no cities of refuge for her, and deliberately justify her being cheated and entrapped. All these are doings protected and allowed by our laws—and men stand by and say, "It is useless to complain. The laws must be obeyed. It is dangerous to meddle with the laws!"

This is a true tory; those who run may read it—have read it more than once, perhaps, before now, as an exemplification of some of the gravest wrongs of women, and as a proof how much they sometimes need protection even against those whose sworn office it is to cherish and support them, it is very note-worthy, indeed, in this country of Great Britain. Surely there is work waiting to be done in the marital code of England! Surely there are wrongs to be redressed and reforms to be made that have gone too long unmade! Surely we have here a righteous quarrel with the law—more righteous than many that have excited louder cries.

Justice to women. No fanciful rights, no unreal advantages, no preposterous escape from womanly duty, for the restless, loud and vain; no mingling of women with the broils of political life, nor opening to them of careers which nature herself has pronounced them incapable of following; no high-flown assertion of equality in kind; but simple justice. The recognition of their natural rights as mothers, the permission to them to live by their own honorable industry, untaxed by the legal right and moral wrong of any man to claim as his own that for which he has not wrought—reaping where he has not sown, and gathering where has not strewed, Justice to women. That is what the phrase means; that is where the thing is truly wanted; here is an example of the great injustice done to them, and of their maltreatment, under the eyes of a whole nation, by the law.—Household Words.

PAPER FROM WOOD.—At the last sitting of the Society d'Encouragement pour l'Industrie Nationale, of Paris, a paper was read, setting forth a plan for making paper from wood. The bark is first taken off the wood, and the wood cut in such a way as to be easily made into shavings; the shavings are then cut very thin; next they are placed in water for six or eight days, then dried, afterwards they are reduced to the finest powder possible by means of a corn mill. The powder is then mixed with rags which serve to prepare the pulp of paper, and the ordinary operation of paper making is proceeded to. All white wood, such as the poplar, the lime and the willow, are suitable for the purpose; but the discoverer ascribes a good deal of his success to the quality of the water to be employed, that of the little river Dollar, which runs near the Mill-house. For the first experiment he employed the wood of the trembling poplar, and he presented specimens of paper made from it.

The Quebec Gazette says that the records saved from the burning of the Parliament House in January last, were consumed at the recent fire, as well as the whole of the furniture which had been repaired and lately moved to some part of the building. The same paper also states that the Government have taken the Old Wesleyan Chapel in Ann Street, together with the house adjoining, in which to hold the next session of Parliament.

Home-Sickness.

Where I am the halls are gilded,
Stored with pictures bright and rare:
Strains of deep, melodious music
Float upon the perfumed air;
Nothing stirs the dreary silence,
Save the melancholy sea.
Near the poor and humble cottage,
Where I fain would be!

Where I am, the sun is shining,
And the purple windows glow,
Till their rich armorial shadows
Stain the marble floor below:
Faded Autumn leaves are trembling
On the withered jasmine tree,
Creeping round the little casement,
Where I fain would be!

Where I am, the days are passing
O'er a pathway strewn with flowers:
Song, and joy, and sunny pleasures
Crown the happy, smiling hours.
Slowly, heavily and sadly,
Time on weary wings must flee,
Marked by pain, and toil, and sorrow,
Where I fain would be!

Where I am, the great and noble
Tell me of renown and fame,
And the red wine sparkles highest,
To [illegible] to my name:
For an [illegible] place is vacant,
By a humble hearth for me.
Dying embers dimly show it,
Where I fain would be!

Where I am are glorious gleamings
Science, genius, perceive
At the great minds [illegible]
Interchange their [illegible] with [illegible]
[illegible] simple hearts are waiting
Longing, wearying for me.
Far away, where leaves are falling
Where I am would be!

Where I am, all think me happy,
For so well I play my part,
None can guess, who smile around me,
How far distant is my heart
Far away, in a poor cottage,
Listening to the dreary sea,
Where the treasures of my life are,
Where I fain would be!

A Strange Story, if True.

Capt. Gibson, lately returned from the East Indies, read a paper before the American Geographical Society, on the habits of the ourang-outang, peopling the deserts of those regions, from which the following is an extract:

My statement of the extraordinary peculiarities of these apparently semi-human beings has led to the expression of so much curiosity to know more of them by some and of scepticism as to the fact of their existence on the part of others, that I have deemed it due to myself and to the public curiosity to give some additional facts along with all the corroborative evidence that has fallen under my observation.

While at Mintok, Palembang, and Batavia, I heard many remarkable stories of the agility, audacity, and especially of the superhuman strength of the ourang-outang. I will trespass upon your attention by relating one of the most extraordinary, at the same time one of the best attested, which I heard at Batavia:

Lieutenant Shoch, of the Dutch East-India army, was on a march with a small detachment of troops and coolies on the southeastern coast of Borneo. He had encamped, on one occasion, during the noon-day heat, on the banks of one of the small tributaries of the Bangarm ssin. The lieutenant had with him his domestic establishment, which included his daughter, a playful and interesting little girl of the age of thirteen. One day, while wandering in the jungle, beyond the prescribed limits of the camp, and having, from the oppressive heat loosened her garments, and thrown them off, almost in nudity, the beauty of her person excited the notice of an ourang-outang, who sprang upon her and carried her off. Her piercing screams rang through the forest to the ears of her dozing protectors, and roused every man in the camp.

The swift, bare-footed coolies were foremost in pursuit; and now the cry rings in the agonised father's ears that his daughter is devoured by a binatang—again, that an ourang-outang has carried her off. He rushes, half-frenzied, with the whole company, to the thicket, from whence the screams proceeded, and there, among the topmost limbs of an enormous banyan, the father beholds his daughter, naked, bleeding, and struggling in the grasp of a powerful ourang-outang, who held her tightly, yet easily, with one arm, while he sprang lightly from limb to limb as if wholly unincumbered.

It was in vain to think of shooting the monster, so agile was he. The Dyak coolies, knowing the habits of the ourang-outang, and knowing that he will always plunge into the nearest stream when hard pressed, began a system of operations to drive him into the water: they set up a great shout, throwing missiles of all kinds, and agitating the underbrush, while some proceeded to ascend the tree. By the redoubled exertions of the whole company, the monster was gradually driven towards the water, yet still holding tightly to the poor girl. At last the monster and his victim were seen on an outstretching limb, overhanging the stream. The coolies, who are among the expertest swimmers in the world, immediately lined the banks—the soldiers continued the outcries and throwing of missiles. He clasped his prize more tightly, took a survey of the water and of his upward-gazing enemies, and then dashed into the flood below. He had hardly touched the water ere fifty resolute swimmers plunged in pursuit; as he rises a dozen human arms are stretched out towards him. He is grasped. Others lay hold upon the insensible girl. The ourang-outang used both arms to defend himself, and, after lacerating the bodies of some of the coolies with his powerful, nervous claws, finally succeeded in diving beyond the reach of his pursuers, and in escaping down the stream, while the child was restored to the arms of her father and nurses, in whose hands she was ultimately restored to consciousness, health and strength once more. This savage version of the classic story of Pluto and Proserpine, is well authenticated; and the girl, now a grown-up woman, is living at Amboyna, in the Moluccas.

One day last week, Mrs Horton, residing about three miles west of Oswego, saw a large pine tree fall across the track. She instantly beat down the [illegible], called her husband from his work and they both ran to the railroad, a distance of some hundred rods taking an axe with them. But the tree was sound, and more than two feet in diameter where it crossed the track, the spot being also a short curve in the road, and out of view from any considerable distance. Worse than all, the time for the train to pass was close at hand. Probably at the suggestion of the wife, as woman proverbially is at expedients, Mr. Horton immediately took off his red flannel drawers, tore them in two, and ran up the road with one leg, while his wife ran down with the other. In a few minutes the mail passenger train approached at full speed, when it was arrested by Mrs. Horton standing on the track, waving the leg of the red flannel drawers on a mullen stock. The tree was soon cut and rolled off the track, with the aid of the passengers, who proceeded on their journey; many lives and limbs doubtless having been saved by this really kind and noble act of Mrs. Horton.—N. Y. Courier.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—Yesterday afternoon, the rear cars of the express train from the west, by some means were thrown off the track, when within about five miles of London. As such things are, for some reason, kept dark by the company's officials along the line, we have not learnt the particulars up to our going to press, last evening. We hear, however, that several were killed, and a number wounded. The locomotive and tender arrived in town immediately after the accident, and returned with several medical gentlemen to the scene of disaster. —Prototype.

They shall keep a registry of all persons willing to employ colored men in business, to teach colored boys mechanical trades, liberal and scientific professions, and farming; and also, a registry of colored men and boys seeking employment or instruction. They shall also report upon any avenues of business or trade which they deem inviting to colored capital, skill, or labor. Their reports and advertisements to be in papers of the widest circulation. Each committee shall meet at least once a month or as often as possible; shall keep a minute of all its proceedings, executive and business, and shall print a full statement of the same, with the accounts audited, at every regular meeting of the National council.

Art. 8. The National council shall meet at least once in six months, to receive the reports of the committees, and to consider any new plan for the general good, for which it shall have power, at its option, to appoint a new committee, and shall be empowered to receive and appropriate donations for the carrying out of the objects of the same. At all such meetings, eleven members shall constitute a quorum. In case any committee neglect or refuse to send in its report, according to article 8th, then the council shall have power to enter the bureau, examine the books and papers of such committee; and in case the committee shall persist in its refusal or neglect, then the council shall declare their offices vacant, and appoint others in their stead.

Art. 14. The council shall have power to make such Bye-Laws as are necessary for their proper government.

The following resolutions, having a direct bearing upon the plan of organization were adopted by the Convention and are therefore appended to the Council's Constitution.]

Resolved That the Council shall be delegated to select its various Committees.

Resolved, That the Council shall have power to offer a premium for prize essays on different subjects agreed on by Council.

Resolved, That the said Council shall hear and grant petitions and be governed by the rules of legislative bodies, and their decisions shall be final.

Resolved, That any State applying for admission into this Union, shall be admitted on such terms, as may hereafter be agreed upon.

Resolved, That in establishing a National Council for our own special improvement, and a Manual Labor School for the education of our children in science, literature and mechanical arts, this Convention do this, not to build ourselves up as a distinct and separate class in this country, but as a means to a great end, viz: the equality in political rights, and in civil and social privileges with the rest of the American people.

PLAN OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The undersigned, the Committee on Manual Labour School, appointed by the National Council of the colored people, in offering a plan for the organization of the school, beg leave to state,

THE GOSPEL TRIBUNE.

PROSPECTUS.

The first number of a monthly paper, to be known as above indicated, is proposed to be published in Toronto within a few months, and not later than the first day of July, 1854. The work is to be and appearance to be at least equal to the Missionary Record or Christian Observer; and as much superior to either in style and execution as the subscription list will warrant.

DISTINCTIVE OBJECT:

To enlarge the limits of Communion and Church-Membership, among Christians, to the greatest possible extent, and to circumscribe those bounds to the exclusion, if possible, of all other characters, without otherwise disturbing the Membership of existing Churches; till acknowledged Christian Character shall constitute the only passport, at any time, and the perfect passport at all times, to every Communion and Church worthy of the Christian name; "that the world may believe" in Christ, even as he prayed.

GENERAL OBJECTS:

The promotion of Religious, Moral, Intellectual and Social improvement, under the guidance of Divine Revelation, submitting every move and measure to the test of Gospel Principles

SUPPORTERS:

The distinctive and general objects of the work are such, as to claim for it the patronage of all classes of men, excepting those wedded to other pre-requisites of Communion and Church-membership, than acknowledged Christian Character; and here it is recorded with great pleasure that the encouragements tendered, thus far, are in strict accordance with the above general claims.

ORIGIN AND PROGRESS:

This movement has long been contemplated. For twenty years the subscriber has made the distinctive object of the GOSPEL TRIBUNE his special study, examining carefully and personally the denominational aspect of Religious Societies, their reciprocal bearings, their mutual relations, and the nature of their combined influence on the evangelization of the world. Latterly, his position as Publisher of the SCRIPTURE MANUAL has probably afforded him the best possible facilities for personally testing the strength of positions, and for the attainment of certain important information, but little of which he had previously been able to obtain. All may rest assured, however, that no undue advantage will ever be taken of the frankness and candor with which Christians of every name, as well as skeptics of every class, have freely expressed their convictions in the presence of the Travelling Colporteur; the capacity in which the Publisher is still extending his observations through Canada and the neighboring States.

CO-LABORERS:

Of distinguished worth and of well-known literary ability, are already secured in the several sections of Canada, and in the States of the American Union; and arrangements are now in progress, to obtain from living responsible writers in Britain, important assistance in the development of the TRIBUNE'S Mission.

TERMS AND NOTICES:

The Terms are One Dollar per Annum in advance,—otherwise Two Dollars; it having found that one half of the Subscriptions, not paid in advance, are worse than lost. Editors—friendly—will render assistance by noticing this Prospectus. All parties willing to aid, may at once commence soliciting the names of Subscribers. Two books—the Scripture and Laconic Manuals—fully gilt, and the Paper one year, will be forwarded to the person who first sends the names of ten Subscribers; and one of either of the books, in substantial leather binding, or the Paper one year, to every one who sends ten names. Subscriptions and all other communications for the Paper to be sent, post-paid, marked Money, (if inclosed) and addressed, ROBERT DICK, Box 411, TORONTO.

Sermons and Lectures, promotive of the TRIBUNE'S object, will be delivered by the Publisher throughout the Province as frequently as shall be found compatible with his other duties.

(Signed) ROBERT DICK.

Toronto, March 25th, 1854.

CALL FOR A NATIONAL EMIGRATION CONVENTION OF COLORED MEN,

To be held in Cleveland, Ohio, on the 24th, 25th and 26th of August, 1854.

MEN AND BRETHREN:—The time has now fully come, when we, as an oppressed people, should do something effectively, and use those means adequate to the attainment of the great and long desired end—to do something to meet the actual wants of the present and prospective necessities of the rising generation of our people in this country. To do this, we must occupy a position of entire equality, of unrestricted rights, composing in fact, an acknowledged necessary part of the ruling element of society in which we live. The policy necessary to the preservation of this element must be in our favor, if ever we expect the enjoyment, freedom, sovereignty, and equality of rights anywhere. For this purpose, and to this end, then, all colored men in favor of emigration out of the United States, and opposed to the American Colonization scheme of leaving the Western Hemisphere, are requested to meet in CLEVELAND, OHIO, on TUESDAY, the 24th DAY of AUGUST, 1854, in a great NATIONAL CONVENTION, then and there, to consider and decide upon the great and important subject of emigration from the United States.

No person will be admitted to a seat in the Convention, who would introduce the subject of emigration to the Eastern Hemisphere—either to Asia, Africa, or Europe—as our object and determination is to consider our claims to the West Indies, Central and South America, and the Canadas. This restriction has no reference to personal preference, or individual enterprise; but to the great question of national claims to come before the Convention.

All persons coming to the Convention must bring credentials properly authenticated, or bring verbal assurance to the Committee on Credentials—appointed for the purpose—of their fidelity to the measures and objects set forth in this Call as the Convention is specifically by and for the friends of emigration, and NONE OTHERS—and no opposition to them will be entertained.

The question is not whether our condition can be bettered by emigration, but whether it can be made worse. If not, then, there is no part of the wide-spread universe, where our social and political condition are not better than here in our native country, and nowhere in the world as here placed on account of color.

We are friends, too, and ever will stand shoulder to shoulder by our brethren, and all our friends in all good measures adopted by them for the bettering of our condition in this country and surrender no rights but with our last breath, but as the subject of emigration is of vital importance, and has ever been, so must be by all delegated assemblages of our people as heretofore met, we cannot longer delay, and will not be further baffled; and deny the right of our most sanguine friend or dearest brother, to prevent an intelligent enquiry to, and the carrying out these measures, when this can be done, to our entire advantage as we propose to show in Convention—as the West Indies, Central and South America—the majority of which are peopled by our brethren, or those identified with us in race, and what is more, destiny, on this continent—all stand with open arms and yearning hearts, importuning us in the name of suffering humanity to come—to make common cause, and share one common fate on the continent.

The Convention will meet, without fail, at the time fixed for assembling, as none but those favorable to emigration are admissable; therefore no other gathering may prevent it. The number of delegates will not be restricted—except in the town where the Convention may be held—and there the number will be decided by the Convention when assembled, that they may not too far exceed the other delegations.

The time and place fixed for holding the Convention are ample; affording sufficient time, and a leisure season generally—and as Cleveland is now the centre of all directions—a good and favorable opportunity to all who desire to attend.—Therefore, it may reasonably be the greatest gathering of the colored people ever before assembled in a Convention in the United States.

Colonizationists are advised that no favors will be shown to them or their expatriating scheme, as we have no sympathy with the enemies of our race.

All colored men, East, West, North and South, favorable to the measures set forth in this Call will send in their names (post paid) to M. R. Delany, or R. A. Webb, Pittsburgh, Pa., the latter only acting as agent, attached to the Call for names from each State.

We must make an issue, create an event, and establish a position for ourselves. It is glorious to think of, but far more glorious to carry out.

The Search.

BY JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

I went to seek for Christ,
And Nature seemed so fair,
That first the woods and fields my youth enticed,
And I was sure to find him there:
The temple I forsook,
And to the solitude
Allegiance paid: but Winter came and shook
The crown and purple from my wood;
His snows, like desert sands, with scornful drift,
Besieged the column'd aisle and palace gate:
My Thebes, cut deep with many a solemn rift,
But epitaph'd her own sepulchred state;
Then I remembered whom I went to seek;
And bless'd blunt Winter for his counsel bleak

Back to the world I turn'd,
For Christ, I said, is King;
So the cramp'd alley and the hut I spurn'd,
As far beneath his sojourning;
'Mid power and wealth I sought,
But found no trace of him,
And all the costly offerings I had brought,
With sudden rush and mould grew dim:
I found his tomb, indeed, where, by their laws,
All must on stated days themselves imprison,
Mocking with bread a dead creed's grinning jaws,
Witless how long the life had thence arisen;
Due sacrifice to this they cut apart,
Prizing it more than Christ's own living heart.

So from my feet the dust
Of the proud world I shook;
Then came dear Love and shared with me his crust,
And half my sorrow's burden took.
After the world's soft bed,
Its rich and dainty fare,
Like down seem'd Love's coarse pillow to my head,
His cheap food seem'd as manna rare;
Fresh trodden prints of bare and bleeding feet
Turn'd to the heedless city whence I came,
Hard by I saw, and springs of worship sweet
Gush'd from my cleft heart, smitten by the same;
Love look'd me in the face, and spake no words,
But straight I knew those foot-prints were the Lord's.

I follow'd where they led,
And in a hovel rude,
With nought to fence the weather from his head,
The King I sought for meekly stood,
A naked, hungry child
Clung round his gracious knee,
And a poor hunted slave look'd up and smiled
To bless the smile that set him free;
New miracles I saw his presence do—
No more I knew the hovel bare and poor;
The gather'd chips into a woodpile grew,
The broken morsel swell'd to goodly store;
I knelt and wept; my Christ no more I seek—
His throne is with the outcast and the weak.

"Little Gerty."

A CHAPTER FROM THE "LAMPLIGHTER."

Good God! to think upon a child
That has no childish days,
No careless play, no frolic wild,
No words of prayer and praise!
LANDON.

It was growing dark in the city. Out in the open country it would be light for half an hour or more; but within the close streets where my story leads me it was already dusk. Upon the wooden door-step of a low-roofed, dark, and unwholesome-looking house, sat a little girl, who was gazing up the street with much earnestness. The house-door which was open behind her, was close to the sidewalk; and the step on which she sat was so low that her little unshod feet rested on the cold bricks. It was a chilly evening in November, and a light fall of snow, which had made everything look bright and clean in the pleasant open squares, near which the fine houses of the city were built, had only served to render the narrow streets and dark lanes dirtier and more cheerless than ever; for, mixed with the mud and filth which abound in those neighborhoods where the poor are crowded together, the beautiful snow had lost all its purity.

A great many people were passing to and fro, bent on their various errands of duty or of pleasure; but no one noticed the little girl, for there was no one in the world who cared for her. She was scantily clad in garments of the poorest description. Her hair was long and very thick; uncombed and unbecoming, if anything could be said to be unbecoming to a set of features, which, to a casual observer, had not a single attraction—being thin and sharp while her complexion was sallow, and her whole appearance unhealthy. She had, to be sure, fine, dark eyes; but so unnaturally large did they seem, in contrast to her thin, puny face, that they only increased the peculiarity of it, without enhancing its beauty. Had any one felt an interest in her (which nobody did,) had she a mother (which alas! she had not,) those friendly and partial eyes would perhaps have found something in her to praise. As it was however, the poor little thing was told, a dozen times a day, that she was the worst looking child in the world; and what was more, the worst behaved. No one loved her, and she loved no one; no one treated her kindly; no one tried to make her happy, or cared whether she were so.—She was but eight years old, and all alone in the world.

There was one thing, and one only, which she found pleasure in. She loved to watch for the coming of the old man who lit the street lamp in front of the house where she lived; to see the bright torch he carried flicker in the wind; and then, when he ran up his ladder, lit the lamp so quickly and easily, and made the whole place seem cheerful, one gleam of joy was shed on a little desolate heart, to which gladness was a stranger; and though he had never seemed to see, and certainly had never spoken to her, she almost felt, as she watched for the old lamplighter, as if he were a friend.

"Gerty!" exclaimed a harsh voice within, "have you been for the milk?"

The child made no answer, but gliding off the door-step, ran quickly round the corner of the house, and hid a little out of sight.

"What's become of that child?" said the woman from whom the voice proceeded, and who now showed herself at the door.

A boy who was passing, and had seen Gerty run,—a boy caught the tone of the neighborhood, and looked upon her as a sort of imp, or spirit of evil—laughed aloud, pointed to the corner which concealed her, and, walking off with his head over his shoulder, to see what would happen next, exclaimed to himself as he went, "She'll catch it! Nan Grant'll fix her!

In a moment more, Gerty was dragged from her hiding-place, and with one blow for her ugliness and another for her impudence (for she was making faces at Nan Grant with all her might,) she was dispatched down a neighboring alley with a kettle for the milk.

She ran fast, for she feared the lamplighter would come and go in her absence, and was rejoiced on her return to catch sight of him, as he drew near the house, just going up his ladder. She stationed herself at the foot of it, and was so engaged in watching the bright flame, that she did not observe when the man began to descend; and, as she was directly in his way, he hit against her as he sprang to the ground, and she fell upon the pavement. "Hollo, my little one!" exclaimed he, "how's this?" as he stooped to lift her up.

She was upon her feet in an instant; for she was used to hard knocks, and did not much mind a few bruises. But the milk!—it was all spilt.

"Well now I declare!" said the man "that's too bad!—what'll mammy say?" and, for the first time looking full in Gerty's face, he here interrupted himself with, "My! what an odd-faced child!—looks like a witch!" Then seeing that she looked apprehensively at the spilt milk, and gave a sudden glance up at the house, he added, kindly, "She won't be hard on such a mite of a thing as you are, will she? Cheer up, my ducky! never mind if she does scold you a little. I will bring you something to-morrow, that I think you'll like, maybe; you're such a lonesome sort of a looking thing.—And, mind, if the old woman makes a row, tell her I did it. But did'nt I hurt you? What was you doing with my ladder?"

"I was seeing you light the lamp," said Gerty, "and I ain't hurt a bit; but I wish I had'nt spilt the milk.

At this moment Nan Grant came to the door, saw what had happened, and commenced pulling the child into the house, amidst blows, threats, and profane and brutal language. The lamplighter tried to appease her; but she she shut the door in his face. Gerty was scolded, beaten, deprived of the crust which she usually got for her supper, and shut up in the dark attic for the night. Poor little child! Her mother had died in Nan Grant's house, five years before; and she had been tolerated there since, not so much because when Ben Grant went to sea he bade his wife be sure and keep the child until his return, (for he had been gone so long that no one thought he would ever come back,) but because Nan had reasons of her own for doing so; and, though she considered Gerty a dead weight upon her hands, she did not care to excite inquiries by trying to dispose of her elsewhere.

When Gerty first found herself locked up for the night in the dark garret (Gerty hated and feared the dark,) she stood for a minute perfectly still; then suddenly began to stamp and scream, tried to beat open the door, and shouted, "I hate you, Nan Grant!" Old Nan Grant, I hate you!" But nobody came near her; and after a while, she grew more quiet, went and threw herself down on her miserable bed, covered her face with her little thin hands and sobbed and cried as if her heart would break. She wept until she was utterly exhausted; and then gradually, with only now and then low sobs and catching of the breath, she grew quite still. By and by she took away her hands from her face, clasped them together in a convulsive manner, and looked up a little glazed window by the side of the bed. It was three panes of glass unevenly stuck together, and was the only chance of light the room had. There was no moon; but, as Gerty looked up, she saw through the window shining down upon her one bright star. She thought she had never seen anything half so beautiful.—She had often been out of doors when the sky was full of stars, and had not noticed them much; but this one, all alone, so bright, and yet so soft and pleasant-looking, seemed to speak to her; it seemed to say, "Gerty! Gerty! poor little Gerty!" She thought it seemed like a kind face, such as she had a long time ago seen or dreamt about. Suddenly it flashed through her mind, "Who lit it? Somebody lit it! Some good person, I know! O how could he get up so high!" And Gerty fell asleep wondering who lit the star.

Poor little untaught benighted soul!—Who shall enlighten thee? Thou art God's child, little one! Christ died for thee.—Will he not send man or angel to light up the darkness within, to kindle a light that shall never go out, the light that shall shine through all eternity!

Dog Trains.

It is well known that the Lake Superior mineral region is situated in high northern latitudes, and is inaccessible in winter for steamboats or overland by teams. The inhabitants keep up an occasional communication with the world by means of dog trains, which convey the mails and light articles of traffic. A correspondent of the Cleveland Herald, writing from Eagle River, gives an interesting account of this mode of travelling. After stating the different routes to the settlement, none of which present a beaten, or well defined track, he goes on to say:—

Such are the frozen spaces over which a score of Indian half-breeds and their dogs carry and draw the letters and papers destined for our amusement and for our information. A man carries from 50 to 75 pounds, and walks 30 to 50 miles. His two dogs go before him, with a sledge or sled with a flat board bottom, and draw two hundred and fifty to three hundred pounds.

This load, however, is not all letters and packages. All men must eat, and an Indian in particular. He must carry a half-axe or hatchet, a plenty of blankets, and something for his dogs to eat as well as himself. What can be more desolate than such a journey? Yet many persons from here make the trip every winter on business in company with the mail.

Sometimes they have the trail of a previous party, but the snow which falls almost every day soon obliterates their footsteps.—Perhaps there is a line of blazed trees which they follow, but more often they are guided through the forest by the "make of the ground," or by the sun, if it should occasionally peep out through the mists and snow of a winter sky.

Thus they go, from the first dawn of day to the twilight of evening; over lakes and and mountains, through swamps and thickets, that in summer would be impassable, but now smoothed up level with snow.

The universal evergreen trees are bending to the ground with a load of snow on their branches, that frequently obstruct the way.

This dismal procession of Indians, white men and dogs, go in single file, a few feet apart, and for hours they travel on, at the height of their speed, without a word or a laugh.

It is too much of a task to clear away the snow, start a fire, heat the water, thaw the bread and prepare a forest meal, to stop for it at noon. But at evening, when the shades of a hyperborean night begin to gather among the branches of the trees, and the northern winds howl more earnestly, the company look about for a shelter-place in some ravine where there is water, and some dry food for a fire, and there deposit their load of blankets and provisions. They scrape away the snow with their snow-shoes, down to the ground, thus making a wall of frost around them three or four feet high.

Some cut wood for the night, others break off the boughs of the pine, balsam or cedar, and lay them down for a bed. Another procures some birch bark that is dry, and some dry sticks, and, striking fire by his flint and steel, or his matches, has a cheerful flame, with its grateful heat enlivening the place. It is also necessary to build a lodge or house of boughs overhead to keep off the falling snow, under which they all gather and cook their supper with great glee. If a camp of Indians has been passed during the day, there will be seen some fresh venison, that will occupy the best position around the fire, suspended upon the sharp points of limber sticks set in the ground, and leaning towards the heat. There may be, however, only some salt pork, or ham and flour, made edible by means of a short-handled frying-pan and some water.

It would astonish city people to see the quantity of such materials that disappears on such an occasion. The meal, or rather the feast, is really intended for the whole of the next twenty-four hours. When it is finished, the party begin to unpack their feet and their blankets.

The blankets being well spread, the fire made for the night, the dogs fed, and the dishes washed, the crowd, animal and mortal, Indian and white, doubles itself together in most friendly contiguity, and goes to sleep. Long before daylight, the inmates of this snow-bound lodging are in motion. The sounds that issue from it are English, French and Indian, and all grades of a language, composed of a mixture of them all. The moccasins are taken down from their drying-places, the hasty morning repast, which was cooked the night before, is swallowed, the packs are made up, the dogs harnessed, and all made ready for a start at the first light of day. What piteous howlings these dogs set up as they are attached to the train. The human part of the cavalcade sling their packs, and all betake themselves again to the dreary labors of the day.

It is thus, that this communication will reach you, but before many years we hope to have an open road from the settlements, and a beaten path over which there would be the best of sleighing between four and five months in the year.—Evening Post.

The Home Journal has received from a friend at Paris a translated passage from a new work by Alphonse Karr, which it declares to be "something new and saucy." It is, at least, very amusing, all will agree, whatever they may think of Mr. Karr's estimate of what the preaching Friend called the "two sects":

WHY MODERN MEN ARE UGLY.

If you, ladies, are much handsomer than we, it is but just you should acknowledge that we have helped you, by voluntarily making ourselves ugly. Your superiority in beauty is made up of two things: First, the care which you take to increase your charms; secondly, the zeal which we have shown to heighten them by the contrast of our finished ugliness—the shadow which we supply to your sunshine.

Your long, pliant, wavy tresses are all the more beautiful because we cut our hair short; your hands are all the whiter, smaller and more delicate because we reserve to ourselves those toils and exercises which make the hands large and hard.

We have devoted entirely to your use flowers, feathers, ribbons, jewelry, silks, gold and silver embroidery. Still more to increase the difference between the sexes, which is your greatest charm, we have divided with you the hues of nature. To you we have given the colours that are rich and splendid, or soft and harmonious; for ourselves we have kept those that are dark and dead. We have given you sun and light; we have kept night and darkness.

We have monopolised the hard stony roads that enlarge the feet; we have let you walk only on carpets. Think you your feet would have been so narrow and finely curved but for that?

Man received from nature as his companion a sort of female man, probably less handsome than himself, as is the case with the female of other animals: of this female he has made a woman.

So much did he feel the desire and need of adoring you, that he dressed you in long clothes. Note that these long clothes are only allowed to men filling functions in whose holders it was necessary that no personal imperfections should be discernible. Kings, priests and magistrates wear long garments, like you.

But, by this very division, man entered into possession of his own particular and legitimate beauty, which consisted in strength, endurance and dignity. In making woman more womanly, he made himself more manly. Everything which increases the difference of the sexes adds charms to love. Distance is necessary; loving-room is as requisite as fighting-room.

Nothing was more rational than this distribution of parts. The man had short hair and long beard; his complexion was bronzed by sun and wind; his muscular arms terminated in shorty, knotty hands; his legs, with their salient muscles, were supported on feet hardened by the toils of war and the chase. He was to please the woman by his strength, by his courage, by the protection which he gave her; there was a little fear in the woman's love for the man—a sentiment which civilization has not been able to destroy entirely. A real woman truly loves no man but one who is her master. [!] It is said that woman's pleasure is to command; I maintain that her happiness is to obey. Women like commanding as great ladies like dining at a country tavern—once in their lives by accident. Never would a woman, before the progress of civilization, have accepted the love of a languishing, frail, elegant man. The man had to defend her against men and other wild animals. He had to bring to the hut the deer or the wild boar for her and her children, to lift her up and carry her when the road was too rough, to help her in swimming across rivers, etc., etc.

But things changed with the advance of civilization. Woman, protected by law and by custom, had no actual need of man's strength. Man took less exercise, renounced the fatigues and pleasures of the chase, and made war by proxy. The civilized man, the man of the world, lost his manly beauty, and from that time slily tried to get back from woman a portion of what he had conceded to her.

Then he began to let his hair grow, and curl it, and part it accurately on one side; then he wanted to have white and delicate hands, small feet, and slim waist. He took back silks and velvets, under the name of waistcoats; he loaded his fingers with rings, and put diamonds into his shirts; he wore gold and jewels; the cravat afforded him a pretext for reclaiming his share of ribbons. He demanded a new distribution of colours, and not only regained red, blue and green, but usurped pink, azure and lilac. Having no longer the true beauty of a man, he took it into his head that he would share in that of the woman—and consequently he became very ugly.

Let a man lace himself as tight as he will, his waist will never be as small as that of a moderately sized woman. It is of no use for him to torture his feet into boots too small for them; a man's small foot is larger than a womna's large one. Equally useless is it for him to do nothing with his hands, and to put them into gloves that are too tight; the smallest man's glove can hold both a woman's hands. No matter how he bedizens himself with flashy cravats and sparkling waistcoats, his dress must look mean and dingy beside a woman's, since he dare not lay aside his awful coat and trowsers, or his hideous hat, or put flowers in his hair.

Nature made male and female man. Man made man and female women.

When women see men seeking, with very middling success, to arrive at beauty by the same means as themselves, they compare men's faces with their faces, men's feet with their feet, men's clothes with their clothes, and naturally find men ugly and ill-dressed.

Besides the indisputable inferiority to which men subject themselves in their ridiculous pretension to dispute the palm of feminine beauty with women, they do themselves wrong in another way, which some of them do not yet perceive; but the importance of which will soon be too obvious to the majority of them. It is this:

They become old much sooner. If a man's beauty were supposed to consist—as it really should—in dignity, strength, endurance, courage, and intelligence, as that of a woman consists in grace, elegance, lightness, freshness, and timid simplicity, his old age would begin only when he began to lose his strength, intelligence and courage—that is to say, when his muscles relaxed; when his step became heavy and dragging, when his eyes lost their fire. But if you require in a man beauties like those of a woman—a slim figure, a fresh complexion and the like—it is clear that by this rule a man of twenty-five is less handsome than a lad of eighteen; that at thirty he is no longer young, and at forty he is old. Whereas if we looked for the man's beauty where it ought to be, and really is, he would regain fifteen years, which he loses by the present doubly erroneous estimate.—ALPHONSE KARR. Nouvelles Guepes.

Elephant Hunting.

In a recently published London work, entitled "The Rifle and Hound in Ceylon," we find many exciting descriptions of elephant hunting, derived from the experience of the author, Mr. S. W. Baker. The following is one of most thrilling interest. Mr. Baker had discovered in a large plain which was covered with huge lemon grass to the height of ten or twelve feet, a herd of ten elephants, and in company with his brother had shot five of them. We give the story in his own language:—

"I had one barrel still loaded, and was pushing my way through the tangled grass towards the spot where the five elephants lay together, when I suddenly heard Wallace shriek out, "Look out, Sir! Look out! an elephant's coming!" I turned round in a moment; and close past Wallace, from the the very spot where the last dead elephant lay, came the very essence and incarnation of a "rogue" elephant in full charge. His trunk was thrown high in the air, his ears were cocked, his tail stood high above his back as stiff as a poker, and screaming exactly like the whistle of a railway engine, he rushed upon me through the high grass with a velocity which was perfecly wonderful.—His eyes flashed as he came on, and he had singled me out as his victim. I have often been in dangerous positions, but I never felt so totally devoid of hope as I did in this instance. The tangled grass rendered retreat impossible. I had only one barrel loaded, and that was useless, as the upraised trunk protected his forehead. I felt myself doomed; the few thoughts that rush through men's minds in such hopeless positions, flew through mine, and I resolved to wait for him till he was close upon me before I fired, hoping that he might lower his trunk and expose his forehead. He rushed along at the pace of a horse in full speed; in a few moments, as the grass flew to the right and left before him, he was close upon me, but still his trunk was raised and I would not fire.—One second more, and at this headlong pace he was within three feet of me; down slashed his trunk with the rapidity of a whip-thong, and with a shrill scream of fury he was upon me. I fired at that instant; but in the twinkling of an eye I was flying through the air like a ball from a bat. At the moment of firing I had jumped to the left, but he had struck me with his tusk in full charge upon my right thigh, and hurled me eight or ten paces from him. That very moment he stopped, and, turning round he beat the grass about with his trunk, and commenced a strict search for me. I heard him advancing close to the spot where I lay as still as death, knowing that my last chance lay in concealment. I heard the grass rustling close to the spot where I lay; closer and closer he approached, and he at length beat the grass with his trunk several times exactly above me. I held my breath, momentarily expecting to feel his ponderous foot upon me. Although I had not felt the sensation of fear while I had stood opposed to him, I felt like what I never wish to feel again while he was deliberately hunting me up. Fortunately the powder and smoke had nearly blinded him and spoiled his acute power of scent. To my joy I heard the rustling of the grass grow fainter; again I heard it at a still greater distance; at length it was gone.

FACTS IN HUMAN LIFE.

The number of languages spoken in the world amounts to about 3,064. The inhabitants of the globe profess more than 1,000 different religions. The number of men is about equal to the number of women. The average of human life is about 33 years. One quarter die previous to the age of 7 years; one-half before reaching 17; and those who pass that age enjoy a felicity refused to one-half of the human species. To every 1,000 persons only one reaches 100 years of age; to every 100 only six reach the age of 65; and not more than one in 500 lives to 80 years of age. There are on earth 1,000,000,000 of inhabitants; and of these 333,333,333 die every year, 91,824 every day, 3,730 every hour, and 60 every minute, or one every second. These losses are about balanced by an equal number of births. The married are longer lived than the single, and above all those who observe a sober and industrious conduct. Tall men live longer than short ones. Women have more chances of life in their favor previous to being fifty years of age than men, but fewer afterwards. The number of marriages is in the proportion of 75 to every 1,000 individuals. Marriages are more frequent after the equinoxes, that is during the months of June and December. Those born in spring are generally more robust than others. Births and deaths are more frequent by night than by day. The number of men capable of bearing arms is calculated at one-fourth of the population. —English Quarterly.

ADVANTAGES OF WEALTH.—A lady, probably belonging to the "vulgar genteel class described by Mr. Parker in his lecture, called at the boarding-school where her daughter was receiving her education, and was told by the preceptress that the pupil was making slow progress.

"She lacks capacity," was the reply.

"Why did'nt you tell us this before," said the mother, with an air of consequence, "her father is rich, and could have bought her one."

FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.

The Turkish waters present attractions of deeper interest than the land. The Anglo-French Admirals seem to enjoy themselves in committing depredations on the fortifications of the Czar. The bombardment of Odessa has turned out a much more serious affair than it was at first reported to be, although, according to Russian accounts, it is even less so. Black destruction, in the Russian vocabulary, means successful resistance. According to the last accounts, the Admirals had sent forth an effective squadron to scour the coasts, to make observations, and to work all manner of mischief to Russia, while the Admirals themselves, with the rest of their fleet, were leisurely cruising, in contemptuous dignity, around Sebastapol, keeping the Russian fleet in awe. Reports have been for some time current to the effect that they had commenced the bombardment of Sebastopol, but of this there has been no confirmation, and there seems much improbability in the statement.

Prussia still preserves her equivocal attitude, apparently unable to extricate herself from the fascination of the eye of the Czar. When it is remembered how close a relationship obtains between the Court of Berlin and the Court of St. Petersburg, this is not greatly to be wondered at. Frederick, it strikes us, is an object of pity quite as much as of blame. It is scarcely possible he could, without a pressure the most extraordinary, have acted otherwise. His breast is necessarily torn between the feelings of the potentate and the feelings of the brother.

In Austria matters appear to have taken somewhat of a new turn. That Power, however, has of late been receiving credit for more than she deserved. The positions of Prussia and Austria respectively in relation to Nicholas are widely different, while, on the one hand, there is intimate relationship without national obligation; on the other, there is obligation without relationship. The assistance rendered to Austria in the subjugation of Hungary is considered to be a deed on which the Czar can afford to live for a long time. It is fully believed that but for this circumstance Joseph at this moment would not have been an Emperor; and hence it is inferred that the remembrance will prevent all hostile action in that quarter, and there appears much ground for this view of the case. Personally, Austria has nothing to gain from declaring either for or against the Czar, while it would necessarily involve an immense expenditure. She seems, therefore, to be playing the part of prudence and to avoid a declaration either way. A juvenile epistle, however, has appeared within the last two or three days, in which he talks most childishly about his empire, his rights and his duties, and intimates his imperial will that there should be a levy of 95,000 men, no reason being given for the rejection of round numbers. Much has been made of this fact, but whether it be anything more than a mere flourish, time alone can tell. The belief, however, is, among political seers, that he contemplates declaring for the Western Powers.

The last achievement of special interest, is that of Sir Charles Napier in the Baltic, who has succeeded in the destruction of a fort of considerable magnitude to Russia, the fort of Gustavsvarn, and in the capture of some 1,500 Russian prisoners. The full particulars of this reported success have not arrived. It seems somewhat difficult to understand by what process these 1,500 men have been made prisoners. In order to do it, there must have been the disembarking of a considerable force to operate on land, while the cannonade was going on from the ships. It would appear that the taking of this fort is of considerable importance to the Western powers, forasmuch as, before it, the Allied Fleet can ride at anchor in safety, while it will likewise be rendered available for keeping things right for a considerable distance behind and around. By the last intelligence, there was a powerful reinforcement of the Fleet by the arrivel of another French squadron. In the meantime, the Fleet amounts to 45 sail, with 2,250 guns, and about 23,500 men. But to these there are being made constant additions both from France and England.

The most interesting intelligence which has hitherto been obtained has been from the private correspondence of officers in the Fleet. These gentlemen, at their ease, tell their own tale as only sailors can tell it.—Hearty, brave, buoyant and eager, their communications may be taken as a fair embodiment of the spirit of the Fleet. The crowded state of our columns to-day prevents our indulging our readers with a few racy extracts; but we shall, henceforth, be emancipated from the pressure of the important Meetings of the season, which have now come to a close. The bearing of the whole of the intelligence which has arrived is to this effect: The Anglo-French Admirals are determined on clearing their way by destroying whatever stands between them and Cronstadt, and thus preparing the way for the tremendous conflict with which this, the last stronghold of the CZAR, is to be surprised, seized, and destroyed. It has been hinted—and the suggestion is a reasonable one—that so soon as Sebastopol shall have been demolished by Admirals DUNDAS and HAMELIN, the Turkish Fleet is to be left in its own waters, while the Allied Fleet will pass round to the Baltic, and unite with Sir CHARLES and the French Admiral. It is considered prudent to wait until this union shall have been completed, by which there shall have been realised such an aggregation of maritime force as has never been brought to bear in ocean warfare. There is something inexpressibly frightful in the contemplation. It would seem utterly impossible for Russia to resist such a concentration of power. Still, however, it must be remembered that the race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong; but, in this case, the side of truth, and justice, and honour is also the side of power.

The French are hearty in their co-operation. The Funds are rising, and the public are becoming accustomed to the idea of War. It is proposed to send to the Levant no fewer than 150,000 soldiers, which will involve an expenditure of some three hundred millions of francs, which renders a fresh loan necessary; and there is no doubt about procuring it. The opinions which prevail in France are to the effect that nothing decisive will be done, or attempted, by the Allied Armies in Turkey during the present year. They will merely take their positions, and get ready for the next spring. Such are the calculations of mortals, who know not what a day may bring forth.—British Banner.

LORD RAGLAN AND HIS ARMY.

The following is the General Order issued by Lord Raglan on his arrival at Constantinople:—

"The Queen having been graciously pleased to appoint General Lord Raglan to be Commander of the forces to be employed in Turkey in support of her ally, His Imperial Majesty the Sultan and His Lordship having arrived, all reports, &c., will be made to him through the channels prescribed by Her Majesty's regulations.

"The Commander of the Forces avails himself of the earliest opportunity to impress upon the army the necessity of maintaining the strictest discipline, of respecting persons and property, and the laws and usages of the country they have been sent to aid and defend, and particularly of avoiding to enter mosques, churches, and the private dwellings of a people whose habits are peculiar, and unlike those of the other nations of Europe.

"Lord Raglan fully relies upon the general and other officers of his army to afford him their support in the repression of disorder; and he confidently hopes that the troops themselves, anxious to obtain the character they have acquired elsewhere, will endeavour to become the example of obedience to order and of attention to discipline, without which success is impossible, and their presence would be an evil instead of an advantage to those whose cause their sovereign had deemed it proper to espouse.

"The army will be for the first time with an ally to whom it has been the lot of the British nation to be opposed in the field for many centuries. The gallantry and high military qualities of the French army are matters of history, and the alliance which has now been formed will, the Commander of the forces trusts, be of long duration, as well as productive of the most important consequences.

"Lord Raglan is aware, from personal communication with the distinguished officer who is appointed to command the French army, Marshal St. Arnaud, and many of the superior officers, that every disposition exists throughout their ranks to cultivate the best understanding with the British army, and to co-operate most warmly with it; and he entertains no doubt that her Majesty's troops are actuated by the same spirit, and that the first ambition of each army will be to acquire the confidence and good opinion of the other."

The Reciprocity Treaty.

The welcome intelligence came to us yesterday by a private telegraphic despatch from the Hon. M. Cameron, at Montreal, that the reciprocity treaty was signed at Washington, and that his Excellency Lord Elgin would be in Montreal to-day. This is good news indeed for Canada. We are not yet informed as to the specific provisions of the treaty, but free trade to a great extent, and the free navigation of the St. Lawrence are doubtless included. These changes can not fail to effect Canada most favorably. Her agricultural lands must immediately rise in value, her commerce will receive a sudden impulse, and her general prosperity will be greatly enhanced. We may now say that the long wished for epoch in the history of Canada has arrived, when her farmers are placed upon an equal footing with the American. It has turned out as we predicted, that Lord Elgin's visit to Washington had reference to the interests of our Province, and had nothing to do with the difficulties between the United States and Spain. The growlers, fault finders, and backbiters may abuse our noble Governor as much as the jealousy and meanness of their natures incline them to, but his honorable, straight-forward and liberal policy, has rendered and will continue to render him the most acceptable and popular Governor Canada has ever had.

If the conditions of the treaty meet our expectations, this year will be a glorious one in the history of Canada. From this hence forth we shall look for a more marked progress than has ever even attended the most thriving of the Western States.

Canada has advantages which are unknown to any of the United States. A large portion of her territory is unrivalled for fertility, her commercial position is the most favorable; but more than this, she enjoys a stability of government unknown to republics. She has no blighting institutions like that of slavery to breed sectional jealousy and endanger her internal peace. A remarkably salubrious climate, unbounded agricultural and commercial resources. Her mineral productions and her invaluable extensive forests, all not only inspire the hope, but render it certain of realization, that Canada must advance to the front rank of wealth and prosperity, with giant strides. Our own beautiful city cannot fail too, to reap the first fruits of the new prosperity which is just dawning upon us. Her commerce will, we opine, fast gain upon that of any other city in the country, and we hope it will not be many years before she will be, what she amply possesses the advantages of becoming, the acknowledged commercial metropolis of Canada.—Journal and Express.

The Bench of Canada West.

"Referring to the unparalleled and most atrocious outrage recently perpetrated by that monster seditionist, Mondelet, the Kingston Herald thus writes: 'Thank God no judge dare make use of such language on the Upper Canada bench!' We do not like the word dare, in the above cited paragraph. It almost conveys the impression that our ermined administrators of justice were capable of insulting their queen, if they had the courage to do so! Rather would we say, thank God no judge would, or could, be guilty of the hitherto unknown crime of Mondeletism. Nothing has yet transpired touching the punishment with which this culprit is to be visited. Deep will be the insult to our Provinces, if it be not signal as his transgressions.—Hamilton Gazette.

Orangemen, Catholics and Clergy Reserves.

The Union which the High Church party, and the Roman Catholic Priests are endeavoring to bring about, is foul and unnatural. It is truly astonishing that the common sense of the members of each of these churches should be tendered such an insult. Behold the Patriot, the Hamilton Gazette, the Streetsville Review, and other outrageous Orange organs, who have a most cordial hatred o Catholics, and their Religion, its institutions, and Sacraments, are the very organs that are endeavouring to bring this union about. Can any sensible man for an instant believe, that there is any real cordiality of feeling entertained by Orangemen towards Catholics; does not the history of Orangeism from its institution, its practice, and its spirit from the very first, to this day, contradict it? Not on'y contradict it, but shew, that it can never exist. Fire and water can as soon, and as permanently continue united as Catholics, and Orangmen; for they are as justly antagonistic in their natures.

A consideration of these circumstances, ought to shew every enquiring Catholic mind the perfect truth of what we assert, and to convince them that their ever open and avowed antagonists must have some very strong purpose to subserve, ere they would even cease hostility never heretofore allowed to rest—let alone, seek a union of interests in what these Orange organs avow to be a common cause. Orangemen and their abettors promoting the advancement and advantage of the Catholic religion!!

Believe that? Who will? We counsel Catholics to set the inside of their heads in operation, and to think. Because after they have hoisted Orangemen, together with high Churchmen, into wealth and power, we believe they will then have prepared the way and a means, and necessity on their own parts, for very active operations both in and outside of their craniums. For they will, in common parlance, have furnished the stick wherewith to break their own heads. No sooner will they have strengthened by their aid, their ever avowed enemies, but at present seeming allies, than those very double-tongued dissemblers will rush on them with restrained but original hatred, and accumulated and self-aided power to put down and crush them, their Church and Religion.—We ask Catholics, why do Orangemen, and High-Churchmen, seek a union with, and assistance from Catholics? We ask them to examine well into the reason why. And we have no hesitation in saying, we doubt if they will, after examination, believe that the reason or cause, if accomplished by their assistance, to the full desires of Churchmen and Orangemen, will prove hereafter to be a source of advantage to them or their Church. View the clergy reserve question well, and in all its bearings, religious and political, and then decide. It can do you, your children, and your church, no harm to do so, before you adopt the advice of Orange, simulated friendship, and real dictation.—Journal & Express.

OPENING OF PARLIAMENT.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH.

QUEBEC, June 13, 1854.

On Wednesday, at 3 o'clock, the Governor General proceeded in state to the Council Chamber in the Parliament Buildings.—The Members of the Legislative Council being assembled, his Excellency opened the the second Session of the 4th Parliament of the Province.

SPEECH.

Hon. Gentlemen of the Council, and Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly:

During the recess, the Province has sustained, I regret to say, serious loss by fire in the destruction of the Houses of Parliament, and of the building which was secured for the temporary occupation of the Legislature. The best arrangements possible have been made for your accommodation. Her Majesty the Queen, having failed in her anxious and protracted endeavors to preserve the blessings of peace, has felt herself called on by regard for an ally—the integrity and independence of whose Empire has been recognized as essential to the peace of Europe,—to take up arms in conjunction with the Emperor of France for the defence of the Sultan. The manifestations of the loyalty and sympathy which have been so general throughout the Province at this conjuncture, I am confident will be heartily responded to by the Legislature. The cordial co-operation, in this war is well calculated to call forth the sympathies of a country peopled by the descendants of those two empires. Having, during my recent visit to England been honoured by the Queen's command, to endeavour to effect the settlement of various important questions bearing upon the interest of the British North American Provinces,—which had been long pending between the Governments of Great Britain and the United States,—I proceeded to Washington where after frank discussion with the authorities of the United States, I was enabled to conclude a treaty which now awaits ratification upon terms, which it is my firm conviction will prove in the highest degree advantageous to the colony generally, as well as to the United States. A measure to give effect to that treaty will be submitted for the United States approbation. I will communicate to you the despatch from the Secretary of State for the Colonies with reference to the addresses to the Queen from the two Houses of the Legislature, on the subject of the constitution of the Legislative Council. I will commend to your consideration the passing of a law for bringing into early operation the Act of last session, which extends the elective franchise, in order that the constitutional expression of opinion may be obtained as speedily as possible, under the system of representation recently established on the various important questions on which legislation is required.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly:

The public accounts for the past year, and the estimates for the present, will be submitted to you without delay, and I rely with confidence on your willingness to make the necessary provisions for the exigencies of Government.

The prosperous condition of the revenue may suggest to you the propriety of making such reduction in the tariff as may be compatible with the security of the public credit, and efficiency in the public service. During my sojourn in England, I was much struck by the proofs which I received from all quarters of the increasing interest of Canadian affairs, and I turst that my acquaintance with the province, derived from long residence within it, may have enabled me to render some service in spreading more widely a knowledge of its resources, and of the feelings of the inhabitants. Although a state of warfare has a necessary tendency to restrict operations, involving large expenditures of capital, I feel confident that the credit of Canada has attained a position in English opinion, which it never before achieved, and that to enable you to retain it, nothing more is required than prudence in your undertakings, and the maintainance of the high character for fidelity to pecuniary engagements, which the Province has at all times borne.—Patriot.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

QUEBEC, June 14.

The House met to-day, and adjourned till Friday, at the request of Mr. Cauchon, who stated he had an amendment to move to the address in answer to the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Hincks gave notice that he would move, on Friday next, for the appointment of a select committee, to prepare a list of members to compose the select standing committees. The Committee to be composed of the Hon. Mr. Hincks, Sir A. McNab, Hon. Mr. Macdonald of Kingston, Hon. Mr. Badgley, Mr. Lemieux, Mr. Caquford, Mr. Turcotte, Mr. Galt, Mr. Christie of Wentworth, and Mr. Patrick.

Mr. Mallock gave notice that on the reception of the required petition for that purpose, he would move for leave to introduce a bill to incorporate the Orange Society of Canada, with the view of enabling it to hold legally, the necessary property for the proper working of that institution.

Mr. Christie gave notice that he would move on Friday, for an address for an adequate force to protect the inhabitants of Gaspe and the fisheries generally from the violence of the crews of vessels visiting those places.

Mr. Tessier gave notice that he would move for an address praying for a statement of the debentures issued under the municipal loan act.

Events at the Bombardment of Odessa.

The following extracts from the letter of an officer of one of the vessels engaged at the bombardment of Odessa, appear in the Dublin Evening Mail, and may still be read with interest:—

"The Vauban, French Steamer, was obliged to leave the scene of action, having been set on fire by a red-hot shot which penetrated the outer planking and rolled down between it and the inner lining, towards the bottom of the vessel. Having burnt its way through the inside, it was soon removed and all put to rights again; but they were rather apprehensive of the ship blowing up, from its proximity to the magazine, which they cleared away directly.

"The loss of life on our side occurred on board the Terrible; a shot which came through the side caused splinters, which killed one man and wounded four others.—

This shot took an extraordinary course. Having passed obliquely through the side, it came in contact with the 'combing' of a hatchway in the centre of the deck, bounded back at an acute angle to the same side, struck a gun, glanced from it into the port and finally went over board. At first most of the enemy's shot and shell fell short; but after a little they got their guns to bear beautifully upon us, and were giving it us thick and warm, when, by steaming astern, we dragged our anchor and spoiled their range. It was a dreadful but glorious sight to see their magazine blow up; such cheering took place from our jolly tars.

"Some of the lookers-on said we fired splendidly; however that may be, we suffered far more than any of the ships engaged, which is attributed to our having been 200 yards closer in. At all events, our position was far more favourable for the direction of the enemy's guns. Our gunner has just told me that we (Terrible) on Saturday fired no less than 572 rounds of shot and shell, besides 51 rockets."

IRELAND.

The works on the Limerick and Foynes Railway have been commenced near Adare.

The Marquis of Waterford was last week entertained at a banquet in Waterford.

The custom duties at Dublin are this week £17,900, against £15,900, giving an increase of a couple of thousand pounds for the present week.

The reduction that has taken place in the Irish military establishment in consequence of the war amounts to about 9000 men.

A company has been formed for the purpose of establishing a line of screw steamers between Belfast and Port Carlisle. The first vessel, of 450 tons, is now in course of construction.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to grant letters patent appointing Joseph Henry Corbett, Esqr., M. D., professor of anatomy and physiology in the Queen's College, Cork.

During the four weeks ending the sixth of May, 9384 hogsheads of porter were exported from Dublin.

The Limerick Reporter says, "It is with dismay we have heard it stated, on credible authority, that a rescript from Rome, calling on the priests of Ireland to abstain altogether from interference in political affairs, may shortly be expected, if it has not already arrived in Dublin."

A return has been printed, by which it is shown that for the year ending the 29th September last, £781,523 8s 10¾d was expended on the relief of the poor in Ireland. The number of persons relieved during the last year, was, in-door, 396,436; out-door, 13,232.

The great demand for sea-weed manure, the high prices it brought, and the great breadth of ground devoted to potato planting, this season, may be inferred from the fact, that it is computed by those who have had the best opportunities of forming an accurate estimate, that the very large sum of £10,000 has been paid for sea-weed this season at the Galway docks alone.

AFRICAN EXPLORATION.—Letters have been received at Stockholm, from M. C. Anderson, who has been sent by the Swedish Government on a scientific mission to the interior of Africa. The letters, which are dated to the 11th November, were written 2° 56 south lattitude, and 20° 55 east longitude, from Paris, which is said to be a spot which no European has yet visited. M. Anderson commenced his journey by the Cape of Good Hope, and he had to encounter great obstacles from the Hottentot and other native tribes, and to sustain terrible privations. He had, however, made discoveries in natural science, which, in his eyes, were a sufficient recompense for all he had endured. When he wrote, he was making preparations to proceed to the great lake called Negain, which is in Central Africa, and still almost entirely unknown to Europeans.

To Correspondents.

We beg of you friends, to write legibly,—to write on one side of the sheet only; to number your pages in their order, and to pay the postage.

Communications come from persons we would be happy to serve, but, the crabbed writing and hieroglyphiggledy character of the arrangement, dispose us to pass them by as a waste of time; which we can no more permit than the rest of the community. We are pleased to have epistolary favors, but they must be so written that the printers can read them, and the public make sense of them. And, once for all, we will not notice any communication on which the postage has not been paid. We have a rule and must keep it.

ANTI-SLAVERY FESTIVAL.

A Festival for the benefit of this paper will be held as announced in the advertisements, in the St. Lawrence Hall, on the 29th instant. The patronage of the citizens of Toronto and vicinity is therefore earnestly and respectfully solicited to this object. The friends of the paper feel no undue delicacy in presenting its claims. Its existence they deem necessary; though were they in doubt on the point, the many favourable opinions already expressed by Canadians, indiscriminately, would reassure them. They have therefore, resorted to this, as a method both honest and honorable in its character, as well as beneficial in its tendency, to assist in its firm establishment. That the festival will be a gathering of no ordinary character will be freely admitted, from the position and character of the speakers, and arrangements generally. The Rev. Dr. Burns, G. Dupont Wells, Esq., and other gentlemen have consented to speak on the occasion.

Tickets, 2s. 6d. each may be had of the members of the Committee of Arrangements—of Messrs. W. H. Edwoods, Elisha Edmunds, G. H. Wright, Church Street, T. F. Cary, 68 King Street East, George Cary, Front Street, and at the door.

The jury on the body of Timothy Sullivan, killed by the late explosion in this city, brought a verdict of manslaughter against Robert Rutley, the person in charge of the engine, but who neglected to take proper precaution against accidents when absent on that occasion.

Wild Cat is said to be prosecuting a war of extermination in Texas, aided by Seminoles and Camanches.

The silver fever is raging in Alabama. In the Lake Superior country, large quantities of silver, it is said, have been found.

Speech of Rev. S. R. Ward.

At the Fifteenth Annual Meeting of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, held in Exeter Hall, London, May 22nd—

The Rev. Dr. Hewlett moved:

"That this meeting, deeply impressed with the conviction that slave-holding is 'a sin and a crime before God,' therefore considers it to be of the first importance, on occasions like the present, emphatically to assert this as the principle on which the cause of universal emancipation is founded; and to declare that the system of Slavery, under what form soever it may exist, is not to be defended or extenuated, but is to be uncompromisingly opposed, and its utter extinction sought by the employment for that object of every moral and pacific means."

The Rev. S. R. Ward, in seconding the resolution, said that when Slavery came to be considered on British soil, a great practical question presented itself to the English people; it came in this shape: What is our duty touching this matter of Slavery? What have Englishmen to do with Slavery? "Do with it," said the West Indian proprietor; "you have done enough already, and too much; you have let our negroes loose upon society, and you have ruined us." Those men might say also: "You gave us twenty millions of pounds sterling, by way of compensation, to be sure, and we did not deserve a tithe of it." What they did say, however, was, that enough and too much had been done by the English in behalf of the slave population of those islands, and they did not desire that anything more whatever should be done in that same direction. We must not always look, however, to interested parties for a solution of the question, What have we to do in the matter? (Hear.) A stern obligation rested upon every man in these realms to do his duty in relation to this subject, no matter whether interested parties approved or disapproved. (Hear, hear.) It was a great practical question, moreover, what have British Christians to do with the matter? Already something had been done for the developement of the resources of the West Indian Islands, but much more remained to be effected in this direction, so as to meet the slaveholder of America side by side in the British and other European markets, compete with him, and drive him out, not only of the market, but, if possible, out of existence as a slaveholder, and make a decent, honest man of him. (Cheers.) It was all very well to say, We will not use slave-grown cotton, sugar and so forth; but little would be done by such a course of conduct, unless the same articles were attempted to be successfully cultivated on a large scale in other regions, and by free labour. This might be done, not only by developing the resources of the West Indies [illegible] but also by sustaining the fugitive slaves in Canada. (Cheers.) With respect to Spain and her slaves, the British Government and people might, doubtless, do much to put an end to the present state of things by a decisive declaration of opinion and feeling on the point at issue. (Hear, hear.) Something had been said by a preceding speaker about the continued adoption of a pacific course in getting rid of the evil; he would say by all means remove the iniquity so if you can; but he must confess that, in a question where liberty was concerned, he could not but feel, and that deeply, that there was after all something worse in this world than war. (Loud Cheers.) One who knew something about the workings of the abominable system, might be allowed to say with Aunt Chloe, that it would be better to have "a clearing-up time," rather than that slavery should continue for ever and ever. (Laughter and cheers.) There might be a difference of opinion, however, on this point; but surely it was quite time for England to say to the Government of Spain, "If you cannot make Cuba keep her Treaties, we can: that's all." (Loud cheers.) But this was not the subject on which he had to speak. It was his duty to allude to a matter which even more intimately concerned Englishmen and especially Members of the Legislature, the treatment of British subjects in the United States, [illegible] connivance, if not the actual consent of the English Government, a most disreputable system had been going on for some thirty years, by which free blacks—the subjects of the British Crown—if they went to America, might be imprisoned, and even sold into perpetual Slavery. (Hear, hear.) It was very easy, of course, to talk of the sins and inconsistencies of our American neighbors; but when the attention of people was directed to similar evils going on among themselves, that was frequently quite another thing. (Hear, hear.) The fact ought, however to be known, and published throughout the realms of England—(hear)—that if black seamen, free-born Englishmen, were driven by stress of weather on to the coast of America, or visited that country in the way of ordinary business, they were liable to be taken immediately and put into the felons' prison, and kept there till the ship in which they came was about to sail; but even then they would not be released until themselves or the captain paid the gaol-fees, which are enormous, six dollars forty-eight cents; and if they were not paid, these British people were sold in the public shambles. (Cries of "Shame.") As many as from thirty to forty persons were detained in this manner every year; and the thing had been going on, he repeated, for the last thirty years, without any decisive attempt being made to put a stop to it. He might refer specially to one circumstance, which spoke for the rest: John Glasgow, a British born subject, married a wife in Liverpool, Lancashire; sometime afterwards he went out from that port as a seaman in an English ship, and when the vessel arrived at Savannah, he was taken and put in prison, and, not being able to pay the fees demanded, he was sold into perpetual slavery. (Shame, shame.) There was no mistake about this matter, for John Brown who was on the platform at the present moment, had worked side by side in the same gang, with John Glasgow, after he had been sold into slavery, and he had only the other day made the declaration on oath before a magistrate of this city. (Hear, hear.) This was the matter on which he had come forward to speak, and he called upon the men and women of England to say whether such an abominable system should be any longer endured? (Loud applause.) The pretext for it was that, if the free blacks were suffered to go at large among their enslaved brethren, they might disseminate the principles of freedom to the injury of the planters and slave dealers; but what did this say for the character of the system which it was attempted by such means to perpetuate? (Hear, hear.) Besides, their being thrown into prison with black felons was quite as likely to produce the same effect. The whole thing, therefore, could not be justly regarded as anything more than a base pretext, in order to serve the vile and selfish designs of the slaveholders. (Hear, hear.)

When the matter was brought forward some time ago, and representations were made by the British Government to the Government of the United States upon the matter, the reply was, that the National Government could not interfere, because it was a mere matter of local police, which the State immediately concerned must settle for itself. But this was all a mere sham for the purpose of evading the question. (Hear, hear.) The local States had no power to treat with a foreign Government on any matter whatever; but, could any one doubt for a moment, after what had taken place in Austria, and the affair of the Black Warrior, that, if a supposed wrong was done to the people or property of a single State, the General Government would hesitate to take up the matter and demand redress? As a matter of fact, cases had occurred again and again in which the Federal Government had demanded of the British Government compensation for slaves who escaped on board British vessels; and this was exactly the point in hand, and which, to the shame of England be it spoken, they had not asked in vain. (Hear, hear.) The attention of the British Government had been again and again directed to the subject, and the whole thing ought long since to have been settled, and would have been if the authorities in this country had not been most culpably negligent of their duty. (Hear, hear.) The question was raised in 1848, and the answer which the friends of the free negro got was this, that such regulations being known to exist, British subjects ought to avoid their infraction. (Hisses.) But the matter had been revived again, and a correspondence had taken place between the Secretaries for Foreign Affairs, but nothing had come of it; the negroes were simply turned over to the tender mercies of the slave-holding States. The British Government could go forth to assist the Turks against the Russians, the weak against the strong; the British lion could show his teeth and his claws on behalf of the Turk; but when the wrongs of the British negro demanded redress, that same lion became a very harmless creature, and suddenly became destitute of every particle of power, and without tooth or claw. (Hear, hear.) Was it not a disgrace to the the British nation, that any of its subjects should be thus treated? (Cheers.) The words of the old song were common enough in the mouths of the people,—

"Britons never will be slaves;"

but that seemed to depend very much upon where you catch them. (Laughter and cheers.) It depended upon their colour. (Hear, hear.) British subjects were being made slaves by the States of America to the number of from thirty to forty every year, and the Government and people of England find it quite convenient to allow the practice to go on. ["Shame, shame."] Why had there been no active endeavour to abolish the practice? [Hear, hear.] Lest trade should suffer. If any negotiation should be opened, "trade will suffer," "commerce will be injured; we buy a large amount of cotton from the Slave-holding States, and, if we make any stir about the enslavement of British negroes, this cotton trade will suffer!" [Hisses.] Aye, indeed, trade will be interrupted! What was the negro made for but to be oppressed and trodden under foot, that trade may go on and white men make fortunes? Trade must not suffer, but the negro may. Lombard-street and the Exchange must experience no interruption to their commerce. John Glasgow, a British subject, may be stolen from a British ship, and be sold into slavery, never to see his wife and children at Liverpool any more, lest there should be any interruption to the sale of cotton. [Hisses, and cries of "Shame."] But had not the buyers of cotton, the people of England, a right to a voice in this matter also? [Cheers.] Most surely they had a right, and it was their bounden duty to stand up for the liberty of their fellow-citizens. [Cheers.] But he contended that trade would not have suffered, the American cotton-grower was far too selfish for that to have been the result of a just demand on the part of the British Government. When rightly looked at, it would appear, he was sorry to believe, that there is quite as much discredit attaching to the British as to the American Government. [Hear, hear.] The Resolution said that it was immoral to hold slaves; then it must be immoral to make slaves of British subjects, and equally immoral not to protest against the enormity, and seek to destroy it. [Cheers.] He did not ask the people of England nor the Government to pity these poor negroes; he was too proud to ask pity either for himself or his persecuted brethren from any man.—There were many people more disposed to pity and weep than to do their duty; but what he did ask was justice—common justice, simple justice, even-handed justice, and that was all. [Loud applause.] This was the last time which he expected to have the pleasure of addressing a meeting in Exeter-hall; and while expressing his thankfulness to the noble Chairman and to the Christian people of England for the kindness and generosity which he had experienced at their hands, he besought them by every holy consideration, and in the name of justice, humanity, and God, to demand that the Government shall see to it that not another subject of the British Crown be made a slave for no other crime than the colour of his skin. [Loud cheers.]—British Banner.

Deception Exposed.

The Anti-Slavery Reporter for May shows no favor to impostors, as will be seen by the subjoined correspondence between Reuben Nixon, an impostor, now "caged," and the Editor. Pity that America cannot produce one equally determined to expose deception. We know several who can cry and lie, and pray and cheat all at once, and whose begging deception has been suffered to continue for years, though well known. *

LEWES PRISON, April 12, 1854.

DEAR FRIEND—I take this opportunity of writing to you in my unhappy state. I feel that it has been a good thing for me I have been placed in the situation I am now in; although I fail very fast in bodily strength, I feel strong in mind. You remember that afternoon I had some conversation with you. Oh, had I been as willing to confess at that time to my God as I was to you, I feel I had not been here now; but I trust it is not too late. Since I have been confined, I have employed almost all my time in reading my Bible. I find myself condemned in most every page. Still I find some promises that encourage me in the eighteenth chapter Ezekiel, 27th and 28th verse: "Again, when the wicked man turneth away from all his wickedness that he hath committed, and doth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive; because he considereth and turneth away from all his transgressions that he hath committed, he shall surely live, he shall not die." I feel as though that is meant for me.

I don't send you this note, thinking that I am any more deserving of your mercy and kindness, and only hope you will look at my behaviour in future, if God spare my life, and I enjoy my liberty once more. Since I have been here, I have been treated very kindly by all officers. I have not received a cross word from any quarter. The chaplain visits my cell occasionally, but I feel so guilty—I hardly have the courage to talk and hear.

I hope you have said nothing of my case at Offord Darcey—the trouble now that I have given them must be enough, without any more—if you have, it cannot be helped. My mind is made up what I shall do when I get out, if God is willing. I dare not promise you any more what I am going to do, for I have broken my promise so often, only, by the help of my God, I shall endeavour to live an honest life while I have to live. I hope I may hear that you and your family are well. I should like much to hear from you. I am only allowed to write once, and receive one letter. If I live my time out, I shall write immediately and let you know where I am going. Oh, how long the time appears, I almost count the moments as they pass; but I deserve to have twice as long. I pray to God to have mercy on me, to forgive me for my past life, and make me a better man. Please write to me.

I am, your unhappy prisoner,

REUBEN NICKSON.

Mr. Chamerovzow, Secretary Anti-Slavery Society, 27 New Broad street, London.

27 NEW BROAD ST., April 17, 1854.

REUBEN NIXON—I have read the letter which you have dictated. It contains sentiments which I might believe were the sincere expression of a penitent heart, had I not experienced the mournful truth that you are a great adept in the art of deception. You will, therefore, not feel astonished that I should read them without emotion, and that I should altogether doubt their sincerity. Had you been honestly desirous of reforming, I afforded you every opportunity a penitent might wish for or hope to obtain of becoming a useful member of society. But you went systematically to work to deceive me and others; and, in the discharge of a public duty, as well as to protect the benevolent from future impositions, but especially on behalf of the unhappy victims of slavery, whose sufferings you have made a market of, and whom you have so deeply injured, I had no alternative but to follow and punish you. It is not less my duty to inform you that when you leave your present solitude I shall take measures to let the world know you are again at large, and to prevent your obtaining a living by dishonest means, like those which have made you a misdemeanant in this country, and a criminal in your own. I am not at all favourably impressed by your fear, lest I should have made known your case to the good people of Offord Darcey. They were the first whom I informed, and your case has been published throughout the country. Further than this, I am taking means to get it inserted in every newspaper of the United Kingdom. I told you I would not be trifled with, I begged of you not to deceive me, I warned you of the consequence if you did—I will keep my word. Your quotations of the Bible strike me now, as your ready tears did when I ascertained that you could shed them easily on any occasion. I am disposed to consider both equally hypocritical. If they are not, I shall rejoice that your imprisonment has been the means of awakening in your mind the religious feelings you have so shamefully and impiously simulated in the pulpits you have desecrated by your presence in them, when you had deception at your heart's core, and falsehood on your lips. I cannot forget that you dictated letters equally penitent to the friends in Belfast, whom you so cruelly deceived and robbed, and at a time when you were positively concocting further wickedness. Whether you are or are not guilty of the heartless robbery committed on that colored man, who shared his lodging with you, will probably be determined hereafter. But your past course has been such as to warrant me in believing you to be guilty. I send you an Anti-Slavery Reporter containing a statement concerning you. I hope it may produce on your mind the impression that you cannot hope to get a living in this country. At the time of your release it will again be extensively circulated.

Now, I wish you distinctly to understand that I have no desire to inflict on you unnecessary pain. But it is proper you should also fully understand the position in which you have placed yourself, and consider well what you should do when you leave prison. I would be a friend to you if I could, but before you can hope to secure me as such, or I can believe you are the reformed man you say you are, you must afford me some proof more satisfactory and tangible than mere professions of repentance, backed by quotations from Scripture.

I will just remind you that you left the dock with a lie in your mouth, for you there said you had been a slave, though you know well you told me the contrary in the most solemn manner, and when you could have no motive for deceiving me in this respect.

L. A. CHAMEROVZOW.

Destructive Fires.

Several destructive fires have occurred during the present week. We clip from the Globe, the particulars of the two which took place on Wednesday and Thursday evenings respectively:

On Wednesday night, about half past two o'clock, a.m., a fire broke out in a new building which was in course of erection by Mr. Joshua Crawford, adjoining his bakery, and almost in the centre of the block, bounded by Stanley Street on the North, Adelaide Street on the South, Church Street on the East, and Victoria Street on the West. From this centre the fire diverged on all sides amongst the small wooden houses which burned away like tinder. Fortunately, however, there was scarcely a breeze of wind, or the whole block must have been consumed, and perhaps the block extending from St. Andrews Church to King Street. We learn that the Church did catch, owing to some flakes having fallen on it, but being seen in time, it was soon extinguished. Nineteen houses, chiefly on Stanley Street, were burned down, and some five or six wrecked, besides the injury received by many in clearing them of their contents.—Thirty families were thereby rendered houseless, amongst these were—Michael Gannon, printer, loss about $300, John Hurley, James Culmin, Patrick Donoghue, Michael Cochrane, Eliza Gibney, — McNulty, Martin Hoolaghan, James Murphy, John Murray, Michael McConoghy, Charles Clancy, —. Sherwood. There were several parties who had rooms, whose names we could not ascertain. Seventeen of the houses belonged to Mr. Joshua Crawford, baker, whose loss is estimated at £1,700, exclusive of 60 bbls. of flour destroyed in his bakery. He had no insurance. Three of the houses were owned by Mr. Richardson, and insured in the Western Insurance Company.

The firemen were on the spot, considering that they had been only an hour or two in bed when the fire occurred, having met the Rochester firemen as they landed from the boat about midnight.

Unhappily one of the firemen, Robert Kirk, fell from the roof of one of the buildings, and was borne to his home in an unconscious state.

On Thursday night a most destructive fire broke out at nine o'clock in some out buildings on the east side of Church street. The flame rapidly communicated with the fine row of brick buildings south of Shuter street, commencing at the residence of Mr. Thomas Henning, and extending itself southward to those of Mr. R. Lewis, Mrs. M'Clure, Mr. Buchan, Mr. Garth, &c. The Fire Companies were promptly on the ground, but the greatest difficulty was experienced in finding a supply of water to work the engines, there being little or none in the pipes. Four houses, (owned by Mr. Preston,) were completely gutted, and two others injured almost as seriously. Most of the furniture was saved.

Correspondence.

To the Provincial Freeman:

TORONTO, June 15th, 1854.

DEAR FREEMAN,—I was not a little surprised to see in your issue of the 10th inst. what I conceive to be a most unprovoked and malevolent onset upon me, by T. Henning, Esq., Cor. Sec. of the Canada A. S. Society. After criticising an article which appeared in the Freeman, headed "A Bazaar in Toronto for Frederick Douglass' Paper," the gentleman winds up with the following sentence: "I cannot conclude without expressing my regret that the writer of the article alluded to, who, if I am not mistaken, is a member of the committee of the A. S. Society of Canada, should have indulged in such depreciatory remarks respecting those whom he knows to be friendly to the cause he has at heart, or have evidenced anything like feelings of envy at the success of a brother—such a spirit is not one likely to conciliate, or to give that respect and confidence to which the colored man is equally entitled to with his white brother, and which among Britons he will ever ultimately gain when he is really worthy of them." 1. We are accused of being the author of the bazaar article. 2. We are accused of a lack of appreciation, (ingratitude, I suppose). 3. We are accused of having feelings of envy at the success of Mr. Douglass. Now I boldly assert that Mr. Henning has not, nor never had the slightest reasons or grounds for even suspecting me of being guilty of either of these charges, and why he should select me as the target upon which to waste his ammunition, or why he should desire to hinder or injure the success of a brother is indeed exceedingly strange. Permit me to ask you in all seriousness, Mr. H., how you could allow yourself, after reading the article of which you complain, with all your sagacity, to make such a blunder? The writer of that article says, "that we have been questioned about the Canada Anti-Slavery Society, but being ignorant of its operations we were unable to answer." Does Mr. Henning suppose that a member of the committee is capable of making such an assertion; if so he must either question our judgment or doubt our veracity. This is rating us pretty low, sir. Don't let us be too solicitious about popular favors, whether from Britons, Americans, or any other class. I am here for a specific purpose, and have a specific work to do, and feel quite satisfied with my humble position, too much so in fact to "envy the success" of any man be he black or white Briton, or what not. This same charge or one similar to it was made against Douglass by the Garrisonians last year; I suppose, however, that we are all doomed to pass through the same ordeal, so willingly, or unwillingly, I find myself fast treading in the footsteps of some of my illustrious cotemporaries with Mr. Henning at my back. I regret exceedingly, sir, that you should allow your feelings and passion to cause you to make such a desperate thrust at an innocent man, who knew no more about the bazaar article than you did until after you had received your paper. However, I hope to survive the blow. I hurl the charges back from whence they came, and, "for the sake of friends at a distance," demand an honorable retraction.

J. B. SMITH.

To the Provincial Freeman:

AMHERSTBURG, C. W., May 8th, 1854.

The undersigned having noticed in your issue of the —— of April, a communication from a correspondent referring to our much esteemed fellow-townsman, Levi Foster, Esq., in connection with the Provincial Council, whereby he was charged with a misappropriation of the funds collected to defray the expenses of our delegates elect, to the Council meeting at London, held March 8th, 1854, by using it exclusively to defray his own expenses thither; deem it our duty to assure the public, through the same medium, that this is altogether a mis-statement in the communication referred to, and proceed to correct the same.

In the first place, Mr. Foster, though the Treasurer of the funds collected, was not a delegate elect.

Secondly, although he was in London at the sitting of the Convention, and whilst there, was designated by the Council to fill a vacancy occasioned by the resignation of James Morton, Esq., of Amherstburg, a delegate elect, which resignation was made known to the council. Yet he had proceeded to London entirely on private business, leaving the money for the delegates elect at his residence in Amherstburg, with instructions for it to be handed over when called for by the proper persons; which, by the way, neither of the delegates elect thought proper to do.

Thirdly, after Mr. Foster had returned from London, and a public meeting was held to report the proceedings of the council, he notified all of the donors to the fund he had in charge, that he was then ready and willing to return to each their respective amounts contributed, as it had not been used by their delegates as intended. But the Meeting agreed by acclamation that the money should be appropriated to him, as he was now a Councillor for Amherstburg and had acted in their behalf most satisfactorily at the first sitting of the Provincial Council.

The publication of the above facts will be a source of great satisfaction to the many friends of Mr. Forster in this vicinity, beside being but a simple act of justice to him in correcting the mis-statement already published.

REMARKS.

The above has been on hand some time; in fact, came when we were away, and so did not get that attention it deserved. It will be observed that our correspondent, "Benjamin," is thought to be at fault by the friends in Amherstburg,—we hope for the credit of our people there, that he is. We do not believe, however, that he would knowingly, mis-represent Mr. Forster, or any other person. We believe, with him, that the Provincial Council was a splendid failure; and it may have been that the absurdity of the affair induced him to give credit to statements made by persons considered trustworthy.

If colored men in Canada would generally support practical measures of known utility, and not seize upon every "bit" of humbug gotten up and offered to them by men in the States, who are literally dying for the want of sensible employment, and from the gnawings of unsatisfied notoriety, the public would not be misled by those, who like our correspondent, wishes well to his people.—"Benjamin" will please be careful to know the "facts" upon which he will write in future.

Summary.

☞ On the 25th ult., the telegraphic line from Chatham to Windsor, opposite this city, was opened, and the first message conveyed over the wires. The line between Chatham and London is about completed. It is in contemplation to have two separate wires on the same poles, one for the exclusive use of the Great Western Railway, the other for the public.—Detroit Free Press.

☞ In the Lemmon slave case at New York, Judge Clerke, of the Supreme Court, has decided that the appellant, Mr. Lemmon, must give security for the costs. This is the appeal which the Legislature of Virginia resolved should be prosecuted at the expense of that State.—Phil. Register.

Mrs. A. T. Swift was recently elected supervisor of the town of Penfield, Ohio. The Constitution allows none but voters to hold office. She could not carry out the will of the people. She has issued an address to her constituents on the subject—Pa. Freeman.

☞ It is said that the Home Government instead of acceding at once to the resolution passed during last session by our Legislative Assembly, with regard to the future election of our Legislative Council, have pledged themselves to introduce a measure into the British Parliament, granting this colony full power to amend its constitution in any manner it may think fit. We think it very questionable whether this was the best way to remove the evil complained of, because of course any constitutional action of our Legislature would seem to require the consent of the venerable body against whose existence it is aimed. However there is a remedy, not unknown to British history, even for this extreme case, and we have no doubt that our government will show themselves equal to the emergency in which this resolution of the British Cabinet may have so unexpectedly placed them. Of all the reforms demanded by the liberal party in Upper Canada, this seems to us the most important. Other evils may be more irritating, but they are comparatively local and symptomatic, they do not generate injustice and weak compromises in our legislation, the abandonment, or what is worse, the mutilation of well digested measures, so much as this, anamoly appears to do, and for instances of which we need only refer to the history of last session.—Berlin Telegraph.

☞ A Canadian named John Contin killed a large bear lately, about 40 miles north of Quebec, which weighed nearly 300 pounds. The hunter and his game, says the Quebec Gazette, were both found dead, and lying a short distance apart, Contin's face and head being lacerated in a shocking manner; his gun also had been smashed to pieces. The beast had received three bullet wounds—two in his flank, and another behind the right shoulder.—Journal & Messenger.

☞ Five hundred ministers held a Convention in Boston during the late proceedings in that place, and after conferring upon the present condition of the country, resolved to take measures for uniting and organizing the religious sentiment of all denominations against Slavery.—Era.

☞ At a recent meeting of the City of London Ragged Schools, Mr. Alderman and Sherrig Wire said, they could tell them, from their experience of the city prisons, that since the establishment of ragged schools, juvenile crime had diminished fifty per cent. This is a great fact, and cannot be too generally known, as a most powerful argument in support of such institutions. —Son of Temperance.

☞ The Frankfort (Ky.,) Commonwealth states that on Monday night, May 22d, three daughters of the Rev. Mr. Perry, Methodist preacher, living at El Dorado, six or seven miles from Harrodsburg, were horribly burned by the explosion of a camphene lamp, and that the whole three are dead, and were buried in the same grave on Wednesday. —Era.

☞ It is reported that the American government have abandoned all their claims against Spain, if the latter will cede her African possessions in Melilla to the United States.

The French consul at San Francisco was arrested on the 6th of May on a charge of violating the neutrality laws U. S. He gave bail in the sum of $10,000. Trouble ahead.

The Colonist advertises for respectable young women to learn the art of Printing.

☞ Upwards of fourteen thousand emigrants have arrived at the port of Quebec since the opening of navigation.—Colonist,

The Russian Sloop of war Dina and others are reported to be in the South Seas, and fears are expressed for the security of Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide, and other towns in Australia and New Zealand.

A colored man, William Shaw, was very dangerously hurt on Friday evening on King St. by a run-away horse. He was hit so violently on the side as to be thrown a distance of thirty feet.—Ibid.

☞ A daring act of incendiarism was attempted yesterday, by the endeavour to burn the premises occupied by Mrs. Arthurs, on Front street in this city. The fire was put into a flour barrel among some straw and other combustible matter in a shed at the rear of the residence of the lady named. Before the flames had gained any headway they were fortunately discovered and extinguished. A young lad named Brien, a servant in Mrs. Arthurs' employment, was taken up on suspicion, but was subsequently discharged. In such a case as this, a reward offered by the Corporation might have good effect.—Colonist.

☞ Upwards of 35,000 bushels of wheat and 70,000 barrels of flour have been shipped from Toronto, at Browne's wharf alone, since the opening of navigation; 1,000 bushels of wheat came in store, on the 1st inst., at the same wharf.

☞ The Detroit Free Press of Friday says.—Over five hundred first class passengers came up on the Great Western Railway train which arrived last evening.

☞ The Paris Star says that wheat now fetches twelve shillings and sixpence York, in Paris. No wool as yet come in—prices are not settled yet.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.

A degree of attention has of late been directed to the condition of the Fugitive Slaves resident in Canada, but comparatively little information concerning them has reached the public. The presence in this country of the Rev. Samuel Ringold Ward, who has been delegated by the Anti Slavery Society of Canada to make the case of these Refugees more generally known, has caused a number of Gentlemen to form a Committee, for the purpose of raising a fund to afford them temporary relief, on their arrival in Canada, from the scene of their bondage

The entire number of Fugitives in Canada may be estimated at from thirty thousand to thirty-five thousand, of whom from three to five thousand have annually escaped since the passing of the Fugitive Slave Law. On their arrival at Toronto, and other places along the Canadian frontier, that is, along a boundary of some seven hundred miles, they are usually destitute of every thing, having generally fled stealthily, and without making much preparation for flight. They undergo numerous privations on their painful and wearisome journey, being in constant peril by the way, not only through the Slave States, but through the Northern, or nominally free. At any point, if overtaken, or discovered, or even suspected, they may be dragged before the Courts, and, upon a most summary process, sent back to endure a bondage of which the ordinary rigours are always increased in the case of Fugitives, to operate as a warning to others. Hence, during their flight, they are in a constant state of suspense, fear, and excitement; and when they reach the Canadian frontier, usually fall into a condition of bodily and mental prostration, which renders them incapable of immediate efforts, and makes them objects of compassionate interest.

Being strangers, destitute of the commonest necessaries, and in some instances, suffering from temporary illness and over fatigue, they require a helping hand. The Anti-Slavery Society of Canada, and a Ladies' Society at Toronto, provide these Refugees with food, clothing, tools, or whatever they require, until they procure employment and can support themselves. This necessarily entails a very considerable expenditure, which these Societies are not in a position to meet to the extent to which their aid is needed.

It is not only an interesting fact, but one which should be emphatically dwelt upon, that the Refugee Fugitives require only temporary assistance. Labour of every kind is in great demand, and the Society being kept duly informed of the parties who are in want of labourers, they seldom fail to procure employment on advantageous terms. In no instance within the last year and a half has the Society been called upon to extend relief for more than six days, except in cases of sickness. The fund sought to be raised is therefore not intended to be set aside to maintain able-bodied men in idleness for an indefinite period, but to enable the Canadian Society to respond to the large claims made upon it, to supply the more immediate and pressing demands of the Fugitives on their arrival, and until they have sufficiently recovered from fatigue to avail themselves of the advantages of abundant employment and food, good wages, cheap land, equal liberty, and impartial laws, and the privileges and rights which are common to other classes of Canadians.

Canada being the nearest of the British Colonies to the United States, (the stronghold of Slavery) it is of no small importance to encourage the improvement and elevation of these negro refugees, because of the influence, direct and reflex, which would thereby be brought to bear upon American Slavery. The black settlers of Canada are nearly all of them fugitives from slavery. Their improvement would be a triumphant rebuke to those who once held them as chattles, and to those who hold that the slave requires to be prepared for freedom; for they would exhibit the spectacle of a people just escaped from the galling yoke competing as free men, successfully and honourably with other labour. Further, as there exist in Canada some of the prejudices against colour, and as the progressive improvement of the coloured population is gradually undermining and destroying this feeling, their improvement affords a practical demonstration, not only of the equal capacity of the negro for self-advancement where he has a proper incentive to labour, but of the unreasonableness of the prejudice against him. Lastly, his social elevation by his own industry and enterprise, is even now triumphantly proving the fitness of the slave for freedom, the righteousness and the practicability of immediate emancipation, (in so far as the slaves themselves are concerned) and the perfect capability of the negro to live and to advance under the same government and upon terms of political and social equality with the Anglo-Saxon raise, or any other of the one great human family.

At a large and respectable meeting held in Freemason's Hall the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the Chair,—after an Address from Rev. S. R. WARD, showing the condition of the Fugitive Slaves in Canada and stating their need of temporary aid immediately upon their arrival in that Colony.—it was proposed by the Rev. C. B GRIBBLE, of St. Paul's East Smithfield, and seconded by the Rev. THOMAS JAMES, Secretary to the Colonial Missionary Society, and adopted:

"That having heard the statement of the Rev. SAMUEL RINGOLD WARD, respecting the destitution of the Fugitive Slaves on thier arrival in Canada after effecting their escape from the United States; and, feeling that under such circumstances they have a claim on our sympathy, and need temporary assistance, this Meeting cordially approves of the object of the mission, and pledges itself to promote it; and that for carrying out of the same the following Gentlemen be the Officers and Committee, with power to add to their number:

Poetry.

Stand for the Right!

Stand for the right, though falsehood rail,
And proud lips coldly sneer;
A poisoned arrow cannot wound
A conscience pure and clear.

Stand for the right, and with clean hands
Exalt the truth on high;
Though it find warm, sympathizing hearts
Among the passers by.

Men who have seen, and thought, and felt,
Yet could not boldly dare
The battle's brunt, but by thy side
Will every danger share.

Stand for the right, proclaim it loud,
Though it find an answering tone
In honest hearts, and thou'lt no more
Be deemed to stand alone.

Out of the Tavern, etc.

Translated from the German.

Out of the tavern I've just stepped to-night;
Sweet! you are caught in a very bad plight.
Right hand and left hand are both out of place;
Sweet, you are drunk, 'tis a very clear case.

Moon, 'tis a very queer figure you cut;
One eye is staring while t'other is shut.
Tipsy, I see; and you are greatly to blame;
Old as you are, 'tis a terrible shame.

Then the street lamps, what a scandalous sight!
None of them soberly standing upright,
Rocking and staggering; why, on my word,
Each of the lamps is drunk as a lord.

All is confusion; now, isn't it odd?
I am the only thing sober abroad.
Sure it were rash with this crew to remain,
Better go into the tavern again.

Agricultural.

AMALGAMATION OF SOILS.

BY H. D. WHITE.

The improvement of soils by amalgamation has now become quite common. Most farmers are not aware of the very decided amelioration which may be effected in this way, at a small expence. There is no soil so perfectly constituted as not to admit of beneficial additions.—The heavy and tenacious clays are so viscid as to require a very large per centum of sand to break its tenacity; but most soils demand but little to increase, very materially, productive powers. Sands, of a light and very porous character, will be greatly benefitted by a small quantity of clay. This results from the intrinsic character of the soil; sand being sterile on account of its want of adhesiveness.—Where the particles are in a state of wide division, there is generally, indeed always, a too free descent, and the perspiration is so rapid and copious as materially to lessen the fertility. Clay tends to agglomerate the particles, and to preserve the gases which are evolved from the substances applied as stimuli to the crops. The question is often propounded: "How much clay is necessary to thoroughly ameliorate a sandy soil?" This question can only be correctly answered by an inspection of its constituents. If it is nearly all silex, or pure sand, the quantity of aluminous matter that will be necessary to change its character from a poor and unproductive, to a rich and energetic medium, may amount to forty per cent., perhaps to fifty. The extreme looseness and utter want of cohesibility which characterize all such soils, requires a very considerable quantity to overcome it, and communicate that degree of tenacity which is always a predominant characteristic of all productive soils. In applying clay, it is better to haul it on in the autumn, or last part of summer, in order that its texture may be broken up and fined down by the pulverulent and disintegrating action of frost. This is an essential point, as clay applied in large and solid masses, though it may in time be reduced to fineness by the conjoint operations of the several elements, will confer no immediate benefit, and may, indeed, for a time, prove detrimental. But in a finely pulverized state, its action is immediate; it not only confers the power of retaining the gaseous compounds evolved by the fermenting substances applied as stimuli to the crops, but enhances its retentive powers as to aqueous particles; so that a soil which has always been dry and a dust, becomes at once moist and fine, with its productive capacity so far increased as so remain fruitful for a long series of years even under excessive cropping with the most emasculating or exhausting crops. Any one who doubts this may easily get rid of his scepticism by applying a small quantity, noting the results. The change in the appearance of the soil will be observed to be no less apparent or remarkable than that produced in its productiveness, and the longer the results are noticed, the less questionable will they appear. In the amelioration of clays, large quantities of sand may be applied without any apprehension of injury; in fact, no quantity that will be likely to be applied will prove otherwise than beneficial, especially if mixed with a quantity of putrescent manure.—Olive Branch.

Strawberry Cultivation.

Those who know anything about the magnificent strawberries and the immense quantity of them raised in a bed thirty feet by forty, for several years past, in the garden formerly owned by me in King Street, may like to know the process by which I cultivate them. I applied about once a week, for three times, commencing when the green leaves first began to start, and making the last application, just before the plants were in full bloom, the following preparation:—Of nitre potash, of glauber salts and sal soda, each one pound; of muriate of ammonia, one quarter of a pound, dissolved in thirty gallons of rain or river water. One third was applied at a time, and when the weather was dry I applied clear soft water between the times of using the preparation—as the growth of the young leaves is so rapid that, unless well supplied with water, the sun will scorch them. I used a common watering-pot, and made the application towards evening. Managed in this way, there is never any necessity of digging over the bed or setting it out anew. Beds of ten years old are not only as good, but better than those two or three years old. But you must be sure and keep the weeds out.—Friends' Review, Philadelphia.

Worthy of Attention---Value of Hen Manure.

In a recent article on poultry we spoke of the very great value of hen manure. We remarked, if werecollect rightly, that the most liberol estimate liable to be formed of it, would fall many times short of its actual value, provided sufficient pains were taken to save and compost it. And this opinion was the result of our own experiments and careful observation.

Mr. Phineas Pratt, of Deep River, Conn., writing to the Country Gentleman says:

"A neighbor manured in the hill four acres of corn with the droppings of thirty hens of one year, and had an excellent crop."

Think of that, farmers! This amount of manure, from the poultry alone, is wasted annually by many of you. Four acres of corn—and an excellent crop—lost every year from the want of a little attention. Take the profits of that quantity of corn for the last twenty years, and the profits of the increase of the subsequent crops, resulting from the application of the hen manure, and from the manure made of the corn fodder, if ted out on the farm—that money at compound interest, commencing twenty years ago, would buy many of your farms, buildings, and all, to-day.

We know that some people hold these seemingly small matters in contempt;—but no farmer who is wise, after having his attention once called to their importance, will neglect them any longer.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Selections.

A Prairie Peculiarity.—A correspondent of the New York Post states that consumption of wood upon the prairies in cold weather in the locomotives is much greater than among the settlements or in the timbered country, and the amount of steam produced much less. A train will leave Detroit with from twenty-five to thirty-five freight cars, and from eighty to one hundred pounds of steam. As it nears Chicago, on the open prairie, the steam will fall gradually to thirty-five or fortyfive pounds; and the engine, leaving half its train, runs with the remainder to Chicago. So, put an iron box stove on the top of one of the cars on the prairie, let the fire burn intensely, and the surface of the stove will not burn the hand laid upon it. It is a problem, the solution of which would make the fortune of an inventor how this very rapid loss of heat can be prevented.

How Canada obtained its Name.—The origin of the world Canada is curious enough. The Spaniards visted that country previous to the French, and made particular search for gold and silver, and finding none, they often said among themselves, 'Acanada,' (there is nothing here). The Indians, who watched closely, learned this sentence and its meaning. The French arrived, and the Indians, (who wanted none of their company, and supposed they were also Spaniards, come on the same errand,) they were anxious to inform them in the Spanish sentence, 'Acanada.' The French who knew as little Spanish as the Indians, supposed this incessantly recurring sound was the name of the country, and gave it the name of 'Canada,' which it has borne ever since.

Another Ninevah Palace.—A letter from Mosul, in the N. Y. Tribune, states that a new palace has been uncovered at Nineveh, which excels in beauty any yet found in Assyria. The letter thus describes the new discovery:—"Huge monsters—compounds of the lion, man, and eagle, guard the entrance. The slabs are in fine preservation, representing the king and his officers, a lion hunt, a war scene, and a victory, a state procession led by eunuchs, the King's chariot being drawn by men, with altars and priests and griffins; in fine, a picture of Assyrian manners and religion, as they were three thousand years ago. The workmanship is most exquisite. The slabs are to adorn the walls of the British Museum."

Negroes in San Francisco.—There are 1,500 negroes in San Francisco, owning property worth $1,000,000. Can they "take care of themselves?"

The World and its Rulers.—There are at present eighty-three empires, monarchies, republics, principalities, duchies, and electorates. There are six emperors, including his sable highness Faustin I. of St. Domingo, sixteen kings, numbering among them Jamaco, King of all the Musquitoes, and also those of Dahomey, and the Sandwich Islands; five queens, including Ranavalona of Madagascar, and Pomare of the Society Islands: eighteen presidents; ten reigning princes; seven grand dukes; ten dukes; one pope; two sultans, of Borneo and Turkey; two governors, of Entre Rios and Corrientes; one viceroy of Egypt; one shah of Persia; one imaun, of Muscat; one ameer, of Cabul; one bey, of Tunis; and lastly, one director of Nicergus.

Change of Color in the Hair.—Dr. Wardrop, an English author, in a treatise on "Diseases of the Heart," relates some cases of the sudden changing of the hair from black to white. A lady who was deeply grieved on receiving the intelligence of a great change in her worldly condition, and who had a very remarkable quantity of dark hair, found, on the following morning, the whole of her hair had become of a silver white. Some striking instances of this kind are narrated by historians. "I was struck," says Madam Campan, "with the astonishing change misfortune had wrought upon Marie Antoinette's features; her whole head of hair had turned almost white, during her transit from Vincennes to Paris." The Duchess of Luxemburg was caught making her escape during the terrors of the French Revolution, and put in prison; the next morning it was observed that her hair had become white. A Spanish officer, distinguised for his bravery, was in the Duke of Alva's camp, and an experiment was made by one of the authorities to test his courage. At midnight the provost marshal accompanied by his guard and a confessor, awoke him from his sleep, and informing him that, by the order of the Viceroy, he was to be immed ately executed, had only a quarter of an hour left to make his peace with Heaven. After he had confessed, he said hat he was prepared for death, but declared his innocence. The Provost Marshal at this moment broke into a fit of laughter, and told him that they merely wanted to try his courage. Placing his hand upon his heart, and with ghastly paleness, he ordered the Provost out of his tent, observing that he had "done him an evil office;" and the next morning, to the wonder of the whole army, the hair of his head, from having been of a deep black color, had become perfectly white.

The Longevity of Women.—There are four hundred and thirty American women over one hundred years of age.

Not Qualified.—A young law student, who wrote a good, clear, round hand, and who was about finishing his studies, one day handed an instrument which he had just written off to his uncle, a dry wag, who had called in to see him and enquire of his progress in his profession.—The uncle took the MS., and after reading a few lines of it, gave it back to his nephew, stating, with an arch smile peculiar to himself,—

"You are not quite a lawyer yet, James."
